A very successful mass-meeting was held in the city of Buffalo on the 27th, 28th and 29th of last January. The First Spiritualist Church of that city extended a cordial invitation and offered the free use of their temple and the Temple Society and Harmony Circle Society, another state auxiliary, together with other Spiritualist workers in that city, joined in making the meeting a grand success, with the result that a new impetus was given the movement there and a nice little balance was realized with which to replenish the state treasury.

Later in the winter an all-day state meeting was held at Niagara Falls at the rooms of the First Spiritual Church which Mrs. Atchison of Buffalo has so faithfully served as pastor for two and a half years and who joined your president and second vice-president in carrying out an interesting programme. While this meeting did not add to the state exchequer, we came away with the feeling that we had helped the cause in that city.

The latter part of October, at the solicitation of our worthy representative on the state board, Mrs. Laura Holt, for the northern part of the state, your state missionary and state president received a most hearty welcome and assisted in holding a two day mass-meeting in the city of Potsdam, N. Y.

The members of that society are all ladies and the enthusiasm with which we were welcomed and the completeness of the arrangements may well be emulated by some of our societies where the management is in the hands of gentlemen. The meeting was a success.

I repeat my recommendations made one year ago, that more rather than less mass-meetings be held the coming year, because I believe they tend to bring out and interest new people in our cause and in our work.

State Days at the Camp.

We were assigned a New York State Day at Freeville camp at the assembly of 1904, and our first vice-president, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, represented our state association on that occasion and will no doubt favor the convention with a report thereon.

Neither our state nor the National Associations were assigned days on the City of Light programme last year, but I am in hopes our state association may be assigned a New York State Day on the programme of this year.

The friends of Human Progress of North Collins invited your president to represent the state association at their second day meeting in September last. Mrs. R. S. Lillie of California, Mr. Manchester, a promising young local speaker, and Mrs. Hardenburgh, a local medium and speaker, and your president took part in the programme, and while the meeting was not largely attended, it was declared a success.

There is indeed a pleasure in meeting with the veterans of a half century of battling for a principle and for truth, and this, the oldest Spiritualist society in this country, has several of those honored veterans among its members.

In my opinion the state days at the camps are advantageous both to the state association and the camp associations, when some representatives of the state board can be present and participate in the exercises, and I recommend that they be continued for the coming year at such camps as we are invited to so visit, provided suitable arrangements can be made.

Children's Lyceums.

This very important but so often sadly neglected feature of our work cannot have too much consideration.

At our last convention, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds was appointed lyceum superintendent for the state and I am certain that the convention made a wise choice and that Mrs. ReRynolds has done all in her power to increase the interest in and to assist and encourage those engaged in lyceum work over the state. In her report she will give the convention full information as to the present statue of lyceum work.

At the last national convention, Bro. John W. Ring of Texas, was again elected National Superintendent of Lyceums, which position he had filled so nobly the preceding year. The Progressive Lyceum published by him under the auspices of the National Association, is a valuable assistant in the lyceum work. In fact I believe it is the only periodical devoted exclusively to the lyceum, that is published in this country.

I hope this convention will devise ways and means for increasing the interest in this branch of our work.

I recommend that the convention set apart a special hour for the consideration of this important question.

Local Societies.

From information at hand I think I can safely say that our societies are generally as prosperous as ever, and on the whole perhaps in a little better condition than they were one year ago. The difficulty in raising funds with which to meet the legitimate society expenditures is an ever present problem. But as we grow in spirituality our pocketbooks will be touched more easily, the cause will mean more to us, and I trust the day is not far distant when this the grandest religion the world has ever known will not want for financial support.

We have not as yet outgrown the frictions and discords that occasionally creep in and disturb the harmony and interfere with the larger success of the work of local societies. Not that Spiritualists are lacking in kindness or have less regard for one another but that personality is more pronounced because of the fact that we each do a little thinking on our own account. But if I observe correctly there is a little improvement from year to year in this direction which augurs well for the future. I would urge upon the local societies the importance of extending their field of labor and study by devoting at least one meeting each week, or semi-monthly, to a conference in which the members should be the workers and participate in discussing given topics or reading short articles bearing on the topic or akin thereto.

Such meetings could take up the work of cultivating mental powers and thought forces, by practical efforts and illustrations of the power of thought applied upon such of your members as may be ill from time to time, and in nemberless other ways that would be legitimate and helpful to all concerned. If thoughts are things, let us learn how to guide them, and make them useful rather than allow them to run at random, and who, more than the Spiritualists, should know how to make proper and legitimate use of thought forces.

Spiritualists should be leaders in all these things, and not allow the new-thought people or Christian Scientists to gather all the ripened fruit which Spiritualism has planted and nourished up to the time of the harvest.

Let us remember that Spiritualism is a broad-gauge religion, and while we cannot nor would not neglect the phenomenal feature, we must march forward and out into the broader fields of spiritual unfoldment, and demonstrate to the world in our every-day lives, as well as in society work that we are worthy of this great trust which the angel world has placed in our keeping.

I believe that in this direction lies the real secret of future success for Spiritualism, and that to neglect to move forward and out into these broadening avenues now opening before us would be a serious mistake.

Settled Speakers.

The settlement of speakers of ability and of high moral character with our societies for a series of months, a year, or even longer periods, seems to be a desirable thing to do, and as a rule where this practice prevails, societies are more successful and more harmonious than where transient engagements only are made. There is an economy in this course in the saving of railroad fares, hotel bills, etc. Nevertheless we must recognize the fact that many societies do not feel strong enough to pay a regularly settled pastor the year round. But I recommend settled pastors wherever societies are in position that such a course is practical.

I trust that this convention may set apart a special hour in which to consider the best methods of carrying on society work in general, including the question of settled speakers.

Registration of Speakers and Mediums.

I fear your board of trustees has been derelict in its duties as relates to the inauguration of a system of registration of speakers and mediums, and I renew my recommendation of one year ago that the incoming board of trustees be instructed to take action thereon along lines then suggested.

Ordination Usages, Etc.

A resolution was adopted at our last convention recommending our ministers holding ordination papers to surrender the same and take new ones from the National Association. But that does not seem to have been the plan adopted by the National Association. Instead of issuing certificates direct, the National issues a certificate of endorsement of the certificates already held from the state association whenever the officers of the state association so recommend.

Several of our ministers have availed themselves of this privilege and have received the National Association's endorsement. There are still ordained ministers in the state who have not taken such action, and I bring the matter before the convention, but without any special recommendation, that action may be taken if thought desirable.

No action was taken by the last National convention toward a revision of the ordination usages and other rules, so that the rules adopted in 1903 and published 1904, still continue in force.

I bring this matter before the convention and would suggest that a special committee be appointed to consider the whole question of ordination, responsive readings, marriage and burial services, with instructions to report either to this or to the next annual convention with such recommendations as may seem desirable.

I have a few copies of the ordination usages and other rituals issued by the National Association in 1904 which I can furnish to those especially interested in them.

Spiritual Literature.

If my memory serves me correctly, a committee of three was at the time of our last convention appointed to take up, under the supervision of the board of trustees, the editing or procuring and distributing of Spiritual Literature.

Whatever may have been done by that committee will undoubtedly be reported by them to this convention, so that the committee may take appropriate action in relation thereto.

The worth of this feature of propaganda is so fully recognized in all departments of reform work that there can be no question as to its utility and I trust that a larger work may be done in this direction the coming year.

Counterfeit Phenomena.

THERE CAN BE NO SUCH THING AS FRAUDULENT MEDIUMSHIP. MEDIUMSHIP IS GENUINE OR IT IS NOT MEDIUMSHIP AT ALL. NEVERTHELESS THERE ARE PERSONS WHO POSE AS MEDIUMS WHO ATTEMPT TO IMITATE GENUINE MANIFESTATIONS FOR FILTHY LUCRE. THEY DON THE LIVERY OF HEAVEN IN WHICH TO SERVE THE DEVIL. THAT THIS INIQUITOUS PRACTICE HAS GREATLY RETARDED THE PROGRESS OF OUR MOVEMENT IS UNQUESTIONABLY TRUE.

WE MAY DIFFER IN OUR OPINIONS AS TO THE BEST METHODS FOR DEALING WITH THIS QUESTION, BUT THERE IS NO GAINSAYING THE FACT THAT BROTHER FRANCIS OF THE PROGRESSIVE THNKER HAS DONE YEOMAN SERVICE TO SPIRITUALISM BY HIS UNRELENTING WARFARE AGAINST, AND EXPOSURES OF PRETENSE AND DECEPTION UNDER, THE NAME OF MEDIUMSHIP.

Mediumship is one of God's richest blessings to the children of earth and our state association will ever be ready to encourage and protect mediums in their honest endeavor as message bearers from the angel world.

I cannot help but feel that a proper system of registration of speakers and mediums could be made to protect and assist local societies in avoiding some of the painful experiences which they sometimes have because of lack of proper knowledge concerning those whom they engage.

What a pity that so grand and important a work should be thus retarded and injured by unscrupulous persons. But since it is so, it seems incumbent upon all honest mediums and true Spiritualists that they do all in their power to neutralize these unfavorable influences by that nobility of character and honest, conscientious effort which commands the respect of all good people.

State Legislation.

The question of State Legislation abridging the legitimate rights and privileges of Spiritualists in New York state is one over which your state officers should ever keep close scrutiny.

I did not learn that any attempt was made by our state legislature to enact laws trenching upon the rights of our people since the last annual convention, and it would seem that the successful efforts of your state officers four years ago to defeat what seemed to be a concerted movement to encumber our state statutes with that shameful kind of law-making, is still fresh in the memory of the officers of medical associations and is still a source of protection to our people.

The fact that we have a state organization to look after the just rights of mediums and healers is undoubtedly a bulwark of defense which is bearing its fruits.

In Conclusion.

In reviewing this year's work I feel that with all the drawbacks there is more of encouragement than of discouragement.

The public press has never treated our cause more fairly, than it is now doing. There never was so wide a knowledge of Spiritualism and its attending phenomena as there is today. And I am glad to be able to say that our speakers and mediums who are working under the recognition of our state organization, are accorded more cordial recognition and respectful consideration by the clergy and workers in other religious movements than they ever were before.

All these things indicate that Spiritualism is growing in influence with people outside of our own ranks.

Dear fellow-workers, the time is ripe for action, and it is now up to the Spiritualists themselves to demonstrate that they are large enough, broad enough, and spiritually-minded enough to take advantage of the opportunities that are now opening before us, and make this movement the power for good and for the uplift of our fellowmen which those who are faithfully watching from the spirit world would have it.

H. W. RICHARDSON,
President.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, May 25, Mrs. Orrilla B. Hatch at her home, 700 E. Market street, Elmira, N. Y. Rev. Annis Ford Eastman spoke feelingly of the beautiful and exemplary life well fitted to join the loved ones gone before, she having been one of the oldest Spiritualists in the city.

Passed to the higher life May 27, 1905, from Detroit, Mich., Mabel E. Goucher, aged 16 years, the idol of her parents, loved and respected by all who knew her. The spiritual address was in keeping with her last words to her pastor, "I am not afraid to die." Services conducted by Nellie S. Baade, Detroit, Mich.

Passed to spirit life on May 24, at her home in Council Buffs, Iowa, Elizabeth Wild, the beloved wife of Mr. James Wild, at the age of 84 years. She was born in England in 1821, and married in March, 1845. She leaves her husband, six children, nineteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. She was a good, noble woman, and a devout Spiritualist for about twenty years. Funeral services by the writer. C. O. KEMPSTER.

Wilbur Stinson, aged 25 years, passed to spirit life, April 6, from his home, 332 Michigan avenue, Toledo, Ohio, leaving a loving father, mother and three brothers to mourn their loss. His father having gone to California to prepare a home for the one who never grieved him, made it doubly sad. D. A. Herrick officiated. Mrs. Herrick assisted with songs. Cremation at Detroit, Mich. Being life-long Spiritualists, they are thus comforted. COR.

Hugh C. White passed to spirit life at the U. B. A. Hospital, Grand Rapids, Mich., on May 25, aged about 47 years. He leaves a loving wife to mourn her earthly loss, but comforted with the knowledge Spiritualism gives. During a long illness he was conscious of the presence of spirit friends daily, and was anxious for his suffering to cease. He had a host of friends, and was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. An address by D. A. Herrick, closing remarks by Dr. W. O. Knowles, and beautiful singing by Mrs. R. Nirrell was given in the home May 27. Interment at Dowagiac, Mich., conducted by D. A. Herrick and Modern Woodmen. COR.

The Ohio Convention.

Showing Great Interest and Progress in the Cause in That State.

The eighth annual convention of the Ohio Spiritualists Association convened at Ashtabula, Ohio, May 26, 27 and 28, 1905.

The opening features of the convention was a reception of officers, delegates and visitors held in G. A. R. Hall, Thursday evening, May 25, the hall being beautiful decorated with flags and bunting, all kinds of flowers, the sunflower predominant. The president of the Psychic Research Society of Ashtabula, Brother John G. Wallace, introduced Mrs. J. G. Wallace to deliver the address of welcome, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, President O. S. A., responding. Brief addresses were held by Mrs. E. Schauss, Toledo; A. E. Baird, Elyria; Dr. C. W. Haines, Bedford. Mrs. A. H. Talcott, assisted by choir of children, furnished the vocal and musical program. All present were regaled with ice cream and cake.

First Day, May 26,

After calling the convention to order, President Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, greeted the delegates and visitors and bade them welcome.

The following then gave short talks: Rev. Laura G. Fixen, Chicago, Ill.; Rev. C. W. Haines, Bedford, O.; Rev. Fred D. Dunakin, Cecil, O.; Rev. Harry E. Boerstler, Columbus, O.; Rev. Hattie G. Webster, Columbus, O.; Mr. Thomas D. Bellis, Cleveland, O.; Rev. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, O.; Mrs. H. A. Ebertshausen, Sandusky, O.; Mr. Robert Alexander, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Mrs. Carrie M. Bartholomew, Geneva, O., and others.

All committees were appointed by the president. On rules, O. B. Clark, F. D. Dunakin; on credentials, Anna E. Baird, Fred Schauss and Anna Ward; on resolutions, I. W. Pope, Mrs. Bonney and Mrs. March; president's report, Mrs. Bartholomew, Mrs. Gay and Mrs. Blair; secretary's report, Mr. Methaffy, Mrs. Ebertshausen and Mrs. Webster; treasurer's report, Mr. Munsell, Mr. Boerstler and Mrs. Reed.

Controversy arose on how to vote the delegates, as it was found that the state constitution came in conflict with the National constitution, the arguments which followed were entered into with a harmonious feeling, lengthy, but instructive to all; time for adjournment came without an agreement having been reached.

Saturday morning convention called to order by the president Carrie Firth Curran.

Music by the choir.

Invocation by Mrs. Schauss.

Letter from M. T. Longley, greeting the convention was read and well received by the delegates.

The matter of settling the question of what rule should be followed in the voting was very easily arranged when it came to the point of voting, and it was agreed that each society represented should have a vote for every member, and the total number of votes found to be thus represented was 441.

After Brother Warne, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen and others expressed their views, Brother Warne stated this question is the greatest difficulty confronting state associations toward the National as the laws in some states differ from others, and we must try and get our constitution and by-laws changed to be uniform all over the country.

Secretary's report read, ordered filed.

Treasurer's report read, ordered filed.

The committee on treasurer's report find the amount reported by the finance committee last season was $296.24; the income for the year raised the amount to $457.21. Expenses for the fiscal year including convention $165.23, leaving a balance after all expenses being paid, $324.83, making a gain of $28.50 over report of last year.

Missionary report, Anna E. Baird, Elizabeth Schauss. The report was ordered filed. A rising vote of thanks tendered them, which was responded to by Mrs. Schauss and Mrs. Baird.

Report of committee on rules:

The business session of this convention shall be called to order by the president; afternoon session shall open at 2:30 in the afternoon and close at 5 o'clock. The morning session shall open at 10 o'clock and close at 12 o'clock, and follow the order of business as per program.

This convention shall be governed by our constitution, by-laws, and by Roberts' Rules of Order where not provided for by our own laws.

O. B. CLARK,
ELIZABETH SCHAUSS,
F. D. DUNAKIN,
Committee.

New charters were granted Ladies' Aid of the Helping Hand, Elyria, O.; White Key Spiritual Society, Martin's Ferry; Meta Psychic Ladies' Aid Society, Wellington.

Resolved that this convention of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association in convention assembled extend to the worthy president of the N. S. A., Harrison D. Barrett and his esteemed wife, our sincere sympathy in the hour of their affliction. That this resolution be spread upon the minutes and a copy be sent to Brother Barrett under seal.

Resolved, we extend the sympathy and consolation of the State Association of Spiritualists of Ohio assembled, to the widow of our ex-president, Bro. Thos Black, of this association, who passed to the higher life in April last, a copy of this be sent to the widow, under seal.

Resolution: To the president and members of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Greeting: Your committee upon resolutions would respectfully submit the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, the O. S. S. A. have met in convention for the transaction of the business of the state association of the various auxiliary societies of the state, and for the equal and just treatment of all its members which we deem to be represented, one vote only by each society of the state which forms this body or association.

Whereas, we deem each society is fully represented by its chosen delegate and under the general rules of such bodies each delegate only represents its society as one, the same as our county representatives represent the people of the county in state legislation by one vote. Also the same as our district congressmen represent a district of the state by one vote in the halls of congress. We will follow this illustration a little farther for the purpose of showing this convention our conclusions after a more careful thought growing out of the present discussion of yesterday, and would recommend the same kind of unselfish and pleasing discussion upon all question of to-day. You will quickly see that all county or district representatives are based upon the population of the county or district. This is well known by you all and we would suggest that a committee be appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws of the O. S. S. A., with the view of basing all representation upon the number of constituents in each society; as an example one society having twenty members is entitled to one delegate, and for each twenty members or the major part thereof shall be entitled to an additional delegate in the convention.

That the decision of the question of votes be left to delegates based upon the paying membership of the local societies. Upon this question we would say we do not deem this a stock company voting upon the cash paid in by the stockholders and entitled to a vote for each share of stock. But the members of the various societies send a delegate to represent that society as a society and as one body. Therefore we offer the following amendment to Bro. Boerstler's motion:

Resolved, That each delegate present representing the several societies shall be allowed only one vote upon any and all questions before this convention.

Resolved, That this convention assembled extend to the Psychic Research Society, the mayor of the city, and the cities of Ashtabula and vicinity our sincere thanks for their kind reception and hospitality during the session.

Resolved, We sincerely appreciate the high compliment paid this association by the widow and family of former Mayor Jones of Toledo, and that the communication be placed on file.

Resolved, That the honor conferred upon this Ohio Spiritualists Association assembled, by the presence of honored brother Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president, and the vice-president of the Illinois State Association of Spiritualists, we tender to them an honorary membership to the Ohio Spiritualists Association, and their names to be placed upon the records of this association.

Resolved, That the name of our worthy sister, Mrs. Dr. Alexander Caird, of Boston, Mass., be added to the roll of the O. S. A.

After the reading of the resolution a committee was appointed to revise the Constitution: I. W. Pope, chairman; Dr. C. W. Haines, Mrs. F. Bonney.

All bills not yet paid belonging to the expense of this convention ordered paid.

Communication from Mrs. Jones and family, also from Percy Jones, of Toledo, read and ordered placed on file.

Report of president read.

Motion made by Mrs. Reed, seconded by O. B. Clark to use $100 for Medium Pension Fund, and $50 for Missionary Fund as recommended, was carried.

Minutes of previous convention read and approved.

Here Mrs. Anna E. Baird displayed the quilt which Mrs. Skogland of Wellington, is making, expressing the hope that the delegates take tickets at 10 cents each.

This convention accepted the invitation of Dr. C. W. Haines to hold the ninth annual convention at Cleveland, May, 1906.

There being no further business, the election of officers being in order, resulted: President, Fred D. Dunakin, Cecil, O.; first vice-president, Harry E. Boerstler, Columbus, O.; second vice-president, Dr. Chas. W. Haines, Bedford, O.; secretary, Carl A. Sollinger, Cleveland, O.; corresponding secretary, Carrie M. Bartholomew, Geneva, O.; treasurer, Carrie Firth Curran, Toledo, O. Trustees: Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, Toledo, O.; Mr. Thos D. Bellis, Cleveland, O.; Mrs. Hattie G. Webster, Columbus, O.; Mr. O. B. Clark, Ashtabula, O.

REPORT FROM MRS. SCHAUSS.

To the officers and members of the Ohio Spiritualists Association, in convention assembled at Ashtabula, Ohio—Greetings: The report of missionary work done during the year can scarcely be summed up in words. The extent to which the influence of the truth for which we live has gone out is immeasurable. The interest manifested by the people at large cannot be overestimated. During the year I have held 45 public meetings through the state of Ohio—in Defiance, Clyde, Sandusky, Cleveland, Ashtabula, Rock Creek and Conneaut.

Many parlor meetings were held that resulted in much good to all concerned. I would here recommend the holding of parlor meetings throughout the state whenever we can get the use of a room and a few people to listen to us, as they are the means of instruction to many who would not for various reasons come to our public meetings. The Children's Progressive Lyceum and Thought Exchange deserve more than passing mention, and I would here recommend to this convention the appointment of a state superintendent of lyceums, to work in harmony with our National Superintendent, Mr. John Ring of Galveston, Texas. Ohio offers us a wide field for missionary work. What we need most is "competent workers." During the months of April and May I had calls from several societies for the same Sundays, but not being able to serve in more than one place at a time, Sister Reed and Mrs. Clemens, Brothers Sollinger and Bellis very kindly stepped in and aided in keeping the interest alive and the cause before the public. The absence of Mrs. Curran enforced by the condition of her health, somewhat hampered what would otherwise have been a complete success in organization work. We all know by the work she inaugurated during the first year of her office, that had she been well her second year would not only have doubled but tripled the amount of the first. Yet we are thankful for what has been and is done now, and hope that her successor in office may succeed in keeping the banner of our association floating over our people, an emblem of purity, justice, and truth, as she so zealously has done during the past two years.

In conclusion I would express my gratitude to all of the Spiritualists of the Buckeye State for their kind co-operation in both thought and deed, and to the Spiritualists at large, and all friends of our glorious cause for their hearty welcome and generous help, to our national officers for their many words of appreciation and encouragement, to the Spiritualist press for their notice of my efforts, and to the secular press of the various cities in which I have worked for their honest criticisms and just comments.

With gratitude for the past, joy for the present, and hope for the future, I am, fraternally yours for truth,

MRS. ELIZABETH SCHAUSS.
O. S. A. Missionary.

REPORT BY MRS. ANNA E. BAIRD.

Officers, Delegates and Co-workers Assembled in Convention—Greetings: —I hereby submit the following report as missionary for the O. S. A.:

I regret deeply that on account of sickness both of husband and self, I have been unable to go out into the field, ripe, ready for the harvest of truth, and work that others might have garnered golden grain from the grand and glorious truths of Spiritualism.

I have held meetings in Lorain, Wellington, Sandusky, and Ashtabula.

I have been enabled to do work that may not assist state and societies alone but that others may receive inspiration to go out and assist us.

I have organized, and the state has chartered, two Ladies' Aid societies, both doing a good work, to assist in our glorious cause.

Trusting I may be able to respond wherever called in the coming year, and that I may build for truth, temples of truth within the souls of many now in darkness as to our grand truth, I respectfully submit to the officers and delegates assembled in convention.

MRS. ANNA E. BAIRD.
Elyria, Ohio.
Ashtabula, Ohio, May 28, 1905.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

To the Officers, Delegates and Friends of the Ohio Spiritualist Association in Convention Assembled:—In submitting my report as treasurer of this association, I take great pleasure in stating to you that notwithstanding a considerable amount of labor has been performed by the trustees and missionaries, and especially by our president, whose untiring efforts have placed our state work on a sound, substantial basis, yet but a comparatively small sum has been drawn from the treasury to aid in accomplishing this work, for nearly all that has been done in the way of advancing the work and organizing and building up the local orders, has been managed in such a way that the work that was required to be done by the executive board has been managed through correspondence, thus saving the unnecessary cost of railroad fare, which by a few such meetings of the board would have depleted the treasury, (as the members reside in different parts of the state) and but little more would have been accomplished than has been by the correspondence system.

We all know that it takes quite a long time to build up the financial standing of an association, even by judicial management, and then after this is accomplished, even greater vigilance is required to hold it thus solid, for as it is with us individually, even so it is with us collectively. We are very apt to find an innumerable number, of what we call good and substantial excuses for using our incomes, sometimes faster than they accumulate. We have had sad experiences along this line in former years, even in our state association, if memory serves us right.

Money is, or should be, a representative of power, or force, showing that something has been or will be accomplished, and it is through this agency, coupled with good, judicious management that a vast amount of spiritual progress may be attained. The work of organizing and spiritualizing the state is scarcely begun. "The harvest, indeed, is great, but the laborers are few," and it will require the combined effort of all true and noble workers to consummate the work so nobly begun.

Yes, we must gird on the armor for the coming conflict. It has been said that "our greatest enemies are those of our own household." This is equally true in the rank and file of Spiritualism. We are sorry that it is true, yet nevertheless we know that such is the fact and it needs no further proof than what we can discover by casually glancing around us. The Open Court of Inquiry has been in session at more places than at No. 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill., and it will still remain in session, until the ills and wrongs that are posing under the sacred banner of Spiritualism are wiped out. Oh, thou most direful curse that ever damned this world, thou that tampers with the most sacred rights of the soul; thou that causes angels to blush and demons to laugh, thy name is FRAUD AND DECEPTION.

There is nothing particularly new that has presented itself in the issue of Spiritualism in the past year. As Spiritualists we have the same need of education that we have ever had, the same need of co-operation that we have ever had. The individual, in Spiritualism, is beginning to discover that his life is not complete in itself, but is part of another —a greater life—that of society from which he must receive and to which he must give. So that the fundamental movement of the times is from an individualistic to a social or collective type of Spiritualism.

We, that class ourselves true, honest, spiritual workers, are compelled to take up the science of sticking together, and study it, and solve it, and apply it, and profit by it. Whoever controls the conditions that shape my thoughts, is my master, whether it be myself or another. The necessity that compels me, or binds me to an association, with no power to extricate myself from that association, or from the evil influence that may exist in said association, makes me a slave to that condition.

It is coming more to a point where there will be one, and only one, dividing line in Spiritualism. The one side will be like of old to "Prove all things and hold fast only what is good," and the other will be to go on as many of us have done, and are doing, in the same old rut, accepting and promulgating everything that is branded Spiritualism, even the lace makers, who manufacture so many articles from a borrowed handkerchief.

And now, friends of this convention, asking your pardon for the deviation from what ought to have been my report, I submit to you my financial statement as found in my treasury book to the present date.

From May 28, 1904, to May 22, 1905, $177.25 passed through my hands, itemized account in day-book and ledger, with data. C. A. S.

From May 22 to 28, received $16.75.

FRED D. DUNAKIN.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Ohio Spiritualists Association in Convention Assembled at G. A. R. Hall, Ashtabula, Ohio, May, 26, 27 and 28, 1905—Greeting:—It gives me great pleasure to submit to your consideration the following report from the office of Secretary of the O. S. A., for the year ending May 22, 1905, with supplementary report to follow.

The work of your secretary has to a great extent been expended in behalf of our grand and progressive cause. The present outlook for Spiritualism in the state of Ohio is very favorable for its growth, especially among thinking people outside our ranks, who are investigating its phenomena, and becoming students of its philosophy, though I regret to say, that the conditions of organized work among our people, are not such as to warrant great enthusiasm or boasting on the part of any one.

During the year we have chartered two new societies—one at Clyde, and one at Delphos, organized by our national missionaries, Brother Sprague and wife. The officials of this association, were not notified of the missionaries working in the state of Ohio until the application for charters came to this office. They therefore, received no assistance through this office. One Ladies' Aid Society at Cleveland, Ohio., one society by transfer, at Wentworth, Ohio. Up to date 17 societies have paid per capita tax amounting to $110.50, remaining seven societies to hear from. Ordinations granted four: Sister Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, our worthy president; Brother Fred D. Dunakin, treasurer of this association, Antwerp, O.; Brother I. W. Pope, missionary, Cleveland; and Sister Elizabeth Schauss, missionary, of Toledo. The first named three, were ordained at public mass-meetings gotten up for this purpose by your secretary. An official board meeting was held at the same time, Feb. 5, at Memorial Hall, Cleveland, O. A collection of $6.30 was taken up for the benefit of Mediums' Relief Fund and forwarded to Mrs. M. T. Longley for which she sent receipt.

The general report of societies during the year is one of struggle and hardship. The most of them show a decrease in membership. The West Side Spiritual Church of Columbus, O., shows an increase in membership, and report the church free from debt. The Spiritualists in Cleveland, the Ladies' Temple Fund Society has bought a former Baptist church, which they will renovate this summer to have it ready for services by September. The Ashtabula Society has bought a lot. They expect to erect a new temple in the near future.

The secretary has kept in touch with the N. S. A. office at Washington, also with all the people by letter. Have written over 600 letters. Have frequently written small articles for the spiritual papers, also the daily papers in Cleveland. All of the editors have been kind and courteous, thus keeping our work and matter of interest in the cause with which we are concerned before the people through the press.

The courtesies extended to me by individuals and societies generally, have been helpful and well appreciated. All the work that the convention of 1904 instructed the secretary to do, has been attended to, to the best of my ability, and such other work, which came to my notice. Other matters of importance connected with our work will undoubtedly be given in the report of our honored president.

Our missionaries have undoubtedly done grand work in their fi[illegible]. Reports will speak for themselves, for myself will say: Officiated once at Sandusky and once at Ashtabula, and innumerable times at the different societies in Cleveland, held two funeral services, and assisted to organize the Ladies' Aid Society of Cleveland.

In conclusion your secretary desires to express his sincere thanks to the spiritual press, to all the secretaries of the auxiliaries, to the officers of the O. S. A. and each and every other individual member who aided and co-operated with me in the discharge of my duties.

Respectfully submitted,
C. A. SOLLINGER,
Cleveland, Ohio. Sec'y O. S. A.

SCIENCE AND THE CHURCH.

Religion Said to Be Throwing Off Dogmas and Doctrines in Light of Discoveries.

Religion and science [as set forth in the Chicago Record Herald] are getting closer as each in its own direction climbs the hill of wisdom and knowledge and can command a broader view of nature from higher points of observation. Each is making sacrifices and casting off dogmas and theories which are outgrown. Religion is throwing off church doctrines which cannot be understood, and science is correcting its own formulas by the light of more recent discovery.

Ecclesiasticism has been the hardest shell to penetrate with new truths, and to convince that it does not contain within the limits established by itself the whole story of man's life and spiritual progress. The fact has been forced on its attention that it must conform to the immutable laws which are disclosed to scientific and philosophical thinkers as man becomes evolved to higher fields of thought and action. Churchmen are usually the last to accept new theories and newly discovered facts, and there are always leading minds among the priesthood who ever disclaim false doctrines and welcome the light penetrating the sanctuaries through stained glass windows. The discovery that it can progress and keep pace with the world at large only by removing itself of doctrines which have been fastened upon the churches by misinterpretation of the word and teachings of the Great Master is being made by ecclesiasticism. Professing to be gospel teachers, the clergy themselves, as a rule, have been unwilling to learn. It is only with a free and open mind that students of theology, science or philosophy can be impressed with higher truth and recognize the great facts of human evolution.

The burden of inherited doctrines and dogma must be thrown aside that new light and truth may be perceived from heights which man in ordinary course will gain by the operation of evolutionary forces, over which he has little control.

In Boston lately have been gathered leading minds who represented the enlightenment of two great Christian denominations. If any new thing in the way of theological history, church practice or stimulant for the growth of men's souls was presented to the world as the result of these convocations it has yet to be recognized. The meetings have adjourned and nothing has been accomplished except to increase the thickness of the ecclesiastical shell in one case and an opportunity improved for the bitter denunciation of outside churches in the other.

Yet the atmosphere which surrounds the church altars was cleared by the utterance of one leading churchman at the annual service for men students from Harvard and Boston universities and near by institutions when he announced that the time was past when in order to embrace Christianity we must accept a lot of dogma and doctrines which we cannot understand; that men today are not obliged to accept as definite and complete and accurate the statements of good and great churchmen made in the past. He proclaimed that Christianity is a life, and life is a growth, and when a thing ceases to grow it is dead. He pleaded for freedom, and above all, for truth, and advised his hearers to let their confusing beliefs go and build in such light as they had to guide them. Let the preaching of such men be listened to and we shall find a way to truth, and, better, truth will find a way to us.

FRANCIS STONE.

WOMAN.

A Consideration of Her True Status.

Every true woman makes her own life where Providence places her. Such is the opinion of the truly good of all ages. It is not by noisy declamations that the state of woman is to be changed. Of late it seems to be the trend of fashion among women to appear as much lik man as possible. Such is neither in keeping with her past history, nor in accordance with true ideals of grace and beauty.

It is the true and established sphere of woman to influence man and bring out his higher nature by her sweet, modest, dignified womanly appearance. To appear mannish and to cultivate masculine nature is to rob themselves of their own birthright in the allwise plan of God's creation, and their true sphere in the home and family. It unfits her for the companionship of the object of her heart, and robs her of her highest office in life, which is true motherhood.

What can surpass that position of being, a noble wife and a true and loving mother? In this position she is indeed Queen upon her rightful throne. Woman, to gain her equal footing with man, does not necessarily mean to convert her feminine nature into the masculine.

If we wish to harmonize with the divine plan of creation, let us not insult the creator by trying to imitate the other side of our true nature, or improve upon his methods of creation, and thereby pervert the true sphere of woman.

I am glad that I am a woman, and if I am to be born again I pray God to see to the plan very carefully and see that I be created a woman, and be contented to be man's equal, neither his servant nor his master.

THE GOOD, GRAY HEROES.

Love and tears for the ones who sleep
Where the showers of summer fall;
Honor and praise and reverence deep
And wreaths to cover them all—
Honor and praise and love for them
Who have answered the call of God,
But praise and wreaths for the living, too,
Love for the good, gray heroes who
Are strewing the sacred sod.

Praise for the ones who have ceased to hear,
For the ones whose hearts are stilled,
High and plain let their names appear
On the arches that we build;
Honor and love, but not alone
For the ones who are sleeping low;
Wreaths for the heroes good and gray,
Love and honor for them while they,
Brave hearts, remain to know.

REMEDY FOR RELIGIOUS DOUBT.

A Letter From Goldwin Smith.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: You say that you receive communications speaking bitterly of these letters. Their writer does not fail to receive outpourings of feeling, now from the side of orthodoxy, which denounce him as an atheist, now from the side of ultra-materialism, which taxes him with cowardly adherence to theistic superstition. He is but one of many who in these days of perplexity and doubt are trying to find some secure foundation for belief in the moral government of the universe, in the authority of conscience and in the more hopeful view of the change which is to take place at death. For the aged perhaps the last question has more pressing interest than for the young.

You have told us there is an increase of formal membership in the orthodox, a decrease in the more rationalistic Churches. Granting this to be the case, does it denote a decrease of rationalism and an increase of orthodox belief? Would a seceder from an orthodox Church be likely at once to register himself elsewhere? Is formal membership proof of unshaken conviction? Judging from my observation in England, I should say that it was not. Does not the increased resort to esthetic attractions betray a feeling of mistrust? Do we not hear from one Church after another, now from the Presbyterian, now from the Anglican, an appeal of conscientious and enlightened clergymen for a removal or relaxation of tests? Has not unrest been disclosed by a series of trials for heresy? Have not leading clergymen of the Church of England petitioned for liberty to deal freely and critically with the New Testament? Has not Presbyterianism produced the writings of Robertson Smith? Is not the "Encyclopedia Biblica," in which the resurrection of Christ is treated as a vision, edited by a Canon of the Anglican Church and professor of theology at Oxford? We surely have come to a crisis in the history of religion and all that rests upon it.

There might be less disposition to cling to traditional formularies of belief and greater willingness to set the clergy, our natural guides, free from the present shackles if we had present to our minds the extent to which denominational creeds had been fixed, not by spiritual authority of any kind, but by secular power, and largely for political ends. In the case of the Anglican Church it may, I think, be clearly shown that from the commencement of the religious revolution under Henry VIII. to its close under Elizabeth the representation of the clergy never had an effective voice. Convocation, had it been allowed, would have perpetuated the Catholic settlement of Mary; and of the episcopate, in the eyes of Anglicans a special channel of true belief, all the members but one—or, if Sodor and Man is to be counted, two—resigned. In the Scotch Reformation also influence distinctly political was very strong.

One is surprised to find that a champion of Catholicism in your columns can point to the 300,000,000 nominal Catholics as testifying by their unshaken belief to the stability of his church. In the papal city itself, while Ignatius Loyola still rests in his shrine of lapis lazuli and gold, not far off rises the statue of Giordano Bruno, erected by "the age which he foresaw" on the spot where he was burned. But where would even nominal Catholicism now be if political power had not in Italy, France, Spain, Austria, Bavaria, the Spanish Netherlands, forcibly crushed freedom of inquiry? The principle on which, after the Thirty Years' War, the States of Germany were practically settled was that the political sovereignty should determine the state religion. With political liberty has come freedom of thought questionings about traditionnal belief and about the mysteries of our being to which only reasonable satisfaction can put an end.

Let those who shrink with horror from the spread of free inquiry draw encouragement and charity at the same time from a grand example. Gladstone, as Morley's life of him shows, was to the end of his days a High Churchman, intensely religious, a believer in special providence, in the inspiration of scripture, in the efficacy of prayer. Yet he could not only associate and act heartily with free thinkers, but look with satisfaction on the activity of the general conscience and say that while there had never been an age so much perplexed with doubt, there had never been one so full of the earnest pursuit of truth.

WOMEN MUST VOTE.

Reasons Pointed Out Why She Should Do So.

There is no sex in moral thinking. Whoever is capable of clear, just, intelligent, unselfish thinking, and unites with it the active labor of a self-supporting citizen, has a right to a voice and ballot in the adjustment of national affairs.

It is not a question whether the feminine brain is equal to the masculine, largely considered. It is an incontrovertible fact that we have had no woman Shakespeare, no woman Michael Angelo, no woman Mozart, and that even as dressmakers and cooks men lead the world.

But that has nothing to do with the matter of voting to elect a Mayor or a President, or to decide upon a tax law in any American city, or in deciding what privilege should or should not be granted the saloon keeper in a country village.

In all these matters the fact remains that the moral, noble, educated wives, mothers and sisters of the respectable citizens of our land, are as well equiped to aid in these decisions as the boys of twenty-one, who sit about pool rooms and race tracks, or the political roues who make a business of politics, or the foreign day laborers who have just taken out their naturalization papers and are given tips by their employers how to vote.

Only Eight Years Old.

And a Most Remarkable Medium and Preacher.

SPIRIT RETURN IS KALEIDOSCOPIC IN ITS CHARACTER, AS OFTEN SAID BEFORE IN THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

MINDS ARE AS DIVERSIFIED IN BELIEF IN THE LOWER SPHERES OF SPIRIT LIFE AS ON THIS EARTH, HENCE ALL KINDS OF TEACHINGS, SOMETIMES VERY CONFLICTING, WILL EMANATE THEREFROM. HOWEVER, ALL BEAR EVIDENCE OF THE TRUTH OF SPIRIT RETURN—ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT FACTORS IN EXISTENCE TO ESTABLISH THE FACT THAT THE SPIRIT SURVIVES THE DEATH OF THE BODY.

IN THE FOLLOWING NARRATIVE YOU CAN SEE A DEMONSTRATION OF THE KALEIDOSCOPIC CHARACTER OF SPIRIT RETURN—A LITTLE BOY ONLY EIGHT YEARS OF AGE IS CLAIRAUDIENT—HE HEARS SPIRIT VOICES DISTINCTLY, AND IS DIRECTED BY THEM WHAT TO PREACH. A MORE WONDERFUL EVIDENCE OF DIRECT SPIRIT CONTROL NEVER OCCURRED IN THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM.

IN FACT SO COMMON HAS SPIRIT RETURN BECOME, THAT OUTSIDE THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM, REMARKABLE VISIONS, DREAMS, PROPHECIES, WARNINGS AND DIRECT INTERVENTION OF SPIRITS IN MORTAL AFFAIRS ARE CONSTANTLY OCCURRING. IN THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THIS CITY, MARVELOUS MANIFESTATIONS ARE KNOWN TO HAVE OCCURRED.

THERE IS NO POSSIBLE WAY THAT SPIRIT RETURN CAN BE PREVENTED. IT IS A FACT IN NATURE, AND THERE ARE AS MANY MEDIUMS PROBABLY OUTSIDE THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM AS IN IT, THOUGH NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

THIS EIGHT-YEAR-OLD BOY MEDIUM IS ORTHODOX—HIS TEACHINGS ARE ALONG THE LINE OF THOSE WHO BELIEVE THAT JESUS IS THE ONLY BEGOTTEN SON OF GOD, ILLUSTRATING IMPRESSIVELY THE KALEIDOSCOPIC CHARACTER OF SPIRIT RETURN.

He is eight and his hair reaches almost to his heels. To be quite truthful, I should say that it reaches to his knees. El-Joseph Raycroft is his name and he is the boy preacher. Friday night I heard him preach in the Good Will Mission on West Harrison street. Saturday morning I called upon him. The end of it all was that he baffled me. I cannot explain him.

He was late at the mission. The young man had a time keeping the crowd quiet until he came. He was about as unmagnetic as any man I ever saw. Then there was a young lady who did the best she could, but that was feeble. I longed for a little warm-heartedness instead of severity, for a little bubbling-over human sympathy. As last, in the midst of a recitation of text from the scriptures, the boy preacher came. A crowd surged in through the doors. They were rough hoodlums and rowdies. Through their ranks a murmur of wonder went. The boy advanced to the front of the room and waited for silence. His self-possession was complete.

With his bible in his hand he stood there and waited. I looked at him hard. He is not like other children. There is nothing child-like about him. His eyes are full of light, his forehead wide and high. Were he not a boy with a thought for God his chin would be dangerously weak. His nose is clear-cut with thin nostrils. He is a boy that any parent would love to call his own.

Yet there is an expression in his face which forbids absolute love in a stranger and leaves one with a wonder in his soul as to where the boy will end and what was his beginning.

Expounds the Scriptures.

From his open bible he read his text. Then he expounded it as wisely as most ministers and much more plainly than some. Next he sang a song. In a piping and clear treble he sang. While he sang he beat the time with his dimpled little hand. His yellow wavy hair streamed down his back and his blue eyes were filled with light. Through the crowded room the silence was so complete that he could be heard in even his faintest tones.

All the front seats were filled with children. Some of them were clean and some of them were dirty. As if he were an angel come from heaven they looked at him. At the very last he spoke thus: "Is there any child here who wants to come to the Savior? If there is, will he please raise his hand?"

A dozen little hands went up. "God is just as real as your papa and mamma," said the boy preacher. "You can love him just the same." Some of the hands had gone down, but one remained poised. It was a dirty little hand—more dirty than any little hand I have seen lately. In the knuckles the dirt was so ground in that I do not think it will ever be cleaned out. The tips of the tiny fingers quivered with excitement. It was a very earnest little hand. I wish I knew more of it.

El-Joseph stood for a moment after his exhortation. I went up to him and told him that I would like to write a story about him. While I talked I tried to stand where I could see him and hear what he said to the others. It was not his notion that I should do so. "You will excuse me," he said. "I wish to talk with these little boys and girls. You will have to see my father. He always arranges all interviews with me."

Talks to the Boys.

I sat down helplessly. He had squelched me completely and very justly. While I sat and watched he went from one child to another. He leaned toward them and whispered little Christ messages in their ears. Not unlike other boys who are eight years old he looked. His sturdy little legs were covered with knee trousers, his shoes were nicely polished, his little hands well manicured. When he talked to a little boy not quite so big as himself, a girl of ten, perhaps, reached out and stroked his long yellow hair. Over it all shone the dim lights of the mission. There was something about the boy that was almost supernatural. He talked with his little children long. I went to his father, who sat in the back part of the room waiting for him. We made an appointment for 10 the next morning.

No. 79 West Adams street is where the boy lives. It is not an inviting place. The Raycrafts are poor people and make no pretensions. A girl showed me into a dark and littered-up room on the second floor. You will have to wait," she said. "I don't believe anyone can go up to the rooms. Mrs. Raycraft is sick."

The room was stuffy and illy ventilated. On one side was a couch. It was evident that at night the place is used for a sleeping apartment. Dust was on the dresser and scraps on the floor. The one window opened on a court, so there was little light. Soon I heard steps approaching. Side by side the boy El-Joseph and his father came down the dusty stairs. The father is nothing when one looks at the boy. True, he is cleanly and has a face that is intelligent. Yet I wondered as I looked at him how it came that he is the father of so wonderful a child. No matter what reason we give for the gifts of this boy preacher, it must still be said that he is wonderful.

Has a Manly Grip.

An awe took possession of me as he came in. When he held out his hand to shake hands it was with a grasp like steel that he took mine. He said nothing. I could see that he has lately lost his two front teeth—quite like other boys—and that it made him lisp a little. The two new teeth are not very far grown in and look like white shovels. He sat down on a chair and was silent for a moment. I tried to think of something to say and could not. It would have been arrant nonsense to discuss the weather or the strike or any earthly topic. The silence did not seem to bother him in the least. He planted one little foot on the other knee and looked at me steadily. It was his father that gave an impetus to the conversation by starting on some timely topic. At last I began my inquisition.

"Do you like to preach?" was my first question.

He looked at me a little pityingly. His sensitive little lips were curled with wonder. "The Lord Jesus Christ sends me messages," he said gravely. "I hear them."

All of his childhood was swept away from him. In the dusk of the dirty room he sat clean and white-souled. What I said to him and he to me I will try to tell.

"Who sends you the messages?" I asked him.

"God." He spoke as if it were a commonplace thing that he said. Yet all of his commonplaces are filled with a wondrous sweetness.

"You hear them?" I inquired again.

He smiled at my childishness, it seemed to me. His father was on the other side of the room. There were no glances between them. The father waited while the boy talked. The silence was complete. His childish voice broke it a little pipingly. Yet his very attitude was old—very old.

Hears the Voices Plainly.

"I hear the voices," he said, "more plainly than I hear yours."

"With these ears?" He looked at me amazingly.

"No," he said. "You cannot hear the voice of God with your earth ears. I hear God's voice with the ears of my heart and see him with the eyes of my heart. God is spirit. How could you hear and see him with your earth ears or your earth eyes?"

It was a poser. I changed the subject. A cloud must have come over the sun, for the room was very dark. Something in a baby buggy on one side stirred. There was a snuzzling and nosing around in some white pillows. Then came a faint little squeak.

El-Joseph spoke. "We have a new baby," he said. "It's a new little sister. She came last week."

"Have you any other brothers and sisters?"

It was his father who answered. "There are two more brothers. Joseph is the oldest."

I asked him then the question one always asks of a child under like circumstances. One might think that poverty and crowding would make the little sister less welcome. El-Joseph's face gleamed out in the half shadow.

"What do you think of your new little sister?" I said.

"I think she is very good," he answered oddly. "I love her dearly."

A question came into my head then regarding his theology, which seems to me a little too orthodox. When he preaches he uses the word "sin" very frequently and freely. Blunderingly I blustered out my question. "That little sister of yours, do you think she is sinful? I heard you say last night that all are filled with sin. Do you think that agrees with the other text that you used when you said 'God is love'?"

He uncrossed his knees before he replied. His little hands were restless and wiry.

"All people are born in sin," he said. "Here it is in the bible."

Maybe I am unorthodox, but I interrupted him before he had time to confirm the thought by a reference to his bible. "Take a savage who was born on the plains, where there are no missionaries or preachers. No one has ever told him of Jesus Christ. Do you think that he [illegible] go to hell?"

As irretrievably as fate he spoke. His face was sad. "The holy scriptures say that all are conceived and born in sin," he said. "Before you can be saved you must be born again."

Once more he opened his bible and read the verse that verified his meaning.

I went deeper. "But I think that it would be a cruel God who would punish one of his children for his ignorance," he said. "God created the savage; therefore he could not punish him for something that he does not know is wrong."

Light broke over the face of the boy. "I know what the trouble is," he said. "You do not understand what the word 'sin' means. It is this"—he clasped his little hands and touched his body. "It is the things that are here on this earth that are sin. Up in heaven there is no sin. Everything is beautiful."

"What do you think heaven is like?"

The boy lifted up his face and answered: "It is like the earth, only it is perfect. There is no dirt in heaven—no sin. We shall all see God there."

"There are flowers there?"

He did not answer. His face was turned away. I do not think that he heard the question. His next remark was a stumbler. He looked at me frankly and directly. "Do you look upon the Lord Jesus Christ as your personal savior?" he asked. I nodded my head. He was silent again. His talk is full of strange silences—when he thinks and says nothing.

Would Like to Go.

[illegible] find out whether he had any vanity. His long hair lay about his shoulders. "Would you like to have your hair cut off?" I asked him.

He looked puzzled. "I would on account of the comfort," he said. "It is uncomfortable in hot weather, but something bothers me."

"What?"

"I don't see what the Lord put it on my head for if he didn't mean for it to grow."

On the couch sat his father. A funny thought came into my head. "Would you like to have your father's hair grow so that it was as long as yours?" I asked him.

It was the first time that I found childishness in him. He grinned widely. "It would be funny," he said, and then talked of something else, as if the incident was closed. The photographer came then. He had his picture machine along. "There is an empty room upstairs where we can have them taken," said the father. The three went up there. For several minutes I sat alone. Suddenly a little patter of feet was heard. It was El-Joseph who came. In his hand he carried a religious paper. "You might like to read this while you wait," he said softly, and went up the stairs again.

By and by I went up there too. The child knelt on the bare floor. His yellow hair streamed around his perfect face. The photographer was filled with wrath. "It's wrong," he said. "That boy has no business with that head of hair. I tell you that if he was mine he'd be in a barbershop in half an hour."

El-Joseph paid no attention to what he said. His mind seemed more intent on his bible, which he held in his hands, than anything that might be said about his hair. Dutifully he did everything that the photographer told him to do. At last he arose from the floor and we all went downstairs. The last I saw of the photographer he was still muttering about that hair. I think the mutterings have penetrated into the innermost editorial sanctum. There were echoes of them floating around when I came back in the afternoon. The photographer was very much in earnest in his protestations.

Back to the dingy room we went. I had a host of things to ask him.

Doesn't Go to School.

"Have you ever been to school?" I said. It was his father who spoke again. "We thought of putting him in school last year. The superintendent of schools made an inquiry into his scholarship. They examined him and found him several years ahead of boys of his age. After that they didn't say anything."

"Has he ever been sick?"

Joseph smiled. "I was never sick," he said. "Sometimes I have been tired."

"Do you like to play?"

He grinned again. It was wider than his smile. "Of course. Several boys come to see me and we play together."

His father spoke up again. "If you mean to ask whether he is fond of a romp," he said, "he is. When he is out with the boys he is one of them. He likes marbles and tops and balls and all the other things that are the delight of boys."

Another saucy question was in my heart. "Are you ever naughty?"

He didn't look as if he were. The question seemed sacrilegious. He nodded his head gravely. "Oh, yes. I am often naughty. I disobey God."

"And not your father?"

"I don't disobey him so much now." Across on the other side of the room his father shook his head. It was a signal that the boy did not disobey him. The boy spoke again. "Life is all obedience," he said.

"Most of Joseph's life is taken up in obeying," said the father.

"You obey the voices?"

"Yes, I obey the voices."

"When do you hear them?"

"Every morning I go somewhere where I can be alone. Then I kneel down and pray. After that I wait and God tells me what I am to say the next time I preach."

It was shrewdness in me that spoke. "Your father does not tell you what to say?" Even if he did the boy would still be wonderful.

Father Doesn't Interfere.

It does not seem that the little fellow could fib. The father made a quick denial. There was a little indignation, I thought, in his voice. "Sometimes I try to help him reason out his sermons, but I always mix him up so that he does not know what he says. I have learned not to interfere."

Joseph answered a question that was in my mind. "I was three years old when I first began to preach," he said. "We had family worship and I was joining in with them all one Sunday morning." A memory flitted across his face. "That was five years ago to-morrow," he said. "I felt all at once that the Lord had chosen me to preach and I told my father so." The father finished the story.

"He pulled a chair out into the middle of the floor and preached an imperfect little sermon. My wife and I knelt before him, for we saw that imperfect as it was he was possessed of wonderful powers. It is in our own home that he says the most beautiful things. You would not believe it if I told you. The sweet thing about it is that he is happy all the time. I don't think he has ever known an unhappy moment."

"Has he preached ever since?"

"Yes. At first it was on the corners [illegible] into the missions and afterward into the big churches. Sometimes he has spoken to 2,000 people. Not a day goes by that he does not bring some soul to God."

"How many times does he speak during the week?"

"Well, on Sunday he usually speaks all the afternoon. He has several railroad stations which he makes and some little missions which are his pets. Then he preaches on the corners and in large churches, too."

All this is quite true. I do not think there is a minister of the gospel in the world who preaches to so many kinds of people. I thought of this as I sat and looked at his white little face that is yet tinted with health.

Want Him to Preach.

Yet a great pity filled my heart. I wanted to take him away from the preaching until he is a big man. I wanted to know that he is tucked away in bed every night instead of preaching to the multitudes. Something of this I said to his father.

"I am afraid," he replied. "I am afraid that I should be interfering with the Lord's work. Joseph is healthy and sturdy. Last year I tried to have him speak less. He grew wan and pale and unhappy. All his life is taken up with the preaching of God's word. I am afraid that he would die from grief if he could not preach."

It was in the doorway of the dusty and littered up room that we stood. Joseph was close beside his father. "We prayed for a godlike child," he said softly and looked down and into the eyes of his beautiful boy. "Sometimes I think that he is an answer to our prayer."

A last mischievous question I asked him: "Does he ever cry or feel disappointed over things?"

"Only when he thinks a meeting is a failure."

"Nor does he quarrel?"

It was the most strange of all the things that Joseph had said. "I do not know what that means," he said. "What is it, papa?"

"You know, Joseph, dear. Quarrel is to argue over something with your brothers and your friends."

"Over playthings that someone has and you feel you want?"

"Yes."

"I do that sometimes, but I always think that Jesus said we were to give up things. I try to follow his word."

He reached out his dimpled little hand and took mine. It was the same wiry handclasp.

Once more I have seen him. He was at play on the street. A crowd of youngsters was scuffling and rolling about. He was the merriest one of the lot. Suddenly there was a silence. The shoutings ceased. Joseph knelt in their midst and prayed. The other children listened with all their souls. It was for someone that he prayed. He mentioned her by name. His explanation was simple.

"I meant to pray for her this morning. I forgot. The minute I remembered I did it."

It was not long before he went on with his playing. I have this to say of him at the last: He is a wonderful little boy, but I would not have him for mine. I think I should be afraid of him a little.—Jean Cowgill in Chicago Chronicle.

NOT A "KOHINOOR."

Just a Plain, Common Sense, "Shoddy" Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—In the "Court of Inquiry" in The Progressive Thinker of May 20, I just read Judge Dunn's defense of C. E. Winans.

Now my hair is naturally grey, but before I got through reading that article, was RED. Nothing makes me "redheaded" as quick as these wordy, far-fetched, nonsensical sophisms that are used to defend these exposed frauds, and tricksters, after they have been caught with their "toggery" in their possession, or plainly caught in their trickery.

Judge Dunn must imagine that all of the readers of The Progressive Thinker are fools "from away back." As a lawyer's plea to bemuddle a jury his argument would be in place, but the Judge is presuming too much on the ignorance of the readers of your paper. He says:

"It may be that I am writing myself down as a fool, or a defender of frauds and fakes."

I will not admit the Judge is writing himself down as a fool, but is writing others down as fools. I think he knows better. I must admit, however, that he is writing himself down as a defender of frauds and fakes.

I do not see why any frauds, fakes, tricksters, toggery-users, or any form of fraudulent so-called mediums, could desire a better defender than the Judge, but I will comment no further on his defense af frauds, but will say that by the time I had read the replies of Harrison D. Barrett, Hudson Tuttle and George B. Warne, to Judge Dunn's defense of Winans, my hair had assumed its natural color.

Permit me to say that another "heading" attracted my attention, "A Rank Insult to Spiritualists and Mediums," or "Light of Truth (?)" testing Spiritualists. Now being a kind of Spiritualist, by brevet, I tried hard to feel insulted—to feel indignant, but unfortunately I had taken the Light of Truth some years ago, supposing it was devoted to Spiritualism, and the absolute absurdity of the Light of Truth setting itself up to test Spiritualists was so immensely funny that I could not feel indignant, for laughing—my levity was superior to my indignation, and spoiled the gravity of the occasion.

I will say that after I had taken the Light of Truth for some time I came to the conclusion that it did not represent Spiritualism in its true sense—the main object seemed to be the booming of the King Solomon Mines. I received also about a cart-load, more or less, of circulars, during two or three years, booming the King Solomon Mines, but as I did not invest I am not a "kohinoor," or "package tied with ordinary binding cord"—I am "exceedingly shoddy."

SPIRITUAL SYNCHRONISM.

I hardly think that any of my help is needed to fill out The Progressive Thinker so as to make it a highly interesting educator upon the most vital themes and topics, but somehow, I feel a constraint after an unwilling silence. If time were measured by the number of thoughts one has, I might say that a hundred years have lapsed since I dropped my pen in spiritual work and took up duties in a secular newspaper, where a man's heart becomes a refrigerator and his brain may be a cauldron.

I have one lone friend in my home city, with whom I compare notes on what the thinkers are saying in the great "Open Court," but our opportunities are meager, on the principle of business before pleasure.

It does the soul good to read "the news from the churches," as we Methodists used to call it. Brother Jones from somewhere, and Sister Sarah Jane Smith from somewhere else, I fear scarcely have an idea how a few words of news from their hands and pens thrill the heart of a lonesome man who works in the jungle by day and sleeps, mentally, in the lair of the four-footed by night.

Last week there was a seance reported in the paper in which a man called dead by the people of the world, appeared and answered a question I had been turning over in my mind for a week or more. He was asked by one of the company present, what was the first thought he had when he awoke upon the spirit plane of life. He answered, "I wanted to scream for joy." I hardly know why I thought of it, for it seems ridiculous, but I had called to my mind the remark of Joe Brumley of Kentucky when he saw his first railroad train and engine, and heard the latter "whistle," that that was not a whistle, it was a perfect "beller." I rather imagine some of us excitable folks will "beller" instead of scream, when we exchange the snore of a Jamieson for the ultimate and true awakening, when we shall "see eye to eye (Paul) and speak the same things."

We are all building better and higher than we know. I have followed the atom and molecule chasers, and they all lead me into a dining-room of darkness where I cry for a candle, but Betty never comes. We do work for the churches and I try to feel a harmony with them, but passing by I hear their songs that seem joyful, but should I enter, they freeze my soul by denying my Christ. Last week there appeared a short poem in the Republican of this city on Decoration Day. The following two verses, show that the appeal is made to the "wise men," in behalf of those who only believe, and who cast the emblems of love upon the graves of their departed, with a doubt in immortality:

"Beside the mound in challis fair,
We stand, the abyss stretches far;
And wise men teach us in our prayer,
To sight the soul's fond polar star.

"Say, wise men of the immortal dawn,
Send stronger beams of light sublime,
And let them gleam where flowers are strewn,
To decorate these wrecks of time."

Dear friends who may read this short article, for I must make it so, too many words being my failing. I can't any more find a point at which to stop, than I can tell you all how well I love you and the cause of truth to which you are devoted. When sweet old Moses Hull—pardon I ask, for he disclaims belonging to the ranks of the aged—declares that he is building the greatest school on earth, and that a young brother of his contemplates the most wonderful sanitarium, I am almost paralyzed with a Mount Pelee of inward laughter, or a feeling of mirth, I might say, that is not capable of being expressed in common, everyday giggling.

Talk about the mediums! Bless their dear hearts. Do I love them? You could not tell the way I feel toward them from love. All the fakes and mountebanks that hound the heels of our true soldiers in the cause could not frighten me from one brave, truth-clinging one, "lodging awhile in tents below, gladly wandering to and fro, till the Canaan is gained."

Two weeks ago, I received a letter from a medium friend whom I had not heard from more than a few times in four years. The letter was interesting and cheering in itself, but there came along with it a voiceless message that soothed and charmed and blessed. For days, in recalling the letter, there would come a sensation impossible to describe, but I might say, of perfect contentment, peace and joy.

WHAT I'LL GIVE FOR THE BABY.

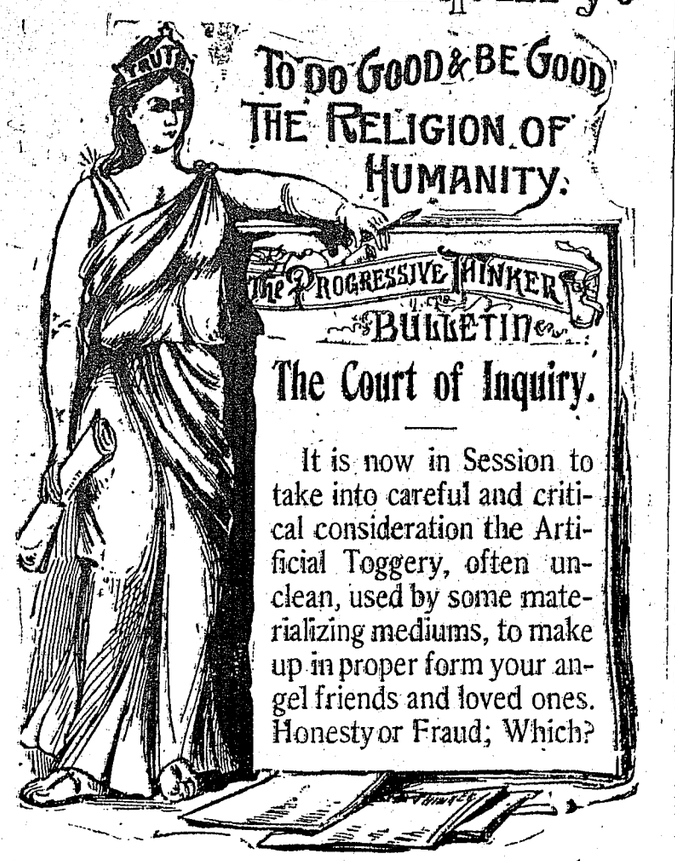
You ask what I'll give for the baby,
For the dear little pet of the fold;
Why, I'll give the great love of a mother—
A rich treasure, far better than gold.

How much will I give for each dimple?
I am sure I can give nothing more;
All the gems of the ocean count nothing
When compared to the heart's precious store.

The laughter? Methinks I can hear it
And the patter of dear little feet;
Surely nothing on earth is so winsome,
There is naught in the world quite so sweet.

There's sorrow indeed if the laughter,
(Oh! just whisper it low with your breath),
And the patter of feet and the kisses
Should be hushed in the stillness of death.

The anguish and pain at the parting—
I've been through with it all and I know;
Though my darlings are treasured in heaven,
Still their presence I miss here below.



I know that they often are near me,
When so cloudy and dark seems the way;
What a joy when the Infinite Father
Reunites us again and for aye!

Refrain:—

You ask what I'll give,
How much I will pay;
Bid me count all my treasures
And make you an offer straightway.
I have not a million to offer;
Of jewels I have not a store;
But the love of a mother I'll give you;
What mortal could give any more?

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

A DEMAND FOR HONESTY.

Will C. Hodge, a Veteran Lecturer, Gives His Views in Regard to Artificial Toggery Used by Materializing Mediums.

I felt very much like shouting "Glory to God" after the regular old Methodist fashion while reading The Progressive Thinker of May 20. To my mind it augurs well for the future welfare of Spiritualism when such men as Harrison D. Barrett, W. F. Peck, George B. Warne and Hudson Tuttle take hold of the fraud question and handle it without gloves.

IF THE DEMAND FOR HONESTY AND INTEGRITY IN OUR RANKS IS TO RESULT IN A DIVISION OF FORCES, THEN FOR ONE, I WILL WELCOME SUCH DIVISION. If we cannot have a Spiritualism based upon honest mediumship, then let Spiritualism take its departure and be known no more among mortals. The specious pleading that it is necessary to have "toggery" in the form of robes, wigs, glasses and false beards in order to assist the spirits, should not be sanctioned by any person who really loves the cause and is laboring for its advancement.

It is heartsickening to spend time and strength in trying to elucidate the principles of the philosophy of Spiritualism and the facts of mediumship, and then have it upset by fraudulent work among mediums.

EVERY PERSON NOT A NATURAL-BORN IDIOT MUST KNOW THAT THERE IS ONLY ONE PURPOSE IN ANY MEDIUM'S CARRYING AN OUTFIT TO ASSIST THE SPIRITS, AND THAT PURPOSE IS FOR DEFRAUDING THE PUBLIC.

Especially do I like the true ring of Hudson Tuttle's article, every word of which I heartily endorse.

In the name of common honesty and common decency, let us discard, now and forever, dark cabinets, darkened rooms and all the adjuncts so necessary for the perpetration of fraud, and cease "having fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

Personally, I know that materialization is a fact, and I will stand by the fact to the end of the chapter. Moreover, this evidence has in some instances come through the medial powers of such as are denounced arrant frauds, and there is the rub. The fakir, pure and simple, we can easily dispose of, but not so with those who have genuine powers, and yet supplement these powers with FRAUDULENT PRACTICES. To charge such practices upon the spirits is on a par with Christians who strive to escape responsibility by attributing their lapses and their crimes to the influence of his Satanic Majesty. I do not doubt there are spirits who are willing to, and who at times do, assist mediums in their nefarious practices, but I INSIST THAT THE RESPONSIBILITY RESTS WITH THE MEDIUM WHO KEEPS OPEN DOOR FOR SUCH INFLUENCES.

The only remedy is, when any medium is found carrying, and especially found using "toggery," is to refuse absolutely to patronize him (or her) in any way or manner, AND TO DEBAR THEM FROM OUR ROSTRUMS AND CAMP-GROUNDS ENTIRELY.

Let societies and camp-managers do this for the next five years, and let the Spiritualist press continue to publish nefarious practices when positively proven, and we shall hear but little of the frauds in Spiritualism.

Again, I wish to repeat, that when our societies or camp associations employ or allow any medium who has been convicted of fraudulent practices to practice their profession upon their grounds or platforms THEY ARE ACCESSORIES TO SUCH CRIMINAL PRACTICES, AND WILL CONTINUE TO BE SO JUDGED BY THE WORLD AT LARGE.

It will take strenuous and sometimes drastic methods to eliminate these undesirable elements, but it must be done if we are to maintain our self-respect or gain the respect of the world at large.

Again, let me say: I stand by mediumship as the foundation stone of Spiritualism, recognizing the fact that the philosophy and phenomena must go hand in hand, but I am not willing that the wheat and the tares continue to grow together until there is no wheat left worth harvesting.

CONDOLENCE.

Wants Spiritualists to Sympathize With C. E. Winans.

Charles E. Winans of Edinburg, Ind., has been in Kokomo, Ind., for three weeks holding seances with audiences numbering from fifteen to twenty-five at each seance. He holds three seances each week and they are attended by the best people of the city. I would ask all his friends to write to him and cheer him up during the trying ordeal through which he is forced to pass at the present time. Address 404 South Main street, Kokomo, Ind.

W. S. WOODS.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Should Not the Sympathy of Honest Spiritualists Everywhere Be Extended to Those Who Were So Grossly Deceived at Hot Springs, Ark.?

When I read the above from Mr. Woods, I stopped and wondered who comprise Winans' friends; those willing and anxious to stick to him knowing the deception he practiced at Hot Springs? I presume there are always a few who still pretend friendship to the lowest medium, even after he has been tried, convicted and sentenced, but what do you think of such people? would class them as confederates, or that they occupied the same sphere and level, mentally, morally, and from a standpoint of principle. People who connive, associate and affiliate with criminals are no better than the criminal themselves.

From one end of the country to the other echo the sounds of fraud, knave, traitor and so on, when a medium who has been trusted, patronized, praised and assisted in every way, is proven to be a trickster, deceptive, untrue, accepting money and favors for the goods he well knows he can never deliver. THERE ARE IN HOT SPRINGS AT LEAST FOURTEEN AS RELIABLE CITIZENS AS ARE TO BE FOUND IN ANY CITY, WHO WILL SWEAR THAT C. E. WINANS IS GUILTY OF A DECEPTION WHICH SHOULD BLAST HIM IN THE MINDS OF EVERY TRUE, HONEST AND EARNEST THINKING SPIRITUALIST IN THE WORLD.

Winans' words when asked about his Hot Springs experience are: "It is all a damnable lie." Isn't it reasonable that he would thus express himself? The guilty one always endeavors to cover up his tracks with lies and deception. If those people to whom he thus speaks could have been at the public sale in the streets of Hot Springs, when the constable sold to the highest bidder his wigs, robes, music box and paraphernalia, they would give but little heed to his braggadocio talk. No doubt many of these friends (if there be many) who still believe him true and genuine, would be interested in seeing photographs of his music box with the secret drawer open, and his paraphernalia, and if they are interested sufficiently, let them write me, and from me they may procure such photographs, as I have had a series taken. Many articles which have been used for many years in Winans' seances will no doubt be recognized by these same friends, in the photographs, as there is one citizen of Hot Springs who states that some of his banners and robes he has seen in use by Winans in his seances ten and twelve years ago.

In the face of all this, let me ask: Who wants to comply with the request of W. S. Woods, to cheer the poor fellow up a little. I do not know, but I firmly believe that the mail carriers will not be overburdened with letters of condolence and sympathy for this awfully abused, over-sensitive creature. I hold the Spiritualists of the world in too high esteem for this. Those good souls who honestly believe, and cannot be convinced to the contrary by the experience of others, that Winans is a genuine medium and honest in his manifestations, I would advise at some future time when the opportunity offers, to take possession of one of his materialized forms and hold it till an examination can be made, and it will prove TO BE WINANS HIMSELF OR A CONFEDERATE, JUST AS SURE AS THERE IS A HEAVEN ABOVE. I wish to say to all Spiritualists to wake up and shake off this cloak of timidity. Do not be deceived by one who is so unprincipled and base, and possibly no smarter than yourself.

The Ohio State Spiritualist Association.

Report of the President, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran.

To the Officers, Delegates and Spiritualists of Ohio in Convention Assembled, May 27, 1905—Greeting:—Another year has passed, we meet again to further the interest of the state; much has been accomplished during the last year, but there is still room for improvement. I congratulate you upon the outlook of our state association, as well as upon the results of the year's work, although it has not been what I desired it should be, my health not permitting me to carry out my plans and to further the cause of missionary work.

Missionary Work.

All missionaries have been kept busy and at times home societies have had conference meetings in order to assist the sister society with a speaker. Harmony has prevailed in all societies as far as I know. I have held seventy-eight meetings, besides holding parlor meetings, etc., during the year. We have chartered less societies in this year, than in 1904, our efforts have been to stimulate the societies already chartered; have lent assistance whenever called upon to do so; no charters have been recalled by the state, so far proving beyond a doubt missionary work is practicable.

Mrs. E. Schauss, Mrs. A. E. Baird, Thos. Bellis, Wm. V. Nicum, Carl Sollinger and Mrs. E. Reed have been earnest workers in the missionary field. Wherever they have labored no one can complain of their zeal or earnestness of spirit in the discharge of their duties. Missionary work should be continuous, as has been shown by the past two years. It is the steady, persistent work that accomplishes the greatest amount of good.

I firmly believe in missionary work, and recommend more of it during the coming year. With the short circuit plan a worker can be engaged a full year by the state and instructed to devote his or her time to build up six or more societies within easy distance from each other. This can be done by frequent visits. We have proven the expense of traveling has been greatly reduced. The matter of compensation has been small, but will be adjusted in due time.

Missionaries can make the work self-supporting in a short time, and be able to aid the state. This plan will not drain the association of its resources, for the O. S. A. would only be called upon to meet small deficits.

I believe it would be more practicable and less expense if the N. S. A. would appoint one missionary in each state wherever a state organization exists, and co-operate with the state. You will see committee on president's report have done all we could to have this done at last convention.

I appeal to the convention for action upon this matter, and their delegate be instructed to further this plan in regard to missionary work for the coming year. I also recommend that more missionaries, rather than less, be put in the field for the coming year. I recommend that there be a fund set aside for missionary work, that localities may be reached where there are no local societies existing.

Our state association has accomplished much in the past two years, our conventions have been a success in many ways and well attended, the societies furnishing hall, entertainment to all speakers, mediums and delegates, except Columbus—they were not prepared for so many delegates; they estimated from conventions held at Columbus in previous years, where very little interest was manifested.

Local Societies.

The welfare of our cause depends on the local society. It is the duty of this convention to devise ways and means whereby more effective work may be accomplished. I recommend that each delegate present the needs of their society. Also what metnod they have found to be most practicable in sustaining their society and adding to its membership. The convention is the place where we could come as one family to adjust the errors and plan for the greater success for the coming year. In this way harmony will reign as it has with each society that has co-operated with the state, and become better acquainted with its workings. It is certain that our local societies must be sustained or our movement must go down. Fellow delegates, I ask your considerate action upon this matter.

It seems almost impossible to organize societies or lyceums at the present time, and as long as our Spiritualists are indifferent and feel that the little ones, also the older ones, desire to attend churches and Sunday-schools for society, our societies and lyceums are uncertain. They exist for a time and go down and people say, I have lost confidence in the Spiritualists ever having a substantial organization; stating we have had fine flourishing societies also lyceums, now we have no society whatever, have tried a number of times but proved unsuccessful. Delegates and Spiritualists, can you solve the problem? My appeal to the N. S. A. and O. S. A. last year in my special report published in The Progressive Thinker July 2, gave some of the reasons, and I have many others. One great reason, there is too much selfishness and a desire to obtain the dollar, that after a little, mediumship wanes and stock tests are resorted to, agents are established to furnish so-called tests with dates, names of the living, also of the departed.

There is another class who resort to developing others for one dollar a week or month, just as the case may be; the one to be developed sits at his own home and the medium sitting at the same time, or is supposed to, in his own home, the one that is to be developed must not tell anyone, but must sit quietly with the "motto" that is furnished by the medium; dwelling upon this motto in this way she or he is to be developed.

One lady that I became acquainted with had kept this up about one year. She was sitting for trumpet manifestations, the medium writing letters and giving her messages from her departed husband, the husband encouraging her to be patient and all would be well. She had paid her dollar but had received no development. This dear good woman was a widow and obliged to earn her own living. It was through a friend of hers that she was enlightened, and when I visited the city she called upon me to know what she should do. She had become convinced of Spiritualism through great suffering and knew some of its truths and of true mediumship; she looked at the cause as being so sacred and beautiful, that she could not think one would practice such deception. The question, can those mediums traveling around, sit at regular time; are they certain that they can develop another person, for different phases of mediumship? All that I have found so far have parted with their dollars and have very little mediumship, if any, developed through their teachers.

I have been accused of being down on "phenomena," and there are those who have tried to stop my work by influencing people who do not know just where I stand, and I repeat that every true medium has had my support and encouragement, I have assisted them in every way possible, whether physical or mental mediums. I know the facts in mental mediumship, also the physical, such as slate writing, etherealization, transfiguration, etc. I also know and have proof of the imitator and fakir, and that both classes of mediums have added to their mediumship by fraud. I positively know they are mediums, but so long as they will resort to such as above, I will never countenance such work; we either must protect our mediums that are true and faithful, leading a moral life, or give the cause over into the hands of the imitator and fakir and those who are willing to debauch their mediumship. It is they that have brought disaster and reproach upon our cause. I stand for true mediumship, first, last and for all the time. As for the imitator, I shall do in the future as I have in the past—let them severely alone.

Ordination.

We have had four that the evidence warranted granting of certificates of ordination, which will be given in the secretary's report. Other applicants were refused until the convention and the board would meet again. I believe each state secretary should be furnished with names of all speakers and mediums that have qualified with the requirements of the N. S. A. and the O. S. A.; it will serve as a protection to all societies. Each state co-operating, we will know who can assist our societies, instead of taking those who come and remain for a time and cause discord, inharmony and dissension in your societies.

What we need is more spirituality, and the cause at heart, instead of what we can make out of it in dollars and cents. See that your speakers and mediums have respect for themselves, and then they are certain to be a benefit to the cause and help our brothers and sisters to live the right life by requiring morality and true mediumship, and our local, state and N. S. A. will accomplish the great good that it has been desirous of, in this way we will retain our enlightened Spiritualists; they will no longer say, I know, but cannot affiliate with the so-called Spiritualists; they have no home, and if they do, they cannot keep it sacred; we are in fear to take our friends when we do not know who the Rev. or medium is that is advertised to serve the society. No wonder some of our tried and true Spiritualists will remain at home or go to other churches.

Lyceums.

There are several lyceums which are doing noble work; we wish that lyceums might be obtained in every society in the state. The children's lyceum is the very best place to train spiritual workers. The N. S. A. retains John W. Ring as National Lyceum Superintendent to be the right man in the right hi mto be the right man in the right place, one who understands lyceum work, also a good financier, the Progressive Lyceum is of great interest to all, as well as an educator. I would recommend that our missionaries co-operate with John W. Ring the coming year in establishing lyceums.

Being your delegate to the N. S. A. convention, I deemed it the wisest plan to send marked copies of The Progressive Thinker of the proceedings of the convention, to each local society, so they all might know in full what took place. Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. E. Baird, corresponded with a number of societies concerning mass-meetings. There are very few that thought it advisable at the present time. I would advise mass-meetings to be held jointly with the N. S. A. wherever practicable.

Pension Fund.

I recommend that a special fund be set aside, not less than $100 for our worthy mediums and indigent speakers, and wherever practical to reimburse said fund by at least one collection per year.

Spiritual Papers.

I wish to tender my sincere thanks to all spiritual and secular papers, who have aided us in our work of the year, especially to J. R. Francis of The Progressive Thinker, who rendered such noble assistance during the past years.

I recommend that the course of Bro. Francis be commended by this committee in the form of a resolution of hearty "thanks," with a pledge or loyal support in his good work for the coming years.

I now return to you the office which you intrusted to me; the outlook for our cause is promising, success awaits it at every turn providing the Spiritualists of our state will see the need of co-operation and make the state organization a power for good. I bespeak for my successor in office the support you have given me.

Hoping the O. S. A. may continue to grow in spirit and in truth and let us all work for the betterment of our cause. With this I close my annual report.

Wishing you success and Godspeed, I remain, fraternally yours,

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN,
President O. S. A.

Report of Committee.

To the Officers and Delegates Assembled of the O. S. A.—The committee on president's report endorse it as a whole most heartily.

We would especially recommend that you consider the clause of "Missionary Work," viz., "that the N. S. A. appoint a missionary in each state wherever a state organization exists."

That the sum of $50 be set aside for missionary work to be used to help indigent societies of the O. S. A.

That $100 be set aside for a pension fund to be used when necessary for our worthy and indigent mediums and speakers. We recommend that this convention discuss ways and means whereby more effective work be done in local societies. Also ways and means to eliminate the frauds which exist in our ranks, as suggested in our president's report.

We cheerfully approve of extending thanks to the Spiritualist and secular papers for their timely help, especially to our brother, J. R. Francis of The Progressive Thinker.

Therefore, Be it resolved, that we tender him a special vote of thanks for his untiring zeal in striving to eliminate the fraud from our ranks, and thus raising the Spiritualistic banner to a higher, purer standard.

Be it resolved, that this committee ask the convention to extend to our beloved president, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, their heartfelt thanks for her heroic efforts in presenting the truth in all its beauty, strength and purity.

Respectfully submitted,

OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings.

First service at Town Hall, Ashtabula, Ohio, Friday evening, May 26, 1905. Music—Chorus by the children; Invocation by Mrs. Anna E. Baird; Music—quartette—Mrs. Talcott, Miss Lottie Clark, Mr. Munsell, Mrs. A. Holcomb.

Short welcome address by John Wallace, president of the Psychic Research Society, Ashtabula, in which he turned the meeting over to the president of the O. S. A., Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, who in turn introduced Mayor McMillan of Ashtabula, to give the address of welcome to the officers, delegates and visitors to the city of Ashtabula.

Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran responded. She spoke of Mayor Jones of Toledo in comparison with Mayor McMillan. The people of Ashtabula were very fortunate and could be proud to have a gentleman at the head of their municipality who believed in something more than faith, and who assisted in the growth of the brotherhood of man. She expressed her desire that our stay in this city be pleasant to all; that we all belong to one great family, even if we differ in opinion, differ in our thoughts. May we all grow to understand the laws to love one another.

Then the sweet spiritual songstress, Miss Edna Grant, of Conneaut, gave a solo with encore which vibrated to the soul of everyone present.

Then Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the Illinois State Association, and president of the W. C. T. U. was introduced, delivering an excellent address. She spoke at length, that the greatest battles are not fought on battlefields; they are fought in the hearts of mankind. The noblest work man can do is to help one another. "Bear ye one another's burden." There will be no warriors to fight her battles, but the world is marching on to a higher settlement of peace, and justice to prevail. At present you pay unholy tribute to the trusts. If you want meat you pay or starve. If you want coal you pay or freeze, and so forth—but better times are coming. There will be more knowledge. You will not say one church, not one religion, but "Religion." All will listen then to the beautiful music in the spheres. Your children through knowledge shall have a better understanding about spirituality, and the question of welfare of the people shall predominate. Spiritualism answers to reason and science. It has been manna to the hungry, and drink to the thirsty. We welcome you to struggle on to victory. We are all going home together.

A special delivery letter was received by the president from Mrs. Jones and family, of Toledo, thanking the association for the beautiful floral tribute sent to their father.

Messages by Mrs. E. Schauss, followed by Mr. Thos. Bellis, which were all recognized.

Benediction.

Saturday evening, May 27.—Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the first speaker of the evening, said in part: Churches teach you to have faith, but Spiritualism cares not what you believe, but asks you what you know. Spiritualism asks you what kind of life you are leading. Nature warns everyone of wine which sparkles in the cup, as it always destroys the reasoning power of the brain, which is the seat of thought. Many have there imbedded a little naggy weed. Pull it out, it is called worry, and instead find the little flower of contentment. It is the first step to happiness. Nature's way is struggle, and struggle is the way to progress and perfection. Compare the human life with a flower garden. If flowers have all sunshine they shrivel and lose their vitality. They must have rain to hold root and perfume. Just so with man through struggle and hardship. You reach progress, you reach the top of the ladder Happiness.

Second speaker, Dr. G. B. Warne. His remarks were on the different ideas prevailing in spiritual philosophy. How could it be otherwise. It took the churches two hundred and twenty-five years to settle the question, when and how to celebrate Easter. It took hundreds of years to eradicate other errors from the Christian teachings. It was lawful to lie to promote religion, even commendable. The same process that cleared the Christian teachings, will clear Spiritualism; give us time. If I had the choice of choosing a text book, I would choose the bible, as it is not alone the father of Christianity, it preaches Spiritualism as well.

The founders of the Christian church were true believers in Spiritualism. The truth is universal, and can not be monopolized.

Collection taken, $8.59.

Mrs. Dr. Caird of Boston, said the people in Ohio were very fortunate as there are more liberal laws than in Massachusetts. There the old Puritan blue laws are still in existence. A minister of the gospel of Spiritualism has no right according to law to perform the marriage ceremony. A man has the right to whip his wife or duck her under water, if she tells a lie, but has no right to kiss her on Sunday. She then gave messages, all of them being recognized.

Sunday, May 28—Morning Service. Ordination of four candidates to the ministry: Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, O.; Mrs. Anne E. Baird, of Elyria, O.; Mrs. Hattie G. Webster of Columbus, O.; Mr. Harry E. Boerstler, of Columbus, O. The beautiful services were conducted by the president, Rev. Carrie Firth Curran, using the ritual of the National Association.

Short addresses by the new ministers were well received. Brother Boerstler brought out the point: You are always told to be good, but be good for something.

Dr. Warne here thanked the people of Ashtabula. In his closing remarks he raised the question if the other churches could drop all from their roster who believed in the continuity of life and the intercommunion of the two spheres, how many would be left?

At the close of the morning meeting the delegates and visitors from Conneaut, Geneva, and other places, about one hundred, partook of a big chicken dinner, which was served in the G. A. R. Hall, and did credit to the reputation of Ashtabula Ladies Aid culinary artists. A pleasing event of the convention transpired during this dinner hour, wishing to express their appreciation of the good and faithful work of the out-going president, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran during her term of office. It had been decided to bestow upon her a little remembrance which she might retain longer than a formal vote of thanks, and to that end the delegates and others who were disposed to assist, purchased a handsome water pitcher, and a gold pin, which were presented to Mrs. Curran at the dinner by Dr. C. W. Haines; Mrs. Hattie G. Webster, Dr. C. W. Haines making a suitable address. Mrs. Curran was so overcome by the surprise, that her emotion would not admit of voicing her thanks, and she requested Dr. G. B. Warne to express her appreciation for her.

Sunday, May 28—Afternoon session. After reading a poem, Dr. C. W. Haines addressed the meeting.

Lecture by Fred D. Dunakin: We are united because we cannot help it. We are born again in a new spiritual life every time we meet. We are now on the first step of spiritual progress.

Dr. Warne in a short comical address, prepared the audience that a collection was to be taken by the ladies, Mrs. Bonney, Mrs. Gay, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Pope and Mrs. Haines, which resulted in $16.

Messages were then given by Mrs. E. Schauss, and Mrs. Dr. Caird, which were all recognized.

Sunday, May 28—Evening service. Lecture by Dr. G. B. Warne. He said: Much is given to us as Spiritualists, and much is expected of us. He recited at length ancient historical facts of the misbelieve and misconstruction of the Christian teachings. The purity of Spiritualism is in our own keeping. The church teachings of immortality ends either in paradise or the opposite place. Spiritualism teaches progression. No one is condemned. Everyone will sooner or later realize this fact. All former philosophers, poets and other great thinkers, Cicero, Socrates, Franklin, our own Emerson, Shakspeare, Schiller, Goethe, believed in a future life and in immortality, dwelled on the church teachings of hell. Ask the Spiritualists if they realize what fate we have escaped.

Messages by Mrs. Anna E. Baird and Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, which were all recognized.

Brother John Wallace thanked the officers, delegates, visitors, and the people of Ashtabula for the kindness shown the Psychic Research Society; spoke of conditions and prospects of the local society.

After benediction, all were dismissed by the president, to meet again in Cleveland, May, 1906.

C. A. SOLLINGER,
Secretary O. S. A.

Kansas State Association.

To the Editor:—I herewith subtend you the following report of the Kansas State Spiritualist Association, held at Topeka, Kansas, on June 2 to 4 inclusive, a most enjoyable reception of delegates being held on the evening preceding commencement of the convention at the residence of A. Scott Bledsoe of 507 Horn street, Topeka. About 110 guests were present.

According to the constitution the meeting was called to order by President Bledsoe. After the transaction of the necessary business, including the election of officers, at which time Mr. Bledsoe was elected for the fourth consecutive term, the audience was treated daily with tests and lectures from the platform by the following mediums, whom the Kansas Spiritualists know to be thoroughly honest, capable and able to fulfill the requirements devolved upon them as such, Mrs. Bellman, Mrs. Brewer, Mrs. Sallie W. Aber, W. W. Aber, Mrs. Wagner, and Mr. and Mrs. Bledsoe. The convention occupied the best hall in the city, and at each evening meeting extra seats had to be provided.

Complete harmony prevailed throughout and the interest and enthusiasm stood out as a prime factor. Aside from the unanimous election of Mr. Bledsoe the following were duly elected: Mrs. Bellman, vice-president; W. G. Fairchild, secretary, and Judge Tucker, treasurer.

Resolved, By all the delegates here in this convention assembled, that it is the sense, desire and obligation of all good and true Spiritualists throughout the United States, to promulgate and spread the truths of Spiritualism and endeavor to do so by any honest and sacred means. And be it further

Resolved, That we place our banner of light and truth, the Gibraltar of eternal right and justice, so high that no storm, however strong and terrible, might break asunder the staff on which rests the fabric woven by the unseen hands. And be it further

Resolved, That the Spiritualists of the state of Kansas are a free and independent people, able entirely to administer to the wants and needs of her church and of her mediums and does not want or expect the offered intervention of any outside power. And be it further

Resolved, That complete and unadulterated harmony does exist among all the Spiritualists of this, our glorious state of Kansas, even to its uttermost corners. And be it further

Resolved, That this convention as a body and individually stands firm in its advocacy and support of all phases of honest mediumship and all honest mediums and this convention here assembled announces to the people of Kansas and to the world this most solemn fact. And be it further

Resolved, That this convention extends thanks to the Ladies Club of the First Church of Topeka for their untiring efforts for the success of our cause, and also thanks of appreciation to the newspapers of the city of Topeka and throughout the state.

ORTHODOX HELL.

Among papers which I picked up in war times I found the following clipping, which later I had reprinted by the late S. S. Foss, and which, being out of print now, I again pass to the printer.

R. A. NILES.

Orthodoxy's getting shaky;
Hell is losing half its charms;
Beecher stole the devil's brimstone,
Churches all are in alarm.

Hell was once a lake infernal,
Past description, past all names,
Where the damned must roast eternal,
In those lurid brimstone flames.

Hell, of late, though its getting shorter,
Cooling off, too—beats the deuce;
Likewise brimstone, once so plenty,
Now is nearly out of use.

Not long since hell swarmed with infants
Doomed to burn by God's decree,
Just because old Eve stole apples
Off the devil's knowledge tree.

Later still, divines went searching
Hell all through with anxious care,
Gave the hunt up quite discouraged—
Not the first damned baby there.

Fact is, hell's a grand old humbug;
Poor old Satan's most played out;
Orthodoxy's out of brimstone;
Hell's fast going "up the spout."

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

Some Serious Errors Indicated

Wherein Spiritualists and Mediums Fail to Secure Their Best Good.

It doubtless would be amusing, were it not so pitiful, to consider the vast number of conscientious though ill-informed Spiritualists who are ever looking to the spirit world with the futile desire that someone from that side of life will reveal to them the quick and easy road to wealth, or place within their passive hands some other longed-for prize.

Let me here remark that it is by no means my purpose unsympathetically to criticise those upon whom fortune has failed to smile, so enshrouding their lives in gloom and uncertainty, until, with apparently no hope this side of heaven, they beseech those in the spirit world for comfort and for aid. I do not censure those who do the best they can and only call for help when alone they are unequal to what is before them.

I intend no sweeping denunciation of all who seek counsel with spirits; only I wish to enforce this truth:

Spiritual beings of a superior nature watch with interest our every effort; they are always ready with helpful advice when we have tried as best we could to do our part and do it well; but for the person who depends more on them than on himself, and makes but an indifferent effort to succeed, they have only commiseration, at times presumably allied with contempt.

Though you seek not, you may rest assured that if you do your duty well as possible in divers ways help and inspiration will come to you, bringing comfort and success. Practice depending but little on your own powers, surrendering the management of your affairs almost entirely to decarnate spirits perhaps no wiser than yourself, and you are quite sure in the end to come to grief.

The unreasoning persistence with which so many people consult mediums about earthly matters of no particular moment has done incalculable harm to our mediums and their guides, to those who consult them, and also to the cause of Spiritualism.

It is an injury to the mediums because to give advice regarding material matters takes the time that should be spent in gaining and imparting a knowledge of spiritual things; and to the guides because it attracts them to earth and prevents them from progressing spiritually so fast as they otherwise would. Mediums who cater to those who desire only business advice seldom show any exceptional ability in other matters; their time being so much taken up with material considerations, all the better phases of mediumship that might, with attention, be developed, are neglected. For that highest development of mediumship, which fills by teaching us to build from the foundation of things spiritual and eternal, too much attention cannot be given the earthly affairs and troubles of mortals.

"The soul's vague longing—
The aching void which nothing earthly fills"

Surely in planning the work that Spiritualism should do, the spirit world never intended its mediums to act as business advisers. Though there are exceptions, as a general rule a medium's proper work is ministering to spiritual needs. Granted that people's spiritual welfare depends largely upon their material surroundings, and that often the two are bound inextricably together, so that a medium is obliged to consider both, yet this does not alter the fact that the spiritual should be given precedence, and the material only considered in so far as it affects the development of the spirit.

Neither can it be denied that there is a large and growing number of mediums who give but scant attention to the spiritual welfare of those who come to them, seemingly thinking that if they can advise them so far as this world's interests are concerned they have done their duty. Thus are many mediums negligent in taking advantage of their opportunities to further the interests of Spiritualism. Thus do they also hinder their own and their guides' advancement.

And the effect upon the Spiritualist or investigator who patronizes mediums because of trifles is equally harmful. To commune with spirits of an advanced order you must prove yourself worthy of the honor by striving to leave earth behind and to approach the plane on which they live.

"In vain shalt thou, or any, call
The spirits from their golden day,
Except, like them, thou, too, canst say,
My spirit is at peace with all."

The natural result of telling your common troubles to a medium and seeking advice when you don't need it is to destroy self-confidence and to create a feeling of dependence that is inimical to individual effort and aspiration. People who cannot make a move of any consequence without consulting a medium about it seldom attain any large measure of success in life. But he who exercises his own mind, and strives through his own efforts to find a satisfactory solution of whatever problem confronts him will unconsciously receive help from the spirit side of life—help that in most instances will be found more reliable than that given through a professional medium, for the obvious reason that in the former case your own guides will give the information direct to you, while in the latter instance it must pass from your guides to those of the medium, and then, after it has been transmitted to the medium, you receive it with the possibility of alteration or mistake in transmission.

An old adage has it that "God helps those who try to help themselves." The modern version, that every Spiritualist should take for a motto, is that "Spirits help those who try to help themselves."

The damage that has resulted to the cause of Spiritualism from this attempt to turn over to the care of spirits affairs of concern only to mortals, would be hard to compute. Verily, from "a cloud no larger than a man's hand," it has gradually grown, until now, in the minds of many, the true meaning of Spiritualism is entirely obscured, and a medium, instead of a mediator between spirit and mortal, is considered a living encyclopedia that will answer correctly any question concerning any subject that it is desired to know about. So there gradually has been generated among outsiders a feeling that a Spiritualist medium is in the same rank with traveling palmists and gypsy fortune-tellers.

Serving to accentuate this impression of unreliability, there are many individuals traveling about the country claiming wonderful mediumistic powers, and promising to remove all troubles, financial or otherwise, or do other impossible things. When genuine mediums, though on a lesser scale and without false pretense, try to do similar things, many times they are classed with the pretenders. Mediums, no less than other people, are known by the company they keep, and if they choose to follow the path of least resistance and give, not the spiritual help and instruction that is needed, but the commercial advice that is desired, it should occasion no surprise if the casual spectator classes them with the fakes, for it often takes a practiced eye to see the difference.

Unsatisfying though it would be to many, and working hardship for the mediums through the consequent withholding of patronage, Spiritualism would gain an added prestige and a greater degree of usefulness if its mediums were to make theirs more of a religious calling than many of them do at present. A class of people would be attracted who would take a deeper interest in the cause than does the average phenomenal Spiritualist; the frauds would be unable successfully to follow the genuine mediums into this field where the phenomena are used for the elucidation of the philosophy, for those upon whom they rely for support would stay behind (people who can think and analyze a subject don't unconsciously support the frauds); with the result that soon the better class of mediums would have as large and remunerative a following as they have under the present system, where other things come first and religion comes last.

As well that we stop here to enquire who are to blame that conditions are as we find them, and what can be done about it.

The fault lies not so much with the mediums as with those who patronize them, seeking what it often is not best to give. Mediumship, fraud-ridden as we find it, is so only because of the gambling instinct that causes so many to demand more than can legitimately be given. And if mediumship—genuine mediumship—has developed along lines less religious than we should like, the same cause must be ascribed. Necessarily the remedy depends not altogether on the mediums—though to a great extent they can determine what they shall and shall not give, they and their guides are nonetheless more or less influenced by the demands made upon them by mortals. And so, on ultimate analysis, we find the solution of the difficulty to be mainly consequent on a change in the attitude and action of those who consult mediums for selfish reasons.

To bring about this change is difficult; some may say impossible. But, though difficult, it is not impossible. Inculcate a proper ideal, and by insensible degrees practice will be made to conform to it. Persistently teach self-reliance, and fewer weak-willed individuals will be met with; whereas continually to talk about the necessity for dependence and the danger of becoming self-centered is to create in the pliant mind a feeling of timidity that is a hindrance to proper development and effective work. Let enlightened Spiritualists dwell more upon the religious significance of Spiritualism, and less upon the earthly benefits it confers—encouraging mediumship for the spiritual instruction it gives, discouraging its application to selfish ends—and ultimately public opinion will come to consider mediumship more of a religious institution, and mediums will not so often be asked to exercise their gifts to useless or harmful ends.

Spiritualism, to a greater extent than we usually realize, is what we make it. For the spirit world to accomplish anything worth while without the co-operation of mortal man is extremely slow and tedious work. Their activity and purpose cannot counteract our apathy and indifference. If Spiritualism ever fulfills its possibilities and accomplishes its needful work, it will be when we do our part with the enthusiasm and the thoroughness that enlightened spirits do theirs.

"Are some of us who call ourselves Spiritualists," pertinently inquires the Banner of Light, "so busy forming psychic circles for silent work, or success clubs to enable us to become suddenly rich by psychic powers, or so busy consulting spirits about stocks and bonds, corner lot investments, divorces and marryings, are some of us so busy over these matters that we have neither inclination nor time to consider that if we are to maintain our place among reformers we must put aside all playing at being Spiritualists, cease running after spirits for worldly gain, and boldly say we are with the toilers in their struggles for better things, with the ignorant for clearer knowledge, with the oppressed in their struggles for freedom, with the spiritually misled in their desire for right guidance."

It is to be feared that there is far greater danger of harm resulting to the cause of Spiritualism from the mistaken notions of mortals than from the evil actions of obsessing spirits. Because of these mistaken ideas so widely and tenaciously held, spirits not in harmony with themselves or with nature are often attracted. If all Spiritualists were right-minded and entertained only high ideals, obsession among us would be quite unknown.

These mistakes, so briefly referred to in the foregoing paragraphs, with others merely hinted at or else unmentioned, are the results of ignorance. The specific is knowledge: ceaselessly try to instruct the beginner to start aright by cultivating an approximately correct idea of the purpose of Spiritualism and what is demanded of the person who would give strict adherence to its principles. In other words, learn what it means to be a Spiritualist in all that the word implies, and then—consider that knowledge is something the more of it you impart to others the more you still will have. The average investigator is not so dense but that, if in error and shown the advantage of a change, he will alter his course. And none are so barren of talent or persuasiveness but that in some small way they can help toward better things.

New York Spiritualists

NINTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the New York State Association of Spiritualists.

The ninth annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists was held at Syracuse, N. Y., June 2, 3 and 4, 1905, in Empire Hall. Convention was opened by President Richardson in the chair; an invocation by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds. A large number of delegates were present and all seemed filled with the spirit of harmony and enthusiasm.

Usual committees were appointed and an address of welcome was made by Dr. Butterfield, responded to by H. W. Richardson.

The reports of the president, secretary and treasurer were read and referred to the various committees, also report of the state missionary.

Secretary H. L. Whitney introduced a resolution that a committee be appointed to revise that article of Section 9, which demands that the executive board shall appoint a delegate for any society which shall fail to appoint a delegate to the National convention and also to pay two dollars for each delegate. Resolution was carried and the following committee appointed to revise that section of the by-laws: Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, W. W. Kelsey, with H. L. Whitney, chairman.

Amendment committee also recommended that the president shall call the attention of the convention to the by-laws on revenue and Section 7 of Constitution on membership, and that the convention pass a resolution that, commencing at the next convention, no society shall vote any member at convention unless the secretary of that society has sent the name and address of each member to the state secretary as having paid per capita tax for that year as demanded by our by-laws and constitution. Motion adopted.

The following reports will be read with pleasure:

Report of the Committee on the President's Message.

Missionary Work.—Your committee heartily concur with the president's estimate of our sister, Mrs. Reynolds' in her missionary work, and feel that we cannot appreciate too much her self-denying and arduous work; and we also quite agree with him that missionary work should be extended as rapidly as our finances will warrant.

Mass-meetings.—We feel that every society should consider it their duty to do all that is possible to assist the committee on mass-meetings to make it possible for many more to be held in the state, as they are of much value in disseminating the truths of our religion, and also to use their influence in having state days at our camps.

Children's Lyceums.—We fully concur with our president in his report on lyceum work, and also with Mrs. Reynolds' efforts that she has put forth to create a greater interest in the work.

Local Societies.—We fully agree with our president in the need of being awakened to such a degree of enthusiasm that the pocketbooks may be touched more readily and our religion not languish for financial support, and also that the growth of our societies may not be retarded because of friction and discord that tears down the work of years. The recommendation to devote one or two meetings per month, where the local workers and members take charge of the exercises and discuss topics of interest is a something in the way of growth, which is sadly needed, and your committee fully agree with the recommendation.

Christian Science.—The president's idea of making our religion so plain and full of old thoughts and new thoughts, that our members will not feel like being gathered into other folds, seems to be an imperative duty to all interested. The recommendation to remember that Spiritualism is a broadgauge religion, and that the phenomena are a stepping stone to the broader fields of spiritual unfoldment, should awaken the desire in our minds to live the real life spiritually and in all ways.

Settled Speakers.—We concur with our president in regard to settled speakers where the finances of a society will admit. We fully agree with our president in his report, and would like to impress upon the minds of this convention, that if we wish the support of the New York State Convention of Spiritualists, in the hour of need, we must strive earnestly to work in harmony, and do all in our power to further its interest.

GERTRUDE MUDGE,
Chairwoman,

J. H. R. MATTESON.

Report of Committee on Resolutions.

To the convention in assembly, greeting, good will, peace born of contentment and happiness resulting from useful activity. Be it resolved, that as Spiritualists it is our duty to openly advocate the truths of Spiritualism and so regulate our daily lives that all just criticism shall be of the type commanding the respect and admiration of the world at large, that our words shall but reiterate our lives, never proving a travesty on our acts.

Resolved, that we would strongly recommend every society to distribute among their members and follows, the declaration of principles adopted by the New York State Association, also that the declaration shall be read from the rostrums at one meeting each month of the yearly session.

Resolved, that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists Association, and to his talented wife in their double bereavement, praying that everyconsolation may be afforded them; knowing that the spirit world will be their comforting stay, we can only unite with the unseen by our prayers, our tender affection and our deep sympathy.

Be it further resolved, that we extend sympathy to all in our ranks who have been bereft of the earthly presence of their beloved. In loving gratitude, we acknowledge the presence, guidance and aid of our arisen co-laborers, and hold them in hallowed memory.

As the results manifested in some of the students of the Morris Pratt Institute, show the marvelous effect of education,

Therefore, be it resolved, that we emphasize the need of education, both rudimentary and along the lines of psychic and advanced thought principles. The crying sin of child labor as practiced all through our land, but more especially in the southern states, calls for more determined effort to crush out the monster evil. Resolved that it is the duty of Spiritualists to work more earnestly and judiciously in the lines of legislation to bring about the desired reform in this broad field of duty.

The day has dawned when the standard of moral purity for man should be as severe as that exacted of woman. Resolved that we commend the strenuous effort to make the degree of requirement the same in both sexes. We deplore the elevation of man stemmed in drugs or immorality—while woman is shunned and condemned for the same conditions. Let us face the facts and do all in our power to make the standard of judgment impartial and just.

Woman Suffrage.—Equal rights for men and women is a subject of vital importance too often treated flippantly—rarely accorded fair consideration.

Resolved that it is the duty of Spiritualists to inform themselves definitely upon this question, that they may act intelligently and speed the time when the ballot shall be given to all regardless of sex. Resolved that it is the sense of this convention that woman is not only entitled to a voice in making the laws which she must obey, but that she is qualified to stand side by side with man in every avenue of life. To bear her share of labor, distinction or ignominy, as the case may be.

Temperance.—Resolved that as an intelligent body of representative Spiritualists we note with anxiety the increasing tide of intemperance affecting almost every degree of like habit. We should earnestly endeavor to awaken those addicted to forms of intemperance,—whether pertaining to beverage, food, speech or undue indulgences of any kind whatsoever; to the danger in their pathway, and by every available judicious measure strive to win to reform all thus endangered.

Resolved that we place on record our continued sentiment against war and in favor of arbitration. It is the duty of every true Spiritualist to use his or her influence to bring about peace in all lands and in the hearts of all individuals—beginning at home.

Resolved that we commend the bravery of Admiral Togo and other high officials in the army and navy of Japan, for openly advocating their sacred belief in the direct aid of their spirit ancestors; avowing that their success is due to the protection of spirits, all this in the face of the fact that their words are to be read by the entire world of civilization, and knowing that the masses will thoughtlessly jeer or ignorantly criticise.

We deplore the manner of the many, who having become convinced of the truths of immortality, who know that their loved ones released from mortal life still live, become selfishly satisfied and hold themselves aloof from the cause, so far as acting goes. Therefore, be it resolved, that we strongly emphasize the need of all who know the truth to encourage the beginners in holding aloft the Banner of Truth, that the outside world may learn that the benefits accruing of such knowledge—all Spiritualists should give the right hand of fellowship to honest means as well as their financial support. Also show interest in our society not only by attendance but in material aid to the extent of their ability.

Resolved, that we will unite in efforts to repeal the tyrannical laws of our state enacted in the interest of the medical profession. Also with alert vigilance we will so far as possible, prevent the further enactment of such laws. Furthermore, we pledge our loyalty, protection and support to all genuine mediums who may fall victims to the unjust laws now upon our statute books, or hereinafter to be thus recorded.

Building for the future through lyceum work, it is among the most important factors for the consideration of this convention.

Therefore, be it resolved, that as much depends upon the attitude of prominent workers towards the establishment and maintainance of lyceums throughout our state, that it shall be the bounden duty of all public advocates of our grand cause to bring before their followers the importance of the correct guidance of the young, while their minds are plastic, during the period when impressions are made so strong that many of them last forever. It is well said by the Catholic church: "Give me the child the first seven years, and you may have the rest of his life."

Resolved, that by this act we gratefully acknowledge the courtesy and fairness of the press, both spiritual and secular, giving us so much space in their popularly crowded columns.

Resolved that the thanks of this convention are due and are hereby tendered to the officers and trustees of the New York State Association of Spiritualists for their earnest efforts towards the success of the association. Also to all who have so kindly assisted in making this convention a success and a red letter day in memory. We also tender our thanks to Miss Victoria C. Moore, for her efficient service in making our convention so attractive and entertaining. For comfortable accommodations, efficient service and genial courtesy, we thank Messrs. Hickok & Smith of the Empire House. To Professor Marsh we tender our grateful acknowledgment for the delightful music—carefully selected and artistically rendered.

For the advancement made during the year, for the unanimity of thoughtful desire in carrying forward the good work, for all our blessings, some of them in disguise, we are truly thankful, and be it resolved, that we will carry from this convocation only good will, earnest purpose and unprejudiced judgment.

HARRIET M. RATHBURN,
Chairwoman.
TILLIE U. REYNOLDS.
LAURA A. HOLT.

The convention adopted a resolution that the next convention should be held at Buffalo, N. Y., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of the first week in June, 1906.

The convention by resolution of Mrs. E. M. Travis, the assistant secretary, offered a vote of thanks to the officers and board of trustees for their efficient services for the past year.

The officers and trustees elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President, H. W. Richardson, East Aurora; vice-president, Mrs. Carrie E. Stwing, Westfield, N. Y.; second vice-president, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, Troy, N. Y.; secretary, Herbert L. Whitney, Brooklyn, N. Y.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet M. Rathbun, Fort Washington, N. Y. Trustees, Mrs. Laura A. Holt, West Potsdam, N. Y.; Mrs. Lewis Duhl, Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mr. J. W. Stearns, Buffalo, N. Y.

Among the speakers of the convention were H. W. Richardson, Mrs. C. E. S. Twing, Mrs. T. U. Reynolds, Mrs. L. A. Holt, Miss Sarah Woodruff, Mrs. G. Mudge, Dr. E. F. Butterfield, Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, Mrs. A. R. Cooper, W. W. Kelsey, Mrs. E. M. Travis, Mrs. Emerson, Mrs. Thatcher, Mrs. M. Arnold, H. L. Whitney, Mrs. J. Grant, Charles Hulburt, Mrs. H. Duhl, Mrs. H. M. Rathbun, E. G. Riley, Mrs. Jennings, Miss Faulkner, Mr. Underhill and Mrs. Fargo.

Miss Victoria Moore of Dryden, N. Y., the talented elocutionist, favored the convention from time to time with literary selections. Prof. G. L. Marsh furnished the music.

Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson of Buffalo, N. Y., one of new trustees, donated one hundred dollars to be used for the missionary work for the coming year. One hundred and twenty-three dollars and fifty-one cents was donated for the general fund.

One of the great surprises to the convention was the remarkably fine address delivered by the guide of Mrs. E. M. Travis of Hornellsville, N. Y., Sunday afternoon, June 4.

Total expense	921.18
	$ 431.75

Now in conclusion we feel that the ninth annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists has proven an unbounded success in every way.

A Lesson From a Lesson.

Some Bible Literature Worthy of Consideration.

The Rev. John Lindsay Withrow, who was former pastor of a church not far from the office of The Progressive Thinker, is nothing if not soundly orthodox in his religious views, and his methods of Bible interpretation and teachings.

His "Lessons for Sunday," widely published in the secular and religious press, are orthodox to the backbone, the sinews and the marrow, and present a fair sample of orthodox ratiocination, orthodox reasoning, orthodox logic, and style of proofs to sustain orthodox teachings. For these reasons his "lesson" furnishes a good subject for another lesson, for the delectation of non-orthodox readers. And that we may be fair, we present his "Lesson" in full, scripture and all:

Topic: "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ."

(For Sunday, June 4, 1905.)

But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping; and as she wept she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre.

And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

And when she had thus said, she turned herself back and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardner, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself and saith unto him. Rabboni: which is to say, Master.

Jesus saith unto her. Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God.

Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord and that he had spoken these things unto her.

Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

And when he had so said he shewed unto them his hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord.

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

And when he had said this he breathed on them and saith unto them, Receive you the Holy Ghost.

Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained.

Proof That Jesus Rose.

No historical statement in holy scripture is more buttressed with proofs than the proclamation that Jesus rose from the dead after they of Jerusalem had crucified and entombed Him. The arguments are both cumulative and convincing. Before all else we are assured that He rose by considering the weakness of the arguments that have been adduced to show that He did not rise. Of all that class let us review two.

First, we refer to the story of the disciples having stolen the body. We see the absurdity of this story at a glance. For what possible element of truth can there be in it, seeing Christ's disciples all forsook Him and fled Thursday night out in Gethsemane. Not one, except, John, was visible Friday at the crucifixion. Is it thinkable that in the night of Saturday they would venture out to the sepulchre knowing, as doubtless it was generally known, that a guard of Roman soldiers was there for the ordered purpose of preventing grave robbery?

The other scheme for accounting for only an imaginary or visionary resurrection is to say that some time subsequent to the death of Jesus one of His former disciples met another and incidentally asked him if he had heard anything of Jesus having risen. Suppose he answered, No! "Well, I have have," the other might say. Presently one of these might meet a third, and the same matter is mooted, and thus the story could easily take shape and the fable become a fact of faith. Thus our critics construct the vision theory and make a plausible showing. But that it is as baseless as the fabric of a dream we discover by this that the appearance of Jesus was not that of a ghost coming to view and vanishing at once.

Bible Foretells Event.

Passing now from the doubter to such disciples of Jesus as rejoice in the belief that the crucified did rise in bodily form from the dead, what are unanswerable arguments in support of the fact? The Bible prophesies it, proclaims it and proves it. The suffering Servant of God in prophetic scriptures was to be victor over death; "thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol. Neither wilt suffer thine holy one to see corruption."

Tear out of the sacred record all it has concerning resurrection and what a tattered remnant would remain. But, more than any other part, the pages from which the gospel of Christ's resurrection were rended would be left a ragtag. Let us note how much pruning would be required to rid the book of massive evidence that He did rise.

There are eleven appearances between the dates of His resurrection and His ascension, (1) to Mary Magdalene alone, (2) to certain women returning from the sepulchre, (3) to Simon Peter alone, (4) to two disciples as they walked to Emmaus, (5) to ten apostles in Jerusalem, Thomas being absent; (6) to eleven apostles, Thomas being present; (7) to seven disciples fishing in the Lake of Galilee, (8) to eleven disciples on a mountain, (9) to above 500 brethren at once, (10) to James only, and (11) to all the apostles on the Mount of Olives, whence He ascended to heaven.

Now is there room for rational belief that on each and all these occasions the friends of Christ only imagined they saw Him? He talked with them. He invited doubting Thomas to place his finger in the scar the spear left in his side; and that skeptical disciple cried out, "My Lord and my God." Jesus also spoke with Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre.

Mary Magdalene Watched.

It has been said, with reason, I think, that more than any human being, after his blessed mother Mary, Mary Magdalene loved Jesus. She was last at the cross. She attentively and tearfully watched where they laid Him. She was so eagerly anxious for any development of events that "while it was yet dark" on that morning of the third day came Mary Magdalene to the grave. She could not remain away.

Is it probable, or within the possible, that she did not know Jesus from a ghost? And if we admit that at her first look she knew not that it was Jesus" was it anything different from experiences that most of us have had? But when Jesus saith unto her, Mary, she turned herself and saith unto Him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master. Presently Mary, the virgin mother, came, and who will lay a lie at the lips of that holy woman. Who will guess she did not know her holy son?

Accepting the certainty of the resurrection of Jesus as settled, is there not ground on which to rest many of the most blessed truths? We are on solid ground of faith that Jesus was the Messiah promised many ages before His epiphany. The Jesus of the gospels is as closely fitted to the Messiah of the Old Testament as a photograph is to the face of which it is a likeness.

Another fact we infer from satisfied faith that Jesus did rise, the fact that death does not end all. Immortality holds our hearts to endless motion—not in the pumping valves, but in the heating life. What, then, shall it be that will make immortality enviable? This, that we shall see, know and sing the praises of Jesus forever and forever; that there the highest and holiest loves of our earthly relationships shall be resumed and enlarged, and filled with experiences ineffable.

Then, too, we have right to infer from the resurrection of Jesus that there will be no more trials, troubles, tears in resurrection life.

JOHN LINDSAY WITHROW.
Park Street Church, Boston.

There you have it! The negative proofs and the positive proofs—cumulative at that—Pelion upon Ossa—so to speak—and inexpugnable to the mind drilled and crystallized into the orthodox style of logic and orthodox quality of proofs.

The learned and very orthodox Rev. Dr's. method is as easy as rolling off a log—if you don't mind the jolt. He simply proves one "verse" of "scripture" true by quoting another verse of "scripture"—proves bible by bible—and that settles the whole matter—according to the orthodox mind.

There is one reason for this method: It consists in the fact that there is no testimony to establish the validity of these proofs, to be found in any contemporary historical records. And if these things actually occurred, it is strange that matters of such remarkable import should wholly escape the notice of Roman and other writers who must surely have heard of them if they really transpired at the times stated.

It is decidedly a case where proof of the proofs is required, to establish real value to them.

The vaunted "solid ground of faith," of the learned Doctor, is simply "faith"—faith alone—"satisfied faith—" satisfied without any real proof. It is virtually: I believe it because I believe it—that is my evidence of its truth. My faith is my proof.

"Faith" is the evidence that the physical body of Jesus, wounds and all, was raised to physical life from actual death. Aside from "faith," there is no evidence that such resurrection ever occurred.

OUR DEAD.

Dead? We call them dead,
But there are no dead.
They who were our earthly friends,
They whom we loved most dear,
Are not dead.
That which was earthly
Has to the earth returned,
But they have ascended to
A higher, better life.
And, living, greet us
From the other shore.
Dead? No not dead,
But born again,
And in the world of spirits
They are still ours,
And cling more closely to us
Than while in earth life
We with these earthly eyes
Beheld their earthly forms.
Dead? No, not dead.
There are no dead,
But resurrected from the earthly tomb
(the earthly body)
The immortal life lives on,
And on, into eternity.
Then mourn we not for them as dead.
But in memory hold them ever near.
And as we decorate their graves with flowers
Remindful of the love we bear,
We will turn a loving thought
To them in spirit life, and
Ask that on us, they their blessings shed,
With flowers eternal from their homes above.

Have You Asthma in Any Form?

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous, therefore this remedy is of the most vital interest to Asthmatic sufferers.

Mr. Thos. Phillips, No, 207 Middle St., Pawtucket, R. I., writes May 9th, I thank God and the Kola Importing Co., for my cure of Asthma after I had given up hopes of getting cured. Mrs. Peggie Gardner, of Ackworth, Iowa, writes May 6th, suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief, but the Kola Compound permanently cured me. Mr. C. J. Case, Johnsonville, N. Y., writes May 5th, the Kola Compound proved a God send to me, as it cured me of Asthma in the worst form, and I had suffered with it from childhood. Mr. E. Aldrich, 391 Mill St., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a prominent citizen, writes, my son suffered with Asthma for seven years, Doctors could do nothing for him, and to save his life advised me to take him to Denver, Colo. A friend advised me to try Himalya and it completely cured him. Hundreds of simjlar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

The Arcana of Spiritualism

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Prayers Did Not Save Them.

Dear, dear, what is this world coming to? The Japanese, an atheistic nation, as represented by the preachers, met the Russian fleet in open sea, on the 27th ult., and after two days' fighting almost annihilated the Christian forces. When Rojestvensky saw the Japanese squadron approaching for attack, he ordered the decks cleared for battle, while the chaplain knelt in prayer, appealing to the God of hosts for victory. The action commenced. One after another of that powerful fleet went down, in many cases carrying their large crews of many hundred and their officers with them. So terrible was the defeat, the czar absolutely wept, say the reports, when he learned of the result. The bones of St. Serafin did not save the Russians. Neither did the prayers of the chaplains. The appeal made to that saint came quite too late to be effective.

The German emperor lately attributed the czar's disasters in the East to the decline of religion in Russia. A Russian contributor to the London National Review seems to entertain an opposite opinion. He declares that from the czar down to the humblest soldier their has been conducted in harmony with Christian teaching. But let us hear what the Russians had to say on the subject. We quote from the Review:

"When Admiral Togo's torpedo boats first damaged our battleships, we grew angry and chanted Te Deums. To repeated torpedo attacks we answered by multiplying prayers. The Japanese prepared for the campaign by dispatching troops; and we answered by opening our folding icons [holy pictures in the Greek church] and holding aloft our religious banners and crosses and by bending pliant knees. Our commanders, on being appointed, went about to the holy places from monastery to monastery watching and waiting. Kuropatkin pilgrimaged thus for 14 days and garnered in a gallery of icons unto the destruction of the enemy. Foreigners admired us. 'What a religious people,' they said, 'are these Russians!' While the Japanese are advancing toward Turenchen the pious Muscovites are still engaged in prayers. At last Kuropatkin, with a wagon load of holy images, set out hopefully for Manchuria. Admiral Skrydloff also watched and prayed and collected images against the impious enemy. And yet our society, wise in its generation, says the enemy chose the better part."

This was written and published long before the recent naval contest, but it remained truthful to the end.

The "God of battles" is a figment of speech. It is destitute of meaning. God wages no warfare for or against mortals. The ant-hills' citizens may contend from "rosy morn to dewy eve," and the Monarch of all worlds heeds them not; and the same is true of man. Holy books tell of his stopping the sun in its course to allow his favorites to slaughter their enemies; but no one, save a priest, is bound to believe the silly fiction.

It was the brave, strong arm of the Japs that won the battles, and we are all glad to see them come to the front as a powerful nation, triumphing over wrong, though the latter carries the banner of the cross.

Barbarian Christianity.

Here is a late special, which seems to demand the heading we give it:

"Moscow, June 10.—The attacks on the Jews of Minsk, 300 miles northeast of here, were renewed last night and today by the troops. The police to-day joined in the attacks, and nearly one hundred persons were shot, most of them being Jews. Eleven of the injured cannot recover.

"The military is said to have declared its intention of killing every Jew in Minsk. The objects of the persecution are fleeing from the town."

Were these soldiers inspired by the words of Jesus, when he said:

"But mine enemies which would not I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me."—Luke 19:27.

Important Historical Correction.

"The clothes of Jesus" is often mentioned by writers, always in the plural, as if he had a stock of them. The writer has given close attention to this subject, and he finds that Kitto was correct in his statement, in his article on "Dress" in his "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature," when he said:

"Persons of the humbler classes [of Hebrews] were content with the shirt and the mantle. The wealthier people had other robes between these two, forming a complete dress without the mantle."

In a previous passage in the same article Kitto says:

"All the men wear sandals. Some of them are clad in a short tunic, or shirt, with close sleeves."

The mantle, it seems, was for winter use, and was only owned by the better class. The tunic, called a coat sometimes, exhibited as the identical one divided among the soldiers at the crucifixion, was only a short-sleeved tunic or shirt, which in length would scarcely reach the knees.

Josephus, in his account of the Essenes, says the members of that sect wore their clothes until they fell from the body. The translators of the New Testament seem to have labored in their renderings to enlarge the wardrobe of Jesus beyond what the facts of history will warrant. He was very poor, a veritable tramp, to use a modern phrase, "without where to lay his head," ever denouncing the rich, and promising special favors to the destitute, of which he seems to have been a distinguished example. His apparel was that of a tunic, and nothing else, if the history of those times are trustworthy.

Satan a Beneficiary.

It has been no uncommon matter for churchmen, under stress of religious teachings, to devote, by last will and testament, their worldly possessions to the church of their faith. But now comes news of an individual who has set a new example, by bequeathing his wealth, not to God and the Church, but to Satan.

As stated in the Chicago Chronicle, a citizen of Finland leaves all his possessions to the Evil One.

We do not set it before our readers as an example for Spiritualists to follow for they can do a better work by devoting their wealth to aid the Cause of Spiritualism, the Mediums' Fund, etc.:

"There is only one spot on the earth's surface that has actually been willed, deeded and bequeathed to his satanic majesty. This spot lies four miles and a half south of Helsingfors, Finland. A few years ago Lara Huilariene died in the little town of Peilisjarvi, in the above-named country, leaving considerable property in the shape of landed estate.

"How he had come into possession of so much land no one seemed to know, but as he was a bad citizen it was generally admitted that he was in league with wintahausu (Satan) and that they had many business deals with each other. This somewhat startling opinion was verified when among old Huilariene's papers a certified warranty deed was found which deeded to Satan all his earthly possessions. The will was to the same effect.

The family has repeatedly tried to break the will, but so far has been unsuccessful. Thus the records show that his sulphuric majesty has a legal right and title to some excellent ground in the near vicinity of Helsingfors. The simple people of the neighborhood have changed the course of the road which formerly skirted the Huilariene homestead and declare that they would not enter the possessions of Satan & Co. for all the money that the three states would bring."

Prominent New Zealander Tells of Woman Suffrage.

Mr. George Shirtcliffe, president of the Chamber of Commerce, Wellington, N. Z., has recently arrived in this country on a tour of sightseeing and pleasure. Much of the progress which New Zealand has made during the past few years he attributes to the fact that the influence of their women is brought into public affairs. He said:

"The island colony is far ahead of all the other colonies of the empire in her endeavors to cope with the great vexed questions of modern society by means of direct legislation.

"Woman suffrage which prevails throghout New Zealand is one of the greatest forces in the purification of society that can be imagined. In all matters affecting morals or education, the women of the colony exercise their franchise irrespective of their husbands' political leanings. In matters purely political I believe that in the great majority of cases they duplicate thir husbands' votes.

"As a result of this, the colony is governed by local option and the sale of liquor is absolutely forbidden in many territories. I am confident though personally I am not in favor of prohibition, that within a short time we shall have prohibition throughout the island."

Wrong Man Fined.

A young man in Chattanooga, Tenn., who fell asleep in church and snored, was prosecuted by the pastor, for disturbing the congregation, and was fined $20. The preacher who could not hold the attention of his auditors was the one who should have been fined. It will be prudent for Charles Shubert, and others like him, who cannot breathe the fetid and devitalized air of a church, shut up all the week and filled with poisonous gases, which have escaped from many lungs on Sunday, without going to sleep, should flee to the woods on God's holy day, where he can get an abundance of ozone. If preachers would limit their discourses to 40 minutes it would be very seldom their auditors would sleep so soundly as to snore.

Damnable a Better Word.

A lady correspondent of the Truth Seeker, does not compliment Jesus for his teaching, as cited by her. These are the offensive passages she quotes:

"But mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me."—Luke 19:27.

That was putting it pretty strong; but here is another passage, which she characterizes as "beautiful":

"If any man come not to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, [that seems to take the whole family] yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14:26.

Verily, in place of "beautiful" we believe we should substitute "damnable."

A Monstrous Creed.

A healthy agitation is going on in the bosom of the Presbyterian sect, and it will not "down" at the bidding of crystallized conservative believers of the olden type, who fear innovation of newer and humaner views, and the inroads of heresy within the fold of orthodoxy.

It does seem strange—an anachronism with the spirit of the age—that good men, men actuated by high moral principle in all that concerns the ordering of their thoughts and lives, should tenaciously cling to a creed that makes an almighty monster of God; a creed, in fact, to which no practice or belief of any savage or lowest heathen tribe or people can compare in point of utter heartless, malignant devilishness.

In truth, we owe an apology to that mythical personage—the devil—for using the term devilishness in such connection.

We would gladly help our Presbyterian friends to a saner and humaner belief, but they must work out their own salvation—or damnation—or let it work out according their God's election and foreordination.

A proposition to cast aside the famous and much-discussed Westminster confession was the principal subject discussed before the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, recently in session at Winona Lake, Ind.

The assembly, at a previous session, adopted the Brief Statement of the Reformed Faith, but not as the creed of the church, the Westminster confession remaining the creed.

The overture for the dropping of this ancient creed was made to the general assembly by the presbytery of Nassau, Long Island. Rev. Dr. Samuel T. Carter, who led in the movement in the eastern presbytery, wrote the following statement regarding the proposal:

The Westminster confession presents for the worship and allegiance of men a God who, according to the good pleasure of His will, assigned the millions of the human race to endless torment before they were born or had done good or ill.

Of this number a large company died in infancy and committed no personal transgression. The whole heathen world formed another large company; by the teachings of the confession Homer and Virgil, Plato and Socrates, Cato and Antonius, Confucius and Gautama are at this moment roasting in the literal flames of hell fire and shall so burn forever and ever.

Says God is a Monster.

Has the Presbyterian church the face to make this declaration to the men of this generation? The Westminster confession in fact says that God is a monster, modern theology says that he is not.

Tamerlane built a pyramid of 2,000 men of the garrison of Herat, laid in brick and mortar and history calls him a monster for doing it. Lord Jeffreys presided over the "Bloody Circuit," in which he condemned 700 to execution, and he stands scorned and by himself on the roll of England's chancellors.

But Tamerlane and Jeffreys were sweet souls compared with a God who could condemn a whole race to endless torment for a single sin.

Readers of "Lorna Doone" will remember how the robber Doones of Bagworthy looted a farmer's cottage and found a little babe in its cradle. One of them called to his comrade to have a game with him. He tossed the infant to the other, who caught it upon the point of his pike.

Rejects God of Confession.

We call these men fiends, but they were bright angels and seraphs compared with a God who could send millions of infants to eternal torments. Every fiber of my mortal being rises up against this God-dishonoring theology; with the utmost fervor of my soul I reject this God of the Confession, and as fully as I reject this God so gladly do I receive the God of the gospel of Jesus Christ—the father in the great parable who runs forth to meet his wretched but repenting son, falls upon his neck, and kisses him.

And quite as objectionable as the God of the Confession is the man of the confession, "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good and inclined to all evil." I turn from this man to the every day man who has wrought the great wonders of antiquity, and to-day has built the great ocean steamers, the Brooklyn bridge, and the subways, who brings home his hard-earned wages and lays them in his wife's lap for home and children, who goes down into the little boat in the hell of waters to save the men in the other ship, who a few weeks ago in New York cried, "There a woman there!" and fought his way against kind, preventing hands, went into the burning house, and never came out.

Common Man Child of God.

I take this common man to my heart—Jesus did—and I say he is a child of God rising out of ignorance and sorrow into the full sonship and everlasting life. I would like my place with this man rather than with the theologians who from their easy chairs pronounce him "indisposed and made opposite to all good and inclined to all evil."

Now why should there be any zeal for this confession with its God and man—this that so many reject with such abhorrence—why should it be so cherished and maintained? As Elijah said to Israel, "if the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him," so can it be said to the general assembly, "If the God of the gospels be God, follow him, but if the God of the Confession be God, follow him." They can not keep the one God for their creed and theological seminaries and the other for their pulpits and common talk.

The moral sense of the people is shocked by the shilly-shallying of the Presbyterian church as to the confession. The present connection of the Presbyterian church with the confession if it were not so serious would be a farce; being so serious, it is a crime.

Calls it a Sham Theology.

What must the people think of the ministers if they accept this God of the Confession; what must they think of them if they do not accept him, but solemnly affirm that they do in the act of ordination? A sham theology is sure to make a sham religion, and a sham religion is sure to lead to the horrors of the Roman empire and the French revolution, the eruption of the human volcano, most dreadful of all.

It has been well said, "Repelled light becomes lightning." Of such a state of affairs as this Martineau sadly says: "Will not the bad creed, then, be got rid of? Not a bit; and year after year thousands of clergymen will solemnly profess before tens of thousands of assenting people a creed which is false to the heart of them all."

MYSTERY OF LIFE SOLVED.

Dr. Littlefield Declares He Has Discovered Nature's Method—Scientist Whose Claims Have Attracted Attention Issues Statement—Cells of Plant or Worm or Animal All Look Alike in First Stages.

That he has discovered nature's method of producing life is the assertion made in a signed statement by Dr. Charles W. Littlefield of Alexandria, the scientist, whose experiments have been attracting the attention of the scientific world for the last two years. From minerals subjected to chemical action, he declares, he has produced microscopic plant forms, and from the decomposition of vegetable matter he has evolved distinct types of animal life. Following is the first complete statement of the results of his experiments that Dr. Littlefield has made:

"It has long been believed by scientists that there is one universal substance upon which energy in its multitude of manifestations is operating continually—some manifestation of this energy must be what we regard as the 'vital principle' in nature. Whether this energy is the outgrowth of chemical action or reaction it is not my purpose to discuss or whether intelligence is the outgrowth of combinations of matter or the action of energy upon matter—these are questions that I will attempt to solve when I have finished my book upon Abiogenesis. Upon this subject scientists have long been divided—some believing it possible and yet not practicable, the majority, however, claiming that it is utterly impossible. My experiments, however, have not only demonstrated the fact of spontaneous generation, but they also strongly indicate that this is nature's method of producing living forms originally.

Follows Laws of Nature.

"I do not believe it possible that I could take the common chemical compounds of which animal and vegetable life are composed and compel them to do something for me in the laboratory that is contrary to nature's laws. Nature has but one law in each department of her dominion, and since life has resulted from these experiments it is fair to assume that I have discovered nature's method of producing life. That forms are only microscopic in size is no evidence that a different law has produced them from that which has produced all living creatures. Indeed, their diminutive size is the best evidence of their spontaneity, for in nature's realm there are animals many thousands of times larger than the ones whose photographs I have made. I take it that the true scientist is he who interprets nature's methods correctly and the best proof of the truth of any theory is in the results obtained by putting that theory to the crucial test.

"There is nothing very mysterious in these productions—the mystery is in their novelty; nor is there any secret connected with their production which I am ready to discuss. The process is a simple one, as are all of nature's methods. Either through accident or design chemicals have come together and formed compounds, which compounds have crystallized, and, under the action of the elements, have broken down many hundreds of times, each succeeding formation approaching nearer and nearer vegetable forms until by the process of evaporation they have become completely saturated with magnetism, and by the presence of soda-salts which occur plentifully throughout nature these crystalline formations have absorbed carbon from the atmosphere and thus been transformed into a living vegetable growth. By this means, with slight variations in the amounts of different chemicals, any known vegetable can be formed. For instance, an excess of alkalis will form trees and the larger vegetable growths of solid texture, while a lessening of the alkalis and an increase of the soda compounds will form grasses, flowers, etc.

By Synthetic Processes.

"In the growth of vegetation, thus produced in nature's laboratory, is the beginning of animal forms, for plant life builds up by synthetic processes—the protoplasms from which animal forms grow. If you were to see a cell of a plant or worm or of an animal as it first meets the eye of science, one could not be distinguished from the other, all having a common origin in a vegetable growth; therefore, when we have built up plant life we have also started animal life, for these animal forms here shown have sprung up from decaying vegetable matter, showing that animal life is not only dependent upon vegetable for its sustenance, but for its origin as well. Now, if we desire to produce any given species of animal we need only to build up from chemicals the kind of vegetable forms that produce it.

"Those who sent forth to the world the scientific ultimatum, 'that from the non-living the living can come,' did so because organic life did not spring up from decaying animal compounds. They should have begun their experience where life begins, instead of where it ends.

"I have often been asked whether or not I may not be mistaken as to the origin and character of these productions—whether vegetable forms are only crystals and that the animal forms come from contamination of the compounds which I use. In reply to these questions I can only say: The plant life grows from mineral compounds purchased in the open market and have never been in vegetable forms of any kind, being made directly from minerals as found in nature. These forms grow and bloom and decay, as do vegetable forms on the earth, and from this vegetable mold, thus producing animal forms, grow up a species so foreign to any transmitted by the germs as to preclude the possibility of contamination from without. Their size is also positive evidence of their spontaneous origin, as they are much smaller than similar species found in nature.

Size Proof of Origin.

"To me their diminutive size is the best evidence of the fact that I am not mistaken as to their origin and method of production, since I am wholly unable to control any considerable amount of material or a proportionate amount or area of environments, and yet vegetable and animal forms grow up whose size corresponds to the amount of material with which I am working, compelling me to believe that were I able to control larger amounts of material and greater areas of environments I could have produced larger creatures. I am also compelled to believe that these experiments demonstrate that this is nature's method of producing living forms.

"The possibilities of the future in this line of research is fraught with such promise as to startle one in their contemplation. If I have discovered the law of creation, as the success of the experiments seem to indicate, shall we not believe it possible that with greater facilities and better control of environments to produce any form of life we may desire? I do not mean to say that I will be able to do this, as the time required may exceed the combined length of the natural life of many men, but that it is possible I firmly believe."

DEATH FORETOLD IN VISION.

Patient at County Hospital Said He Saw a Woman's White Hand Write His Death Warrant Upon a Sheet.—Invalid Summoned His Brother on Receiving Supernatural Warning, and Died After He Whispered Secret Message.

As set forth in the Los Angeles (Cal.) Examiner of late date, a marvelous story, in which there is something of the uncanny, came out with the death of Daniel Neuspann at the County Hospital in that city.

Neuspann, who was 56 years of age, had a vision in which his death was foretold to the hour.

Taking advantage of what he considered a supernatural message, Neuspann summoned his brother Herman from San Luis Obispo county. Herman arrived an hour before the death and received from the lips of the dying man a secret which caused him to leave immediately southward on foot.

The whole affair is so deeply mysterious that no one at the County Hospital pretends to venture an explanation, either of the psychic manifestation or the sudden departure of Herman.

At about midnight of last Sunday, Neuspann saw floating up from the foot of his bed a black sheet drawn taut and smoothed out seemingly by invisible hands.

He waited transfixed. He said afterwards that he had not been sleeping; that he had caught a glimpse of a nurse in the farther end of the ward.

As soon as the sheet had become stationary there was wafted out before his trance-enthralled vision a white, unearthly hand—the delicate hand of a woman writing upon the sheet.

The Mysterious Hand.

The hand itself emitted a pale, green light. It held a crayon of subdued electric radiance. The hand wrote slowly:

"Daniel, you will die next Saturday morning."

Neuspann gave a lunge almost off the bed, his eyes dilating with horror. His movement dissipated the vision and it disappeared as a light goes out.

Early next morning Neuspann wrote to his brother, who lives several miles out from San Luis Obispo. He told the story of the vision and asked that the letter be dispatched immediately.

During the days that followed Neuspann was in terrible throes of nervousness. He expected his brother not later than Wednesday. But Wednesday, Thursday and Friday passed and there was not even a line from "Brother Herman," as the dying man called him.

All of Friday night Neuspann was in terrible torture, but it was not physical. "I have something to tell Brother Herman," he said, "and no one else will do."

Neuspann did not know that his brother had started from San Luis Obispo upon the receipt of the letter Monday. But the man who wished to hurry fast as steam could take him, unfortunately had little money and most of the journey was made on foot.

The Whispered Message.

Footsore, dusty and hungry, Herman staggered through the doors of the county hospital at 3 o'clock yesterday morning.

He was with his brother for an hour. The conversation was carried on in whispers, with Herman's head bent close to the lips that were growing cold with death.

Upon the death of the old man, who was taken to the hospital three months ago, suffering with cancer of the stomach, Herman, who is perhaps 60, left after pressing a kiss upon the forehead of the corpse.

They Are Not Christians.

"Graft is unknown in Japan," says a dispatch explaining that Rojestvensky's fleet cost the Czar many times as much money as was actually spent on it.

The Russian officials are notorious grafters, and they pocketed about half of the funds intrusted to them for the construction of ships and the purchase of munitions of war. The result was that Rojestvensky's ships were shams, his guns frail and his powder almost useless.

In consequence of this dishonesty, Russia's honor is lost, her sea power shattered, her eastern empire destroyed and thousands of brave men murdered to satisfy the greed of their aristocratic rulers.

Grafting such as this is treason of the blackest dye, and it should be punished with the reward of treason.

There is no difference whatever between Benedict Arnold and the official of a nation, state or city who steals the money confided to him to spend for the public benefit. They both are traitors, and hanging should be the fate of both alike.

Graft is unknown in Japan, where, in spite of the fact that the inhabitants are heathen idolaters, their religion seems able to make men honest, honorable and patriotic.

Indeed, it seems to the unprejudiced observer that there is more of the spirit of Christianity among these Shintoists and Buddhists than there is in holy Russia.

Surely Jesus Christ would have approved the charity of the Japanese naval minister, who sent to the wounded Rojestvensky, suffering in a Japanese hospital, a note of gracious sympathy accompanying a gift of flowers. Surely Admiral Togo's call of condolence upon his vanquished foe, in which, the dispatches tell us, his demeanor was marked by gentleness, sympathy, and tenderness, was a beautiful exhibition of obedience to the injunction of good-will among men.

The treatment of the Russian prisoners by the Japanese is universally said to have been full of generosity, good feeling and sympathy; altogether worthy of our Christian charity.

The Japanese are not Christians, but their superstition somehow compels them to honor their fathers and mothers as parents are honored nowhere in the Christian world. The Japanese may be a heathen, but drunkenness and gluttony and other vices familiar among us are strangers to him.

Above all, graft is unknown in Japan. There are no traitors holding public positions of trust and confidence.

If any such were to be discovered, the Japanese might be so un-Christian as to hang him. But, aside from this weakness, our heathen friends follow the teachings of Christianity well enough to make it seem unnecessary for Mr. Rockefeller to worry about converting them to his religion.

The above from the Chicago Daily Journal expresses some plain truths.

A Late Discovery.

The emperor of Russia telegraphed Rojestvensky, in the course of a recent message of thanks: "By will of the Almighty success was not destined to crown your endeavors."

Pity Russia had not been in possession of that "will of the Almighty" before she violated her agreement at the close of the Boxer war in China to evacuate Manchuria.

The Psychic Circle.

An Explanatory Letter From Dr. Alex Caird.

To the Members of the Psychic Circle:—I would like to correct a misunderstanding in regard to the Psychic Circle. Many of our correspondents seem to think that no one can become a member unless they are a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. We certainly wish that every member might (for their own good) receive the benefit to be derived from reading the grandest spiritual paper published, and so keep in touch with the spiritual happenings, and learn the views and opinions of the different writers on the large variety of subjects treated, but we realize that there are many who would like to become members of the circle who are not able to subscribe for the paper, much as they might like to. Such are just as welcome; there are no conditions. We wish Brother Francis could read some of the many letters we have received extolling his paper; he would certainly feel that his efforts for the world's betterment were appreciated.

A word as regards the difference in time. As our circle extends, not only all over our own country, but to Africa, India, Europe, Australia and New Zealand, one can readily see that if we tried to sit at nine o'clock by one time, some part of our circle would be observing the rules every hour in the twenty-four. If we all sit at nine o'clock, local time, the thought wave will start at the Atlantic, extend across the continent and around the world.

If any member wishes the circle to concentrate their wishes on any subject of general interest, will they kindly send the request to The Progressive Thinker? We have no way to inform the large circle, but everybody reads The Progressive Thinker. We would also request the circle members to repeat the following prayer, by Robert L. Stevenson, upon arising in the morning. "The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep."

IS THE DEVIL DEAD?

Abstract of Lecture by Miss Susie C. Clark, Delivered Before the Worcester Association of Spiritualists.

Subject: "Is the Devil Dead?"

In the twilight of civilization, a belief in the existence of a personal devil was accepted by the world at large. A being responsible for the temptation, suffering, and all of the so-called evil that existed in the world. But today, in the light of this twentieth century, we find not trace of a belief in this being; we have voted him down, the door has been opened and he has been ushered out.

But is the devil dead in our midst today? Do we no longer need our prisons, jails or penitentiaries? Is the devil dead in man? Our Christian Science friends claim all is good, there is no evil, but we who recognize the Infinite God cannot close our eyes to the existence of evil when the daily press records the acts of fiends in human form, when it is not safe for women to walk the streets alone and unprotected, when little children cannot leave the school room and reach the protection of home without being molested. Is the devil dead when we engage in unholy war, in wholesale murder by shot and shell?

Is the devil of envy and jealousy dead, which is so prevalent in our ranks today, when we should be thankful for the successes of our brother or sister, as if it were our own?

Are the little devils of worry dead, which it has been said, come not by twins or triplets but come by the litters, and yet we all know worry never does any good, but always brings harm?

Is the love of money dead, that prolific cause of all evil?

Ah! my friends, is it any wonder that obsession is in our midst today; how can any intelligent Spiritualist refuse to believe in the evidence presented to our view? While I do not believe that all obsessing spirits are demons, I do believe that five-sixths of all the sickness in our land today is caused by obsession; that is a broad statement, but I thoroughly endorse it. We believe the door is open for the spirits from the spheres to return; why not those earth-bound spirits who have never left the material conditions? There are cases of obsession where the tie of affection is so strong that the spirit still lingers in the atmosphere of the mortal, until their auras blend together, like the fly caught in the spider's web, then, indeed, the spirit is the patient, and needs treatment. In my experience as a healer in cases of obsession of this kind, I have questioned my guides as to why they could not better help and instruct the obsessing spirit, and they have answered, "Because they cannot see me or hear me, they have not yet entered spirit life, and therefore can best receive your thought vibrations, as they still dwell in the earth conditions."

We are informed by a Catholic of high degree, that the vow taken by Jesuits is to destroy all heretics, not only in this life, but in the life to come, and many of those spirits are bound by that vow for many years, or until they have outgrown it. And wherever they find a sweet-souled sensitive working for the upliftment of humanity, hordes of these obsessing spirits rush in and in many cases succeed in driving the band away and taking possession of the medium, give an exhibition that would at once denounce the medium as a fraud before the world. And may not the recent exposure of many mediums be accounted for in this way? Ah! my friends, when you send only saints over there, saints will return and bless you.

We acknowledge and appreciate the innate goodness which exists in the human heart today, the little acts of kindness and loving self-sacrifice which we find even among the untutored of our race, and while we do not say, "all is good, there is no evil," we fully comprehend the necessity of evil, for without the existence of evil there could be no progress. Honest Labor Without a Rival.

The story is told of a young man lately locating in the rock region of Oklahoma, where large numbers of toughs are congregated to rob those boring for oil. He was addressed by one of them:

"What in h— are you doing down here, anyway?"

Drawing himself up proudly he replied:

Looking at the stranger with pity, the interrogator remarked:

It was well the adventurer was not posing as a materializing medium, otherwise he would have found many rivals, and might have been compelled to resort to frauds to gain support, as many others have done.

Just Lightning.

Three churches were struck by lightning in Chicago on Sunday, two weeks ago. One was Unity, the Unitarian church, which takes no stock in hell. What was its offense?

A Worthless Defense.

A man is on trial in New Jersey for murder. His defense is, he was obsessed by demons. Such a defense will find no countenance in the courts.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

Mother Eddy's Final Message.

Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy comes out with a communication that reads as though it were her last will and testament to her devoted disciples and followers.

"All I ask of the world now is, that it grant me time to assimilate myself to God," she says. Some might suppose that she held the belief of the Buddhists, who expect to be finally absorbed into the divine principle or essence and lose all separate individual consciousness.

Christian Science, as expounded by Mrs. Eddy and other promulgators, is a sort of esoteric philosophy which, though these teachers may understand it, is incomprehensible to those not initiated into its mysteries; to many clear-headed thinkers, indeed, it seems self-contradictory, self-destructive.

That Christian Scientists, as a class, comprise an excellent and high-minded people, none will dispute. That many cures have been effected by their methods, is not to be denied. But these facts do not prove the Christian Science philosophy is correct. The cures effected by Christian Science methods are easily explained on the modern recognized principle known as "Suggestion."

Mrs. Eddy puts her views in the form of questions and answers:

"Does a Christian Scientist regard poverty as a manifestation of disease?

"No.

"Is poverty a disease of society or of the individual?

"Of both.

"Can the individual by the use of Christian Science overcome a worldly defeat?

"Yes.

"If the world would abandon the study of disease and crime and devote itself to the study of wealth, health and love would criminals, cripples and poverty cease to exist?

"They would."

Now, we suppose it is all plain to the initiated Christian Science mind, but it is rather confusing to the ordinary, uninitiated outsider, to be told, ex cathedra, that poverty is not a manifestation of disease, and yet is a disease of both society and the individual. There is, of course, a sort of distinction between "disease" and its "manifestation." Without the manifestation, how could it be known there was disease?

But is it not rather self-stultifying to admit there is disease of both society and the individual, when all along a cardinal principle of Christian science is to utterly deny the existence of disease, and aver that it is merely an "illusion of the carnal mind"?

But again:

"If the world would abandon the study of disease and crime and devote itself to the study of wealth, health and love, would criminals, cripples and poverty cease to exist?

"They would."

These questions and answers being in fact a study of disease—disease of both society and the individual—it seems queer that Mrs. Eddy (whose "Science" denies the existence of disease), should condemn the study of disease, and tell us that health can be studied without studying disease and that the study of disease (which is non-existent) and crime is the cause of the disease, poverty.

Christian Science as elaborated by its present head, is a queer muddle to us. Not being fully initiated into the mysteries of its esoteric philosophy, it is now beyond our comprehension.

IN THE CRADLE OF TEARS.

Strange Cradle in Which Are Placed Griefs of the World.

There is a cradle within the door of one of the great institutions of New York before which a constantly recurring tragedy is being enacted. It is a plain cradle, quite simply draped in white, but with such a look of cozy comfort about it that one would scarcely suspect it to be a cradle of sorrow.

And this cradle is the most useful and, in a way, the most inhabited cradle in the world. Day after day, and year after year, it is the recipient of more small wayfaring souls than any other cradle in the history of the race. In it the real children of sorrow are placed and over it more tears are shed than if it were an open grave.

It is the place where annually 1,200 foundlings are placed—the silent witness of more heartbreaking scenes than any other cradle since the world began. For nearly thirty-five years it has stood where it does to-day, ready-draped, open, while as many thousand mothers have stolen shamefacedly in and after looking hopelessly about, have laid their helpless offspring within its depths.

For thirty-five years, summer and winter, in the bitterest cold and the most stifling heat, it has seen them come—the poor, the rich; the humble, the proud; the beautiful, the homely—and one by one they have laid their children down and brooded over them, whether it were possible for human love to make so great a sacrifice and yet not die.

Still the tragedy repeats itself and, year after year and day after day, the unlocked door is opened and dethroned virtue enters—the victim of ignorance and passion and affection, and a child is robbed of an honorable home.

A Beacon Light to the Whole World.

The Los Angeles Fellowship.

An Organization the Aims and Objects of Which Promise a Reign of True Brotherhood and a Greedless Christianity.

The following is a summary of the objects, aims and aspirations of The Los Angeles Fellowship. Divested of all creeds, shorn of all superstitions and gaudy show, with only the one thought in view, to do good, The Fellowship stands forth as a Beacon Light to all the world. It is a Divine Plan fully crystallized, with the seal of Angels of Light thereon, and its vibrations should extend throughout the whole earth, especially among Spiritualists.

Spirits of the illustrious dead—philosophers, sages and seers—cluster around this great movement, and with approving smiles, lend their aid to make it a success.

Spiritualists with high ideals and holy aspirations find in The Fellowship a congenial home, and realize something of Heaven on earth in the great work being carried on under the ministrations of Benjamin Fay Mills, an angelic Messenger of Love and good will to mankind.

The Los Angeles Fellowship is a segment of the spirit world realized on this earth, a spiritual ideal in full bloom, the fruition of all that is good in Spiritualism, and a haven of rest for its devotees who seek the spiritualized calm that follows the steps of unselfish workers.

It is the culmination of the highest aspiration. Therein one can attain a fine spiritual development, for that can only be had by being good and doing good, and there is certainly every incentive for that in The Fellowship.

It is spiritual in all its component parts; it attracts the angels, the great and good of Spirit-life, without any signboard, and without the least ostentatious display or braggadocio. It is the blossoming out of all that is high and noble in Spiritualism, and should encompass the whole earth. Spiritualists, awaken! or The Fellowship will transcend your efforts in redeeming the world from sin and misery.

The Los Angeles Fellowship is an association of people for the purpose of encouraging trustful and unselfish living. This is the only creed or platform or program authorized by this virile young organization.

HISTORY OF THE MOVEMENT.

The Fellowship is a direct outgrowth of a series of addresses delivered at various times in the winter and spring of nineteen hundred and four and of a summer gathering that same year at Camp Cabrillo on Santa Catalina Island, where a number of friends became so attached to one another and to the principles which characterize The Fellowship, that on their return they could not easily be separated, and with other kindred spirits began in September the preliminary organization whose consummation in this more permanent form we celebrate to-day. Too much credit cannot be given to a noble little band who associated themselves together in March, for philanthropic endeavor, under the name of "The Fellowship," a title which they adopted from a similar body in San Diego, composed of people there who had been interested in a series of meetings there in October, 1903. The real history of the Los Angeles Fellowship, however, reaches farther back, and I suspect its roots may be found in the very beginning of the development of the human race.

This society intends to meet the demand of our time, a time when, as Massini says, "The old world passes away and a new world comes into existence."

The minister of the preliminary organization was Mrs. Mary Russell Mills, who was invited to fill the position during my absence in the east, and until we could determine whether to make Los Angeles our permanent home. Mrs. Mills spoke on Sunday mornings and Wednesday evenings, conducted an Emerson class, organized and superintended a Sunday-school of Religion and Ethics, inaugurated and superintended the administration of certain philanthropics during September, October, November and December of last year. On several of the Sundays of this time, when I was in the city, I delivered the address.

From the first gathering, unmistakable indications of genuine spiritual interest and power were present, and under the leadership of Mrs. Mills the audiences grew in size, until they were crowded out from Blanchard Assembly Hall to the larger Blanchard Hall, and later the Sunday services were transferred to this larger audience room, and now we find even Simpson Auditorium inadequate to accommodate the regular congregations.

On February tenth the formal organization was perfected by the adoption of a constitution and the election of permanent officers. On the preliminary roll to date over eight hundred names have been inscribed—up to the morning of March sixth—as charter members. The names upon the roll are not alone of residents of Los Angeles, or, even of this vicinity, but people from all parts of the United States and even beyond its borders have been seeking the privilege of being enrolled as charter members, and among them are names of some men and women of laudable national and international renown for their good words and works.

OBJECTS OF THE ORGANIZATION.

The object of this organization is nothing less and it could be nothing greater than the attempt to put the true content into the idea of religion. It proposes to minister to every rational need of humanity, individually and collectively [True Spiritualism]. The Fellowship is not a church in the technical sense, but yet, in the best sense, we mean to be thoroughly religious and to endeavor to to be what a church ought to be.

I believe that any man is religious who obeys the impulse to be better, and that a religious association is one in which the members endeavor to help one another and all men to lead the good life. Our name is indicative of our purpose, which is the recognition and cultivation of fellowship with the Unseen Author and Preserver of our being, with our fellow-men, with every living creature, as well as with the great inanimate Mother Nature who is trying to speak to us in myriad ways.

The greatest word of our time is Unity. It describes the best thought of the science, politics, economics, and religion of to-day, and what we mean by fellowship is the attempt to make practical this great present-day, world conception. We do not mean to make any distinction between men by the forming of this society. This is not a Fellowship, but THE FELLOWSHIP.

We do not say, We are the sheep, and others are the goats; the good people are within and the bad people are without. We do mean, however, that we recognize the fact of human fellowship and desire to live with all men in the practical recognition of the fact that we are all one.

A lady said to me the other evening, "I sympathize with your spirit and your purpose, although I am not a member of your church." I said to her, "Madam, excuse me, you are mistaken. I may not technically be in your church, but you are essentially in mine, for my church includes all people and I BELIEVE THAT ALL THE CHILDREN OF MEN ARE THE CHILDREN OF GOD AND BROTHERS AND SISTERS ONE OF ANOTHER."

For ages men and women have been talking of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. It is possible that the early Christians lived according to these principles, but whether they did or not we want to realize them just so far as in us lies, in and through The Fellowship. In every spot on earth "Jew and Gentile, Barbarian and Scythian, bond and free," heathen and Christian, the rich and poor, the wise and foolish, the learned and ignorant, the weak and strong ought to meet together without distinction, bound by the great ties of our common humanity; but until that consummate day shall dawn, let there be at least one place where this shall be true of human relationship. The application of this principle would solve all the problems of human association. In the home, it would sanctify every holy affiliation and lead to wisdom and permanence in domestic relations.

In education, it would teach our children to be true men and women, sons and daughters of the Most High, and to live as members of one great family. In society, it would paralyze our foolishness and frivolity and cause our intercourse with one another to be truly recreative and inspiring.

In the economic world, it would produce a larger measure of justice and regard for the welfare of all, rather than of the few. It would bring about a sane administration of commerce, so that fruit would not rot in California while children starved in New York, and the whole civilized world breathe uneasily in intervals between the attacks of the deadly underconsumption; and it would cause the principle of cooperation to entirely banish our present savage economic strife, until the business world should resemble the family, rather than an army of hostile armies. In politics, it would mean the extension of a real democracy, and in our larger politics the spread of peace on earth, until war should be abolished and good-will and brotherly service be permanently established among the nations of the earth.

We could well take as one of our mottoes the words of William Morris in "The Dream of John Ball": "Forsooth, brothers, fellowship is heaven and the lack of fellowship is hell; fellowship is life and the lack of fellowship is death; and the deeds that ye do upon the earth, it is for fellowship's sake that ye do them * * * Therefore, I bid you not dwell in hell, but in heaven * * upon earth, which is a part of heaven and forsooth no foul part." To promote this spirit among ourselves and in every human association is the object of the Los Angeles Fellowship.

As far as our relationship with other religious, educational, reform and philanthropic associations is concerned, we desire to be on the friendliest terms with all and to co-operate to the utmost with them in every noble endeavor. If we do not always see alike concerning theories and methods, that is no reason why we should not be in hearty brotherly relationship with one another, and why we should not work together where we can.

If two of us are walking along the same street in the same direction and one is going seven blocks where the other is going only six, let us walk the six blocks together. WE DESIRE A LEAGUE FOR EARNEST, LOVING, PHILANTHROPIC AND PRACTICAL ENDEAVOR WITH EVERY HIGH-MINDED MAN AND WOMAN AND EVERY NOBLE ASSOCIATION OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES AND VICINITY, OF ALL CREEDS AND OF NO CREED.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE ORGANIZATION.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that this is not a union of those who hold the same opinions on theological, economic or political subjects. Religion by opinion has had its day. If we must have a creed, I think most of us would be satisfied with Professor Dolbear's statement, "I BELIEVE IN GOODNESS AND WILL SO ORDER MY LIFE." There are enough organizations which stand for all sorts of specialities concerning all possible varieties of religious ideas and activities. Let this be a society especially and exclusively for the PROMOTION OF GOODNESS, without regard to opinions, which are not fundamental and which must change with the increase of human knowledge. This is a union of men and women in purpose and in spirit. But while we ask no questions of any man concerning his opinions on any subject, as the test of membership, we are beginning to realize, to use the words of another, that "when men are welded together in spirit, they shall be welded together in the Eternal Verities." I suppose it is true that all the present members of the Fellowship, without any attempt at uniformity of thinking, are more in accord in their opinions concerning the fundamental principles of life and conduct than are the members of any other similar organization on earth.

THE CONDITIONS REQUIRED.

The conditions of joining The Fellowship are simple: First, that the applicant shall understand our principles of trustfulness and unselfishness and agree to endeavor to practice them and to encourage others in the same endeavor. It is undoubtedly true that there are people in the world who are not yet ready for this kind of association. If they are not, we bid them Godspeed where they are, but as Richard Wagner said, "We work for those who are awaking." We find great multitudes of people who are welcoming the organization of the fellowship with unutterable enthusiasm. But although it is a very simple matter to join The Fellowship, it is also a very serious undertaking. We intend to have a simple badge by which we shall be able to recognize one another when we meet; but the badge above all others that I TRUST THAT WE AS MEMBERS OF THE FELLOWSHIP SHALL WEAR IS THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE, THE WHITE BADGE OF PURITY, THE BLUE BADGE OF DEVOTION AND LOYALTY TO PRINCIPLE, AND THE GOLDEN BADGE OF UNSELFISHNESS, GENTLENESS, KINDNESS AND LOVING SERVICE.

HOW TO BECOME A MEMBER.

Practically, the method of joining The Fellowship is exceedingly easy. We do not elect our members; they elect themselves. Any one who signs the roll or authorizes the secretary to sign the roll for him, and makes a subscription to the current expenses, proportionate to his interest and ability, immediately becomes a member, and only loses his membership when he fails to indicate his continued interest by his absence, or delinquency in the payment of his subscription.

I have been asked a great many times how we think we can administer such a great institution as this upon such a financial basis, and I reply that it is true that we need money in order to meet the heavy obligations and to seize the great opportunities of our rapidly growing work, but we believe that in these affairs we can practice our principles and absolutely trust the members to contribute each one according to his own ability. The individual subscriptions now vary from one cent a week to twenty-five dollars a month, and I suppose that this great difference fairly indicates the varying financial resources of the members of The Fellowship. Those who have large means should make large and generous subscriptions, in order to supplement the smaller contributions of those who have not. Certain privileges will be granted to the members, and where the conditions of membership are as simple as ours, no one can feel that he is debarred from any privilege, except by his own voluntary declaration not to be associated with us.

EXPLANATION ABOUT SEATS.

The reason that we reserve most of our seats on Sunday mornings for members of The Fellowship in order to preserve our esprit de corps, and that all of the members may be kept informed concerning the development of the work, and that we should have at least one meeting at which those who have been interested enough to become members should be sure of obtaining admission. I call your attention with great emphasis to the fact that this does not resemble in any respect the ordinary pew-rental system with which we have become so unpleasantly familiar. There are thousands of people in this city who resemble a woman in Albany who said to one of my assistants, when I was pastor of a Presbyterian church there: "The reason I do not go to church is because I am too poor to hire a good seat and too proud to hire a poor one." So you will please clearly understand, first, that seats are reserved only at the Sunday morning services, and that on Sunday evenings and Wednesday evenings they are absolutely free to all-comers without any distinction, and that even at the Sunday morning services, at five minutes before the hour for commencing, every unoccupied seat in the house is open for anyone who wishes it.

Second, there is no sort of discrimination among members on financial grounds.

THE RICH AND POOR.

No man is too rich or too poor to be a member of The Fellowship, if he understands our principles and comes in on equal terms. We welcome the poor and will not bar out the rich, provided they all act in the true spirit of human brotherhood; and if there should be any millionaire member, let him clearly understand that he will not be treated any better than his less fortunate brother who may have no income at all, and will have only the influence in the Councils of the Fellowship to which his character, his wisdom and experience may entitle him.

I do not need to say that the richest people in The Fellowship at the present time are among those who possess the largest measure of beautiful humility and a genuine spirit of religious democracy. We also propose that those who hold seats in a certain row for March shall be moved one row forward for April, and one row farther forward at the beginning of each month (with the exception of those in the two first rows), and those who sit in the third row in March will take the rear row for April. In this way, every member in turn will occupy a seat in every row in the auditorium.

I do not make an appeal to you today, and shall not at any time, to become members of The Fellowship. As Lincoln used to say, "If you like this kind of thing, it is the kind of thing you like." If you wish to be enrolled with us, you need not let the fact that you do not live in Los Angeles keep you from signing your name—we now have a non-resident roll and expect to increase the list of non-resident members. If you do join The Fellowship, encourage your children to join with you, and let each child make a separate subscription, and you will find that you are greatly helping in the interest of the children and young people in what will be of great benefit to them, by encouraging them to become practical members of The Fellowship. Membership in some other organization or organizations does not debar you from placing your name on the roll of The Fellowship, although we expect with our increasing activities that it will be natural for the members of The Fellowship to give at least a large portion of their leisure time in assisting in its practical work.

ADMINISTRATION OF AFFAIRS.

Here, too, we have endeavored to arrange our affairs so that they will be administered with efficiency, and yet with great simplicity. In the strict sense of the term, we have no governing body. Our officers are not rulers, but administrators. We have adopted the two modern principles of the Initiative and Referendum and of the Recall or Imperative Mandate, by which methods are provided so that the entire body may dictate their supreme will at any time as regards the members of the official bodies and as concerns the initiating, revising or abrogating of any act of the officers, who are their agents.

SALARY OF THE CHIEF MINISTER.

The administrative bodies are, first, the Council, composed at present of fourteen members, which superintends the practical work of The Fellowship through about thirty committees; and, second, the Trustees, at present numbering seven, but soon probably to be increased to the legal limit of eleven. The Trustees have charge only of the financial interests. The only salaried officers are the ministers, who give their entire time to the work, and the necessary clerical and administrative assistants. Some of these officers, however, have done all of their work so far without any salary, and those who have received a specific amount have cheerfully received a sum as salary which is only a fraction of what they could be paid for services of equal value in other places. For myself, I repeat here the statement which I made to you two months ago, that I will agree that at no time while I remain the permanent minister, will I consent to receive a salary that shall amount to one-fourth as much as I formerly received when I was connected with the orthodox church.

We mean to be especially accurate and reliable in our business methods and to keep the most accurate accounts on the most approved system, paying our bills promptly and in all of our relations with the business world.

PLACES OCCUPIED AT THE PRESENT TIME.

At the present time we are occupying, to a greater or less extent, four places. First, Masonic Hall, of which we have the exclusive control, where we hold our Sunday morning services, the principal sessions of the Sunday-school, our Wednesday evening meetings, our socials and various other gatherings.

Second, Simpson Auditorium, where our Sunday evening meetings will be held until further notice.

Third, Fellowship Headquarters, located at 434 South Hill Street, directly across the street from Masonic Temple. Here we have located the business offices of The Fellowship, the office of the Fellowship magazine, the office of The Fellowship Publishing Company, where various books and literature may be found, and also the office of the Venice Assembly. At the rear of the headquarters will be found Emerson Hall, being a new hall, which we have seated with 150 chairs, where the Emerson classes, the Young Men's Club, and other smaller gatherings will hold their sessions.

Fourth, Fellowship House, with which most of us have become familiar, located at 605 West Third Street, where we shall retain the headquarters of the Council, the administrative offices for the philanthropic, educational and religious activities, the sewing rooms, social rooms and rooms for the meetings of the various committees, of the Graduate Jolly Boys' Club, and other similar smaller gatherings.

PRINCIPLES SET FORTH.

I have already stated what we call The Fellowship Principles. As Emerson says, "There is a statement of religion possible which would make all skepticism absurd," and I believe that this is such a statement. These little words, TRUST AND LOVE, indicate to those who understand them the profoundest principles that have yet been discovered by man concerning the rational life of humanity. What was NOTHING LESS THAN A REVELATION came to Mrs. Mills and to me one day about two years ago on the beautiful Piedmont Hills above Oakland, when we saw clearly that the essence of every true religious philosophy and the inspiration for all sane living might be summed up in absolute trust as the attitude of the mind and perfect love as the practice of life. Underlying this statement is the conviction that in the universe and beyond it there is but One; and that One is everywhere; and that, as the great Reality, which men have called God, as manifested in nature, in experience, in the highest intuitions of one's soul, it may be absolutely trusted and that in human relationships it may be loved and served. The practice of this principle is not only the way of salvation—it is salvation; that is, it produces knowledge, wisdom, character, peace and power. When the aberglaube, or extra belief and overlying superstition, is removed, this is the essence of Judaism, of Christianity, and of every one of the great religions of the world. We do not mean to criticize or tear down. We wish to "criticize only by creation." We "have come not to destroy, but to fulfill."

ACTIVITIES—LOOKING UP, NOT DOWN.

I am free to say with the greatest emphasis that I would not be interested in The Los Angeles Fellowship if I did not believe that the people banding themselves together in this fashion devoutly mean to "look up and not down, look forward and not back, look out and not in, and lend a hand." I would not care to spend energy and time in this associated endeavor if I did not think we meant to take as a real motto one sacred to many a heart amongst us, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." THIS IS AN ASSOCIATION OF PEOPLE FOR THE PURPOSE OF HELPING ONE ANOTHER TO HELP OTHERS, AND OUR MAIN OBJECTS ARE PRACTICAL. Formerly men have thought they might worship God socially and have tried to transact their ordinary business selfishly. I believe that the worship of God is a privilege of the individual, according to his personal development, but that in the practical affairs of life it is necessary that we should do our work in the spirit of fellowship.

ENGAGED IN ENGROSSING ACTIVITIES.

Already we are engaged in many engrossing activities. There is probably not a week in which our meetings of various sorts for educational and practical purposes do not average three or four a day. It is frequently the case that at the same hour several important meetings along different lines are in progress at the same time. Mrs. Mills' Emerson classes in numbers and interest surpass anything of the sort ever before developed anywhere. We are just putting our Sunday-school work on a thoroughly scientific and practical basis, which is to become, we trust, an influential educational institution along ethical and sociological lines. There are now four main departments in this school.

First, the Children's Church, which meets in Emerson Hall at 11 o'clock on Sunday mornings, at the same hour at which we gather here.

Second, the Academy, which meets in this hall at 12:30 o'clock and consists of all the young people up to sixteen years of age. For the present, members of the Academy WILL STUDY SIMPLE ETHICS—the great lessons concerning everyday duties—the spiritual significance of some of the striking Old Testament stories and the life and teachings of Jesus.

THIRD, THE LYCEUM.

This department will consist of young men and women from sixteen years of age up. If they wish, they may graduate at twenty-one years of age into the College of Religion and Ethics, but may remain in the lyceum until they are twenty-five. The text book in these classes will be my recent exposition of the Sermon on the Mount, entitled "The Divine Adventure," which will be divided into sections and used as regular lesson leaflets for this purpose.

Fourth, the College of Religion and Ethics. For the present, the only class in the college will be the one conducted at 12:30 on Sunday by Mrs. Mills. The text-book for this class will be Mrs. Mills' recent statement of the fundamental principles of spiritual philosophy, entitled "The Art of Living." This book will also be prepared for the special use of students in this class. The Emerson classes may also be counted as in this department, and we propose soon to commence sociological study along various lines.

THE PHILANTHROPIC ACTIVITIES

of The Fellowship are already so numerous that time would forbid me to do more than mention them. In the near future I hope to deliver a special address on "The Philanthropies of The Fellowship." We have at present ten committees engaged in philanthropic work

1. The Philanthropic Committee, which has charge of the especial ministry to those who are in financial need.

2. The Committee on the Sick, which stands ready to render efficient and helpful service to all people of all creeds who are in need of attention.

3. The City and County Jails Committee, who regularly visit our local prisons, become acquainted with the prisoners, and endeavor to render them efficient assistance upon their leaving their places of detention. This committee also furnishes libraries and reading matter to the inmates of the jails and also provides clothing for numbers of them upon their release.

4. The Detention Home Committee renders similar service for the boys and girls of the Detention home.

5. The Children's Hospital Committee furnishes delicacies, playthings, bandages, etc., to the sick children, visits the hospital to discover their needs, and renders aid in other ways.

6. The Day Nursery Committee assists in the work of the Day Nurseries.

7. The Sewing Committee meets every week with a large number of voluntary assistants, for the purposes of repairing, remodeling and otherwise preparing clothing, which is furnished by members of the Fellowship and others for the use of the Committees on the Jails and Detention Home and the Philanthropic Committee.

8. The Graduate Jolly Boys' Club Committee has already organized one club of boys who had joined the Jolly Boys' Club, which is the name of the Fellowship organization within the Detention Home, and who have a desire to remain connected with a similar organization after their residence has been transferred to their own homes.

9. The Evening School Committee will commence next week regular semi-weekly sessions of an evening school, which will teach to members of The Fellowship various branches in which they may desire instruction.

10. The Legal Advice Bureau consists of some of the most eminent lawyers of the city, who will give legal advice without charge to those who are unable to pay for it, but who will endeavor as far as possible to assist in banishing the contentious spirit and preventing litigation.

Besides these committees we have actively at work the Secretary's Committee, the Post Office Committee for the furnishing of Fellowship literature to those who may send us inquiries; the Sunday-school Committee, the Dramatic Committee, the Hospitality Committee, the Fellowship House Committee, the Welcome Committee, The Fellowship Magazine Committee, the Young People's Socials Committee, and the Ushers' Committee.

There are now about fifteen people connected with The Fellowship who spend practically all of their time in superintending and administering its various interests, and there are probably nearly three hundred who are actively engaged in various practical directions.

PLANS AND PROSPECTS SET FORTH.

Several great plans for practical development are pressing for immediate attention. For one, the great Summer City in connection with the series of national sociological congresses, and the summer university which will be established at the Venice of America, adjoining Ocean Park, during July and August. While these enterprises are not under the direct auspices of The Fellowship, the Assembly is under my personal direction, and the first opportunity to secure accommodations at the Assembly City will be given to the members of The Fellowship. I hope that at least a thousand constituents in Los Angeles and from other places will be able to spend a large portion of the time during the summer months, together, in this ideal spot. For further information concerning the plans as they develop, address The Venice Assembly, 434 South Hill street.

We need, for immediate use, for our Fellowship work in Los Angeles, two great buildings. One, to be located near the business center of the city, should contain an immense auditorium, smaller auditoriums, our business offices, the offices of the publishing company, of the printing company, of the Venice Assembly, and the headquarters of our various philanthropies; as well as providing stores and offices which would furnish a revenue that would contribute largely toward the philanthropic work of The Fellowship.

Second, we need another great building, preferably on the top of the hill near the center of the city, which should be a great modern phalanstery, in separate departments, with single rooms for young men and young women, with apartments for families, and with especial arrangements for the accommodation of children, a gymnasium, a play room, a tennis court, a physical culture teacher, whose services should be furnished free to the children, etc., etc. This phalanstery should have beautiful roof gardens, with private summer houses, if desired, and should also have a large dining room and a series of small dining rooms, that would be occupied privately by families if they so desired. This would also be the headquarters of our rapidly developing educational institution which promises to become a great College of Religion and Ethics, with especial attention to modern sociology.

We need also, immediately, several branch offices for philanthropic interests. WE NEED, WITHOUT A WEEK'S DELAY, A HOME FOR THE SISTERS WHOM WE TAKE FROM THE JAIL AND ELSEWHERE, AND FOR WHOM WE ARE LEGALLY AND MORALLY RESPONSIBLE. WE NEED A HOME FOR THE BOYS WHO ARE GRADUATES OF THE DETENTION HOME, AND ALSO THOSE WHO HAVE NOT BEEN RESIDENTS THERE, WHERE THEY CAN BE UNDER HIGH MORAL INFLUENCES WHILE EARNING THEIR LIVING OR PURSUING THEIR EDUCATION.

We ought to have an employment exchange, at first for members of The Fellowship, but probably developing into an attempt to supply also the need of others without employment, in a discriminating, brotherly fashion. I should also like to see started, in the near future, a Fellowship loan office, which should furnish money at reasonable rates to those who are in temporary need of assistance. These are pressing practical needs, one of which is a large philanthropic fund, both from single donations and also from regular contributions. Commencing next Sunday we will put in operation a system by which the members and friends of The Fellowship may make regular monthly contributions to our benevolent work. But while I am thus outlining some of the immediate practical needs, I realize more than words can express, that these are not our greatest necessities. I believe in the truth of the word of the old Hebrew psalmist: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchmen waketh but in vain." What he meant by this was that the great thing is not institutionalism or the making and carrying out of practical plans, but rather the developing of the great Spirit of Life to which all things are possible. If it were not that this Divine Spirit is so marvelously manifest in all of our work, there would almost be danger that we would grow too fast.

We all of us need more and more an appreciation of the purposes and spirit of this movement. We need to see that we are not creating what is being accomplished, but that we are being created by the Eternal Spirit, are being used by Him, and are simply indications of what He means to do now and in the near future for humanity.

I have lived in an atmosphere of a high type of religious consecration all my life, but I joyfully bear witness that I have never observed anything in quality or intensity like the hearty devotion of the people who are inaugurating this movement. The only word that describes it is enthusiasm, which, literally translated from the Greek, means the realization of the presence of God in man. This is nothing less than a reformation of the reformation.

A SUBLIME SPIRIT OF SERVICE

possesses scores and hundreds, as they place their names upon our Roll of Honor. Every week tens and scores of the most intelligent and noblest men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls, volunteer for any sort of service they are able to render. I have made scores of requests for the giving of practical endeavor from our members in the last few weeks, but I do not think I have opened one door of opportunity for self-denying service that has not been eagerly entered, unless there was some especial reason that prevented it.

This great, deep, solemn, joyful, enthusiastic consecration which absorbs our lives is comparable in the spiritual experience of our ancestors only to the early days of Christianity. We do not make any claims or utter any prophecies concerning the future of The Fellowship. No one could realize more than do Mrs. Mills and I that we are only INSTRUMENTS OR CHANNELS FOR THE OUTFLOWING OF THE HOLY SPIRIT OF OUR TIME. This is not an association of followers. Numbers of our members are leaders in their own departments of the world's work. It is not "a personally conduct-

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 78 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

VOLNEY'S RUINS

—AND—

THE LAW OF NATURE,

TO WHICH IS ADDED

Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice by Count Daru, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;

Printed on heavy paper, from new plates, in large, clear type, with portrait and illustrations. One volume, 12mo, 248 pages; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of virulent states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to all the world.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

H. F. Dickey says: "Those claiming to have made a thorough investigation as to the reality or falsity of Spiritualism and spirit communication, denouncing them as fraudulent, have either made a limited study of these subjects or are so prejudiced that their senses are dulled to all truth and reason. That deception and trickery are practiced by dishonorable and unscrupulous persons is no argument that the genuine has no existence. When I positively state that I have conversed and do converse with some who have passed from this world to the spirit abode, I have evidence that convinces me of this fact beyond the shadow of a doubt. What we call death is only an event in life, and our passing from this life is just as essential as birth, otherwise all progress and further advancement would cease."

Mrs. Amanda Coffman of 419 Crescent avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich., writes: "I will be at home until August, and will answer calls for funerals or weddings within a reasonable distance. Address me as above or phone Citizens' 6906."

The following announces the meeting at Oklahoma City, Okla.: The Spiritualist society of Oklahoma City extends to one and all a most cordial invitation to attend their public meetings, which are held in the Rippy building, corner of Broadway and Second street, on second floor. The wonderful demonstrations of clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, etc., given by the several gifted mediums of this society at every meeting have already aroused keen interest in psychic research in this community. Much praise has been bestowed upon our mediums for the accuracy with which they describe your loved ones in spirit life, even to names, and the comforting messages transmitted through them to you. Spiritualists do not believe in a hereafter—they "know" it to be a truth by everyday experience, and consider it one of their privileges to lead their brethren out into the broader light and better understanding of their true self.

Mrs. S. A. Zinzow writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "I have received the twelve premium books which Dr. F. L. Mehrtens ordered. I wish to thank you kindly for them."

M. Theresa Allen writes from Springfield, Mo.: "The course of lectures referred to in my late communication to your valuable paper, to be given at Millersville, Mo., was given as per announcement. We had fine weather and good audiences during the entire course and all passed off agreeably. I never met better people anywhere, and never was cared for more kindly than in the little town of Millersville. They have never permitted a saloon there, and the results are very apparent, especially to an outsider. The moral and spiritual tone of the community is far above the average, while the spirit of brotherhood and friendly co-operation pervades and dominates the general mentality of the town. Among the many pleasing features of my visit there was the fact of so many young people present at the meetings, and not only present, but took an active part in making the meetings a success. Some twelve or fifteen young ladies and gentlemen took charge of the singing, and they sang well, too. This was my third professional visit to that town, and I recall each one with pleasure. May heaven protect it from the blighting influence of "Spiritual" fakes even as they have been protected from the demoralizing influence of the saloon."

Milton Baker writes from Oakland, Cal.: "Having seen the article in The Progressive Thinker, claiming that I went by the name of Martin Bailey while in Los Angeles, I beg to inform your readers that I went by my right name, Milton Baker. Also, I made no claim that I was endorsed by the N. S. A., or Mr. Barrett. When people asked me if I had half rates, I frankly told them the truth, that I had, and when I was asked if I held ordination papers, I admitted I did not, and the reason I had had rates without being ordained, was because Mr. Barrett secured me rates through his personal influence. I made no claims that he or the N. S. A. endorsed my work as a medium or speaker. Mr. Barrett did secure half rates for me, even though I held no ordination papers, through his personal influence."

Mrs. O. A. Bishop, the medium, has removed to No. 3721 Forest avenue, where she is living in her own house. Mrs. Bishop has been a medium all her life, and to say that she is most excellent is in accordance with the testimony of hundreds who have consulted her. Her mother, Mrs. Howard (if we remember the name rightly) was also a grand medium, and her estimable qualities were transmitted to her daughter. You can make engagements with her through Phone Douglas 1453.

Conrad Bock writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "The Advanced Spiritualist Association are holding good meetings at Schuelte's Hall, 19th and Wright, every Sunday evening at 7:45 and Friday at 2:30 p. m. Last Sunday evening the hall was crowded by the announcement that the Rev. W. F. Peck would lecture. The subject of his lecture, "Spiritualism," was ably and eloquently handled. The lecturer stated that Spiritualism was the basis of all religions, and that the founders were all inspired by the divine power. He proved spirit communion from the bible, and mentioned Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and his disciples, and Paul. The lecturer was followed by an inspired song entitled, "Angel Voices," by Mrs. Kate Price, after which Rev. Laura M. Jones, pastor of the society followed with her convincing way, the scientific demonstration of the immortality of the soul, and thus the good work goes on."

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "I take no stock in any system of mythology or theology. Both have served a purpose and had their day, but science and knowledge have dethroned them. Nothing can transpire in a universe governed by natural law that is unnatural. Life is natural and there is no death, but there is change and progress. I was evolved and became an ego under natural law, and must proceed as an ego under that law, perhaps forever and perhaps not. I can see evidence of infinite intelligence that is wonderful and it gives me joy and comfort to say Our Father. If I am to continue on as an ego I shall grow in strength, wisdom and harmony as I pass from plane to plane, and shall know more and more of the unmutable life. Although we grow to the stature of men and women here we do not put away childish things until nature compels us. The sensual earth-born soul, must be spiritualized and refined in order to increase in knowledge, truth and love. Love is the ultimatum. Physical death is only an event in life."

Helen Morse writes: "If you should see a friend with sadness in his face and looking as if he had no friends in this wide world and space, go up and slap him on the back and say, "look up! Your spirit friends will help smoothe your troubles all away."

Mrs. Lydia Jessup writes from Chesterfield, Ind.: "The camp grounds are in fine condition and are opened for the Summer. Many families are already in their cottages, and with the letters of inquiry and the interest taken generally, we are certain of the best camp we have ever had. Any one wanting information or programs, address me at Chesterfield, Ind."

Mrs. McKinley Creighton writes from Wheeling, W. Va.: "I wish to express a few words of appreciation in behalf of Dr. N. F. Ravlin. My husband and I have heard him lecture every Sunday for some time. His lectures are so uplifting and instructive, they are sincerely appreciated by those seeking for knowledge pertaining to the development of their spiritual natures while in this body, and after leaving the earthly house. What humanity most needs, to my mind, is to know who and what they are; to realize the kingdom of heaven within their own souls. To make heavenly conditions here in this world, I feel we must learn to live in this world before we are ready to live in another."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "At the Rising Sun Mission, on Sunday afternoon, June 11, Mrs. Martha Price gave a talk which was convincing to the most skeptical. She seems to reach the hearts of her hearers in her earnest, sincere way, and the impression she leaves with them is lasting. Sister Trafton also startled her hearers with her clear demonstrations of spirit return, bringing comfort to a number of sorrowing souls. In the evening Dr. J. H. Randall gave one of his inspiring lectures, which was listened to by an eager audience. We always welcome the Doctor to our platform. Sister Kingsbury who, by the way, is just starting out as an inspirational speaker, gladdened the hearts of a good many by her able remarks as to our life's work in the spirit world. Bro. Thompson and Sister Kirchner gave some grand spirit messages, which were readily accepted. Our choir as usual rendered some very fine selections. Our speaker for Sunday, June 25, will be Mr. H. F. Arnold, the rising young Spiritualist orator. We cordially invite all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3, and evening at 8, at Mission Hall, Peoples' Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. Our second annual picnic takes place on Saturday, July 1, at Reissig's Grove, Riverside. Come and have a day's outing and a good time."

Mrs. Harriet W. Hildreth writes from Worcester, Mass.: "'Tis nearly time for me to renew my subscription to your valuable paper. I am so thankful I can do so, and I want the new book, Spirit Letters. I was shut in this winter, and your welcome paper coming every week was far more to me than I can tell. The letters from spirit realms by Mr. Petersilea, make that realm seem more real than anything that ever came under my observation."

C. H. Mathews writes: "Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, those indefatigable Spiritualist missionaries and workers for the N. S. A., lectured and gave spirit messages and tests at Eagle Hall, New Philadelphia, Ohio, on Thursday and Friday evenings, May 25 and 26 to respectable-sized audiences. They are expected here again before the snow flies, and a welcome is assured them. Your No. 805 was so interesting that I transferred a large portion of it to Vol. XV of Mathews' Scrap Books, to be placed in the public library here. Hon. W. J. Bryan is to be at Clinton, Iowa, Sunday, July 30."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Gem of Thought:—

Of pow'rs that push and pow'rs that pull,
Old Nature is quite full;
Each must be good, it takes us on,
Until Life's task is done.

Let's trust the good through calm or change,
Each comes in Nature's range;
And pushed and pulled, just do our part,— Strength flows from Nature's heart.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Arlington Hall, Chicago, the Spiritual Science Society will continue its meetings all summer, and invites all who wish to join the society to send in their names, with return for membership card. We give each member free daily treatment for success in realizing health and development in their chosen phase of mediumship. We wish to co-operate with those in the same vibration, and let you enjoy and be benefited by the spirit vibrations we send out, and learn how to reach not only your friends on the next plane, but touch the highest intelligences that will give you dominion over all things. Address me at No. 44 East Thirty-first street."

D. G. Hill writes: "Again the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society has reason to feel thankful for the large attendance at the afternoon and evening sessions on Sunday, June 11. The speaker for the afternoon, Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Society Students of Nature, chose for subject of her discourse Mediums and Mediumship. Among the attractions we had a visiting sister, Mrs. E. Hulser from Sycamore, Ill., who as a trained and cultured singer, in connection with our organist, Mrs. Frankie Cole and our choir, rendered solos, duets and quartettes that carried the audience into ecstasies. Telling messages were given by Mrs. Kittie Gifford, Mrs. M. McIntyre and Mrs. Nora Hill. For the evening, with the brilliant orator and talented speaker, the Hon. Ex-State's Attorney and author, Charles Hughes, we had a feast of soul food. The same singers rendered the beautiful and soul-inspiring music and messages by Mrs. M. McIntyre and Mrs. Nora E. Hill that carried the truth straight to the believer and investigator; in fact these mediums seemed completely surrounded with spirits. One of our faithful workers, that bud of promise destined to become a beautiful flower in the grand work of teaching the truth of Spiritualism, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, was called away to her girlhood home in Canada on account of the health of her aged mother. We had communication with her and she reports that she was in time to find the mother still on the earth plane, and she sent her 'God bless you' to her friends and associates, and hopes to be with us in the work again some time in the coming month of July. When she returns she will find warm hearts and outstretched hands to welcome her. This society will close the season Sunday, June 25, when our speaker will be the well-known and capable man, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, followed by the beautiful christening service with flowers as conducted by the far advanced guides of Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Don't forget the date. We will open a summer meeting commencing the first Sunday evening of July and continue each Sunday evening of July and August. We have secured the help of able speakers and shall conduct an open door meeting, depending on the free will offerings of the attendants, feeling that the earnestness of our purpose to present the truth of Spiritualism will make a refuge for those who know the truth and an open door for those seeking the same. O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. All welcome."

F. Anlauf writes from Oklahoma City, Okla.: "We conduct meetings every Sunday evening, and the notices I write for the papers attract many investigators. Our principal speaker at present is Dr. G. L. Monroney, a staunch old Spiritualist and resident here, who has had a very large experience in the field of psychic research, and is a very good demonstrator and deep student. Mrs. D. M. Thorp and Nicholas Becker are our public mediums and are much appreciated for their unselfish work in behalf of our organization. We charge no admission, but take up a collection after the meetings, to partially cover expenses. I heartily approve of the vigorous warfare of Spiritualists against all fraud in our ranks. Oklahoma City certainly is not a good field for these 'spiritual' impostors, as they have left us alone ever since we saw them in their true colors and withdrew our support."

J. A. Ball writes from Thorntown, Ind.: "I find many articles in The Progressive Thinker that are well worth the price of an entire year's subscription."

Emma M. Nutt-Moore writes: "After a succesful season's work in Muncie, Ind., as speaker and medium, I have located in San Antonio, Tex., where I shall take up the work. Muncie and its people hold a very warm place in my heart, and I trust the friends may meet with unbounded success in their efforts to establish a permanent organization, and from the beautiful Southland we send greetings to our Indiana friends. Owing to the poor health of my husband we were obliged to make the change, and already it has been beneficial."

Frank T. Ripley has been lecturing and giving tests to large audiences in Defiance, Ohio. He will lecture and give tests at Kokomo, Ind., the last two Sundays of June.

W. F. Schumacher writes: "The closing exercises of the Students of Nature will long be remembered by those present. The house was filled to the doors. There was a fine program for the evening. Prof. Hunt and his orchestra of boys and girls gave a grand treat. Mrs. Nellie Kusserow gave a soul-stirring speech which will long be remembered. Mrs. McIntire followed with words of welcome. Brother Coe spoke of the Open Way. The recitations by the little ones called encores from all. Prof. Linn gave some fine readings, all well received. A good-bye till September."

Mrs. W. C. Selbrede writes from Billings, Mont.: "The Billings people had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley in one of her beautiful discourses, May 26, she being on her way to the Pacific coast. She is very eloquent and convincing in her lectures, and holds her audience spellbound for the evening. Her tests were grand, and recognized by all. We have been very fortunate in having the very best talent in our state so far, and we hope that Mrs. Cooley may be persuaded to return to Montana sometime in the near future and remain longer with us."

Isabella Powderly writes: "We had Mrs. Orm with us Sunday evening. She is a very forceful speaker. Mr. Russell will be with us the 17th. The 30th is mediums' meeting, which will be interesting to all. Do not forget the picnic July 4, at Jackson Park, north of the German Building. Everybody welcome. Spiritualists especially requested to be present."

W. G. Fairchild writes from Topeka, Kansas: "In view of the fact that false reports have been sent out about the work in Topeka, under the direction of the First Spiritualist Church of Topeka, which is a chartered auxiliary of the State Association, we wish to say, that we have been having some most excellent meetings all winter with Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe as pastor, and Mrs. Inez Wagner as message bearer. In regard to the meetings being held here, the First Spiritualist Church, without any advertising except a four-line church notice advertising its regular meetings, had in attendance on Sunday evening, June 11, 1905, by exact count two hundred and twenty-four people."

The permanent address of Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt is is 533 West Madison street, Chicago. He can be addressed there for engagements.

Mrs. G. A. Cowen lectured and gave tests last Sunday at Rockford, Ill. She answers sealed questions, and is very remarkable in that respect. She will attend the Clinton Camp. Her permanent address is No. 1441 Roscoe street, Chicago, Ill.

"Persons who have not studied carefully in the line of psychics," said the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton of New York in an address before the American Institute for Scientific Research, "have no idea of the marvelousness of the finds which are being made in this new realm. The most striking feature of our present day is that one after another of the beliefs of the far past, spread wide among men, which have been supposed to be mere superstitions, have been strangely vindicating themselves before the bar of reason, at least giving ample cause to warrant a scientific investigation."

Dr. Dobson-Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Union has engaged Rev. Allen Franklin Brown (state missionary) as the pastor for the month of June. He is much liked by the people in general, his quiet sedate manner gives a soothing influence to his audience, who give an attentive ear. We noticed during Mr. Brown's first lecture, that every eye was upon him, and every ear bent to catch the beautiful words of spiritual truths as they fell from his lips. Those receiving messages from his psychometric readings, were well pleased and anxious to meet and shake hands with one who could give them so much comfort. At some of his meetings, his guides ask for the subject to be given by the audience, and is always ably handled by the control. During the week he holds question meetings at the homes of the different friends, answering inquiry of spiritual and scientific lines. He with the assistance of the secretary, has gotten up a neat little program of the month's work, which is helping to awaken an interest, which is increasing and we look forward with a feeling, that a grand future awaits Rev. Brown. Those wishing his services, can address him during the month, San Jose, Cal., 236 N. Sixth street."

On the Fourth of July, the Illinois Ladies Sunflower Club will hold a basket picnic on the grounds of the Minnetonka Cottage, at Lake Bluff, Ill. A number of Chicago's most prominent mediums will give spirit messages between 2 and 4 p. m. Bring your lunch. Coffee, lemonade and ice cream served. Come and have a good time. Committee: Mrs. Isa Cross, president, 540 E. 55th street; Mrs. O. B. Wilson, vice-president, 2 E. 47th street; Mrs. Ella Bloom, corresponding secretary, 892 S. Turner avenue; Mrs. Frances Koehler, treasurer, 222 Irving avenue; Mrs. Belle Curtis, financial secretary, 615 Otto street.

Mrs. S. A. Griswold, who resides at East Toledo, O., writes: "N. B.—I employ an amanuensis, as I may be considered an invalid, caused by three slight strokes of paralysis. I cannot read or write much, but try to read The Progressive Thinker. I was eighty the 8th day of April, 1905. Regards to all true Spiritualists."

Correspondent writes: "Kansas City public meetings have been discontinued for the summer. The meetings held by Mr. and Mrs. Stevens at Pepper Hall, will be continued in October. These meetings owing to the superior controls of Mrs. Stevens, have gained a high place for spiritual thought and research in this progressive city."

E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries, will hold meetings in the Temple of the Friends of Human Progress, at North Collins, N. Y., Sunday, July 2, at 10 a. m., and 2 p. m. Let there be present all of the old-time friends of the North Collins meetings of the years gone by. Messages and tests will follow each lecture. Admission free. Everybody welcome.

Maggie Henry writes: "Sunday, June 11, at the Universal Occult Society, we had one of the most harmonious meetings I ever attended; not a very large audience but a very intellectual and appreciative one. The subjects were taken from the audience and were many and interesting. Messages given by Madame Lucile De Loux. Prof. J. K. Hillis gave fine messages. Strangers are cordially invited to attend."

Correspondent writes from Pittsburg, Kansas: "The society here is in a flourishing condition, both in finances, membership and attendance. Mrs. Nancy Coles of Weir City, near-by, favorably known all over the country as a reliable test medium, is the inspiration and regular speaker who expects now to be ordained in the ministry of Spiritualism."

D. W. Hull has so far recovered from his automobile accident of a few weeks ago as to contemplate a return to Olympia, Washington, where he will resume his practice of the healing art. He will attend calls for Sunday lectures at places not too distant in Washington, Oregon and British Columbia. Instantaneous healing performed at the close of each lecture.

Maurgerite Mac writes: "On Thursday evening, June 29, Mrs. M. A. Burland will hold her monthly test social in her parlors at 3019 Vernon avenue. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend and have a pleasant evening. Good psychics to give messages and tests, as well as to read the lines in your hands. On Friday evening, June 23, at the residence of Mrs. Davenport, at 3137 Rhodes avenue, a test social will be held for the benefit of Hugh Fraser (better known as the boy medium) who needs no recommendation as a test medium in Chicago. Other psychics will be present to assist him. All are invited to attend. Collection, 25 cents."

Mrs. Ella J. Bloom writes: "On the Fourth of July, the Illinois Ladies Sunflower Club, auxiliary to the I. S. S. A., will hold a basket picnic on the grounds of the Minnetonka Cottage, at Lake Bluff, Ill., beautifully located on the lake shore. A number of Chicago's most prominent mediums will be present. A good time is assured to all. come and get acquainted, and have the good time of your life. Tickets for the round trip 75 cents. Good on any train over the Chicago and Northwestern railroad (Wells street depot); 18 trains daily. Morning trains at 8:25, 9, 9:30 and 10 o'clock. Tickets can be had at the office of The Progressive Thinker; on the North Side from Mrs. Belle Curtis, 615 Otto street; South Side, Mrs. Dr. Cross, 560 East 55th street. A handsome hand-painted chocolate set, pot and six cups and saucers, donated by Mrs. Cross will be raffled off on this occasion. Chances on the same can be had of any member of the club, for 10 cents. Bring your lunch."

Correspondent writes: "St. George's Hall, 3337 State street, is, on Sunday evenings, one of the great places of interest for those studying the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. These meetings are conducted by Dr. Louis H. Freedman, the well known Australian healer and physician. As the people left the hall last Sunday evening these were the remarks they made: 'Well, after hearing the Doctor, I think there certainly must be something in Spiritualism;' 'how earnest he is and what a beautiful voice for singing.' 'I am coming again,' and so on. Chicago people should come and hear the Doctor, bringing both sick and well. The additional attractions offered were: Mr. Ellis, a medium lately come before the public, demonstrated spirits operating upon a telegraphic instrument without a key, independently, and gave very convincing messages. He will be present every Sunday evening. Miss Zazelle, a faithful and delightful medium, gave many messages, all of which were recognized. Mr. James Bliss needs no comment, as his ability as a pianist is well known. A spiritual, intellectual and musical feast is offered to all every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock sharp."

Dr. P. A. Pierson writes from Kansas: "Our state convention was held at Topeka, Kansas, June 1 to 4. I think the address of Judge S. M. Tucker, of Wichita, deserves special mention; it was of the kind that makes one a better Spiritualist for hearing. I also wish to mention A. Scott Bledsoe, who is a giant in the cause of true Spiritualism, and as an organizer has few equals. The spirit messages given by Mrs. Sallie W. Aber of Kansas City, Mo., was the best work of the kind ever witnessed, little Red Feather taking her through the crowded hall, giving some 60 or 70 tests, giving both names and tests correctly in every instance. When the work was finished our state president asked all those present who had received a message through Mrs. Sallie W. Aber, but had never met her before, to stand up; there were 21 persons stood up who received undoubted proof of the life beyond the grave; they had never met Mrs. Sallie W. Aber before."

T. O. Atkinson writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Church of the Soul held its closing services for the season, June 11. Mrs. T. B. Grunwald, the pastor, was the speaker. After the lecture she gave some very convincing psychometric readings, followed with messages by Mr. F. Emytsberger. This society was organized, Dec. 27, 1904. Our services ever since have been successful and satisfactory, and we are looking forward with pleasure when out little church shall open again in September. Our pastor is an energetic worker, sincere and earnest, loving her work. She is a firm believer in organization, realizing its importance in strengthening the cause of truth. She has lectured regularly for five months to good audiences, handling her subject intelligently, and conscientiously believing that the greatest success comes from living the truth. She will attend Camp Chesterfield and rest for the summer so as to be ready for her work next fall."

CHINA.

China has outlived all the other nations of antiquity. Her policy for thousands of years has been based upon the following rule of conduct: Whatsoever ye would not that others should do to you, do not ye to them. No other nation on the face of the earth has ever adopted such a rule of conduct.

Egypt lives only in her pyramids; Greece in her ruined temples of mythology or philosophy, and ancient Rome went down with all her military glory, when Julius Caesar, the then foremost man of the world, was assassinated.

Modern Rome is but a relic of ancient Rome, a sort of bastard, with imported Swiss guards to protect the Pontiff and Vatican, while Spain is fast sinking into oblivion. Perhaps her laboring class may catch the spirit of Socialism now agitating the masses of Central Europe, and may rise like France, and hurl their rotten dynasty from power forever.

Most of the crowned heads of Europe are trembling on their shaky thrones. The days of judgment and revolution are surely approaching. They have waded on their thrones through seas of blood; have trampled to power over the necks of millions; have turned the poor man's sweat and blood into robes for their bloated forms, into crowns for their anointed brows, and now for them comes the wrath of man, the lightnings of God!

The avenging spirits of murdered millions are hovering over their doomed heads, are carrying out the purpose of eternal justice—of retribution. It is safe to predict there will never be another King sit on a throne in France. She is today the foremost nation of Europe. Ever since that pusillanimous Charles the Seventh betrayed his savior and redeemer, Joan of Arc, Maid of Orleans, into the hands of brutalized English soldiers to be burned alive, the kings of France have lived and died like miserable doomed wretches, of some foul disease, beheaded, or banished.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but grind exceeding fine." Russia, today is reaping the reward of her inhuman treatment of her subjects banished to Siberia. The heavens above her are full of avenging spirits of the victims of her tyranny. Such are the awful lessons of history.

Why is it that China seems destined to outlive the other races and nations? Is it not due to her great moral law that from time immemorial has been the standard of both her foreign and domestic policy? She has never embarked in wars of conquest; she has refrained from injuring others, in accordance with her moral law as laid down by her great prophet, Confucius.

Chinese classics may yet be taught in our colleges.

China sends out no proselyting missionaries, and yet the Chinese who come to our country are missionaries of industry, economy and sobriety. They do not fill our jails and prisons. They are the purest blooded race on the earth and constitute one-third of the population of the globe.

For years our government has imitated her splendid administration by futile attempts at civil service reform. How ridiculous to hear people use the phrase, Heathen Chinese!

J. C. D.

KANSAS SPIRITUAL LEAGUE.

A New Organization for That State.

Mrs Virginia Bryan, of Chicago, who has been doing work in Kansas for the Spiritualists during the past year, and whose labors have been very successful, in compliance with an urgent request from all parts of the state, and from prominent Spiritualists, arranged for a mass meeting to be held in Topeka, June 9, 10 and 11. She procured the services of Dr. Geo. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A., and president of the Illinois State Association, and Mrs. Kayner and Mrs. Jaquet, both prominent mediums of Chicago.

Thoroughly understanding the needs of the Spiritualists in Kansas, Mrs Bryan was eminently fitted to take charge of the convention.

There was a goodly attendance of Spiritualists, six societies being represented.

Dr. Warne gave three very fine addresses, full of highest thought and sentiment. He is a very eloquent speaker.

Mrs. Bryan, Mrs. Jaquet and Mrs. Kayner gave messages which were recognized by the various members of the audience. They were very far above the ordinary, and far superior to anything in that line which Topeka has had for a long time. The lectures and messages created great interest in the Cause of Spiritualism, and led to the organization of a new State Association to be know as the Kansas Spiritualist League. The following are the resolutions adopted by the convention, and a list of the officers and board of directors:

Kansas has many believers in Spiritualism. Their numbers are yearly increasing. They hunger for spiritual knowledge. They long for growth. They want in full measure the agencies of development. Those agencies are to be found only in organization. Through organization, ideas are best propagated; through organization workers—evangels of the truth—are discovered, trained and sent into the field to teach and awaken those latent spiritual forces which now lie dormant in every county, in every community, in the church as well as out of it, and cause them to spring into life and bask in the sunlight of the spirit world. That organization must be broad and comprehensive, moving along the lines of right, guided by the torch of eternal truth, absolutely just in all relations to its members and the outside world. It must be the unyielding foe of ignorance, superstition and fraud. It must demand the genuine in everything, and enforce its demands. Expansion must be its motto. Many workers are needed in the field—not one, two or three. It is the business of the organization to find them and send them out.

Societies are to be organized and supplied with instructors—speakers, and mediums whose hearts are attuned to the music of the spirit spheres, and whose lives and aspirations place them far above the plane of cunning and deception, and enable them to draw from and give out the best that can come from the best side of spirit life.

Whereas, The demand for such an organization is urgent, and coming from all parts of the state, now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Spiritualists of Kansas, this day assembled in Topeka, that such a State Society of Spiritualists be organized and chartered; that a suitable Constitution and By-laws be drafted, and to this end the following committee is by this convention, chosen and entrusted to prepare a charter, constitution and by-laws:

George B. Warne, Cyrus Corning, H. W. Henderson, John White, Mrs. Lull. Be it further

Resolved, That this Association shall be called the Kansas Spiritualist League, and its officers for the first year are:

President, Cyrus Corning; first vice-president, W. F. Sailing, Winfield; second vice-president, B. F. Mundell, Wichita; third vice-president, Dr. Curts, Hutchinson; fourth vice-president, Mrs. Flora Allen, Manhattan; fifth vice-president, E. L. Marble, Ft. Scott; treasurer, A. Markley; board of directors, H. W. Henderson (chairman); Judge Thomas, Archer; Stephen Gates, Sterling; C. H. Moody, Miss May Clark, Spring Hill; Mrs. Anna Johnson, Ft. Scott; Leander Miller, Topeka; delegates to National Convention, George B. Moore, Topeka and Miss Rose Henderson, Lawrence.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the convention that Mrs. Virginia Bryan, Mrs. Kayner and Mrs. Lull, as mediums, are entitled to the confidence and patronage of the Spiritualists of Kansas, and we unhesitatingly recommend them.

Recommendations will be given to all worthy speakers and mediums who apply for same when desiring to enter the field to labor in behalf of the cause of Spiritualism.

Mrs. Kayner has returned to Chicago; Mrs. Bryan and Mrs Jaquet will for a time remain in Kansas with headquarters in Topeka. Kansas Spiritualists need them. They are good talkers, and first class mediums, as much above fraud and deception as right is above wrong. They will assist in planting loyal societies all over Kansas. Watch the growth of the League.

VIOLETS.

Through the long days of the chill wintry weather,
Coyly their purple lips whisper and wait.
Under their leaflets green, huddled together,
Violets bloom, though the spring cometh late.

Out from the south-land with sun-lighted tresses,
Cometh the trail of the fairy of spring;
Over their beds, with her love-warm caresses,
Perfumes of violet rise to her wing.

Like the bloom of the violet, tender and fair;
Though severed by oceans, love still will remember,
And bless with devotion the friendship we share.

—Addie L. Ballou in The Occidental Mystic.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait, his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mrs. Gus Torrell: Q. I have attended a seance lately, and I believe that the medium is honest and fair in her work. But I can't understand that any of my spirit loved ones from Sweden and Germany can come and talk to me in the English language, for none of them knew how to talk English in earth life. The spirits were 91 and 73 years old when they departed this life. When I asked my spirit father where he learned his English, he said, "Why, I hear you every day."

A. There is a most perfect phase of sensitiveness, wherein the mind of the recipient is completely under control of the operator—mortal or spirit—in which words, as names, dates, etc., are impressed. In this state a language unknown to the medium may be used, either spoken or written. This, however, is of rare occurrence. The spirit must be satisfied with impressing thoughts, not words, and such thoughts of course clothe themselves in the language known to the medium. If the medium be unlearned in grammar, or orthography, this will appear in the rendering of the thoughts received. Yet, again it must be borne in mind that with the increase of completeness of control, will the personality of the medium disappear in that of the impressing spirit. There is no sharp demarkation, and the investigator is often confused with the inseparable blending.

Spirits converse by thoughts, not words, unless they please to use such means, and thought waves, take form in words in the mind of the recipient.

A thought is sent along a telephone wire in electric waves, which in the receiving instrument resolve into sound waves, expressing words. These sound-waves are again resolved into thoughts when they strike the organs of hearing.

Hence this correspondent may not expect to converse in the language of her spirit friends, except under rare conditions, and must accept the internal evidences of the messages she receives, as proving their genuineness.

G. H. Jackson: Q. In what states can a magnetic healer practice legally?

A. There are few of the states that have not stringent laws in favor of the doctors' trust, which is the most tyrannical of any trust in this country. Massachusetts is a conspicuous example of a fair field for all, but with the meeting of every assembly, the doctors' law has been brought up, and a strong fight made by the friends of medical liberty.

Ohio is an example of the full force of the trust. In that state for an old mother to prescribe a mint tea for a neighbor's sick child, would make her a criminal before the law.

But there is one escape for magnetic healers, and as it is in perfect accord and a necessity of their success they can well adopt it. If no charge is made for services, no objection can be maintained. Spiritual healing depends for its full efficacy on the unselfish devotion and fraternal love of the healer, and at its best cannot be sold, as the ordinary physician sells his extracts and powders. The healer must devote himself for the good of his patients, for Supreme love, and only by so doing does his task become truly spiritual.

The subject then is lifted up by faith and confidence in the power that is not at the beck of sordid desires.

And this applies to all spiritual gifts. They are priceless and not to be measured by money.

To make a business of mediumship is to prostitute it to selfishness.

When we look over the past we find that all the disasters which have come to spiritual advancement have come from demand for pay, and this commercial business is its demoralization and ruin to-day.

Mrs. A. C. Betts: Q. Is it true that heathen nations owe their civilization to Christian missionaries?

A. This question grows out of the Rockefeller gift to the American Board for Foreign Missionary Work. Perhaps no gift never caused more discussion, and it must be admitted that the giver is most unpopular that his money is said to be so "tainted" thereby as to be rejected. It was not for a religious motive that he gave his money, but for commercial reasons. If the heathen are enlightened they will have new demands created and will trade more. The trade of Japan is a thousand times more than is expended for missionaries in that country. The Sandwich Islands are now independent of missionaries, having become Christianized, and trade has advanced from nothing to seventeen million dollars a year.

The conclusion is that missionaries pay, if not in converting the heathen, in a commercial way, and the cause should be supported for commercial reasons if for no other.

It is true the missionary has been the herald of trade. He has gone to the heathen to preach the gospel, and when repudiated by those they sought to save, persecution has been the cry, and the soldier has been called to compel the heathen to receive the religion of the preachers.

The trader has followed close on the missionary. At times the same ship that carried the ministers of the gospel of peace and the Bible, also carried the trader and a cargo of whisky.

The Sandwich Islands is the last of examples of the effect of Christianity that it would be presumed the advocates would bring forward. True the islands are Christianized and civilized. How? By conversion of the natives? Oh, No. When Captain Cook discovered them, the population was estimated at 400,000, and the people were the most intelligent and advanced of all the races of the pacific seas. The missionaries made extraordinary efforts for their conversion. They carried ship loads of bibles, tracts, rum, and with them went the peculiar diseases which the "pure religious faith" has engendered. The helpless natives melted before the attack like frost in the sun, and now between thirty and forty thousand, only, remain. Europeans, coolies, and the nondescript people of the sea have taken their place and the missionaries have a province of the United States to show for their effort.

It is also true that Japan has made wonderful progress since western ideas were forced upon her. But have the missionaries had anything to do with this progress? Is its government Christian? Has it swerved from its old faith? Read the speeches of its leaders at the celebrations of their victories, for answer.

If missionary labor has performed such wonders in developing heathen races, why has not the efforts of ministers at home become more fruitful? Russia is under the rule of the priest and the most orthodox religion. Would her people be taken as an example of what Christianity has done and can do? Stupefied by ignorance, cruel, unfeeling, selfish, brutal from czar to peasant; hopelessly besotted in superstition and bigotry, it seems impossible for them to realize what freedom means. As another illustration, of the countless ones which might be given, the Indians were here right before Christianizing effort. They have been missionaried almost out of existence, and in a brief time the last of that race will have taken leave for the great hunting grounds over the divide, and he will die at heart a savage.

The splendid race of Maoris of New Zealand is rapidly disappearing, as all other savage races which are brought in contact with European civilization, and made subservient to its religion and trade.

The savage does not, and cannot comprehend the subtilties of Christian faith, but is quick to adopt the evil practices and habits, and like the degenerates of civilized people, rush to destruction.

Nearly all the trouble with foreign peoples grows out of the presence of the missionaries. As the Chinese minister recently said, his nation did not ask them to come, did not want them, and were forced to allow them to remain. Suppose China should attempt to establish missions to propagate her faith, in our cities, and force their acceptance by the presence of war-ships? Would we think the benefits of "trade" would atone for our humiliation?

CUPID AND DEATH—AN ALLEGORY.

One evening Death met Cupid in a wood,
Where nest the tuneful nightingales and sparrows,
And, as 'twas meet such shining archers should,
Ere they embraced they threw aside their arrows.

Their greeting over, they prepared to rise
And soar away o'er distant lakes and rivers,
But found, to their annoyance and surprise,
That many arrows had escaped their quivers.

Now as the day was verging on the dark,
Best time for business, both were in a hurry;
Death had in mind a more than usual mark,
The rosy god a maiden's heart would flurry.

And, though unfortunate, it was not odd,
Since Love was nude, and nimble as a sprite, too,
That, in his haste, the world's most welcome god
Should get more arrows than he had a right to.

This legend may explain, however weird—
Because it casts must light on things prenatal—
Why Cupid's darts, at first so little feared,
Have, since that meeting, many times proved fatal.

And sages say that accident accurst,
No doubt explains why love begun with laughter,
And which is so divinely sweet at first,
Is often full of bitterness years after.

For some of Cupid's arrows, it is thought,
While mingled in confusion with his master's,
Obtained the deadly taint that since has wrought
To many matrimonial disasters.

And though at once the poison does not slay,
In fact at first is never e'en suspected,
Like leaven it augments from day to day
Until it culminates in love's decay
And Hymen's holy shrine at last neglected.

A BEACON LIGHT TO THE WHOLE WORLD.

ed party," but an association of thoughtful men and women who are bound together in the largest spirit of fellowship and devotion to the welfare of the world; and I call upon you this morning to bear witness to this request which I make of you, and to which I ask you, if necessary, to firmly hold me, that if, at any time, I shall lose the spirit of humility, the spirit of devotion to the common good, or the spirit that promotes freedom and progress, to place someone else in my stead as the Permanent Minister of The Fellowship.

When the voice of the young Goethe began to be heard in Germany, some of the older seers of that land questioned whether it was the utterance of a prophet or no; and when the young man made his first visit to the venerable Herder, the old philosopher met the young poet at his door and, stretching out both his hands and looking wistfully into his countenance, said, "Bist du es? Bist du es?" (Are you it? Are you it?). This is the question that the people of Los Angeles and those everywhere who may learn concerning you and your plans have a right to ask. The answer to this question, "Are you the church that should come, or do we look for another," can be given only by great Father Time; but this I do know—that until now, and at the present time, this is a movement

OF THE GREAT UNSEEN SPIRIT.

I like the German word "Zeitgeist," which means the Spirit of the Age. This is another name for what in the Christian vernacular we call "The Holy Spirit," for the Spirit of Our Time is the Spirit of All time. Let this be The Church of the Zeitgeist; and I give myself, and I call upon you to devote yourselves, to the ministry of the Zeitgeist, the Holy Spirit manifest in the twentieth century.

I have heard a story of a southern battlefield, where the general thought that he had lost the conflict, and yet it seemed to him that if a battery on an eminence a short distance away could be silenced there might still be hope of victory, but he knew it would cost the slaughter of numbers of his bravest troops. He called an adjutant and said, "Go, take my compliments to General Cheatham and tell him that I ask from him the fort on yonder hill." The orderly rode away and in a little while came back and said, "General Cheatham has been missing for an hour." The commander paced bad forth in these critical seconds, which were worth more than ordinary days, and then said, "Take my compliments to General Cleburne and tell him I ask from him the fort on yonder hill." The orderly rode away and in a little while came back and said. "General Cleburne has been shot from his horse." "Go," said the commander, "take my compliments—take my love to General Cockerell and tell him that I ask at his hands the fort on yonder hill." When the messenger had reached his destination this general was seen going out, not apart from his troops but with them; half of them gone, nine-tenths of them gone, with just a few left, they climbed the eminence, rushed over the battery wall and the guns were silenced. Then the orderly came riding back and said, "General Cockerell presents his love to General Hood and with it the fort on yonder hill."

Oh, men and women! standing here to-day in the name of the Great Spirit of Freedom, of Progress, of Truth and of Love, I bring to you this message: THE GREAT SPIRIT SENDS TO YOU HIS LOVE AND HE ASKS AT YOUR HANDS THE ABOLITION OF THE TREACHEROUS WIRE NETS AND FENCES OF THE SUPERSTITIONS OF THE PAST. He asks an explosion and destruction of the deadly mines of pride and prejudice and passion. He asks you to climb the heights fortified with the reactionary religious and economic and political entrenchments of centuries of selfishness. He asks you to stand your ground under the rain of the small shot of misunderstanding and misrepresentation, and to advance in the name of the Eternal Word against the booming batteries of those who falsely claim to speak for law and order and God himself. He asks from you the descent into the dark valleys where are the oppressed and unfortunate and discouraged, the ignorant, the poverty-stricken and the weak, our brothers and sisters who are enslaved, and that you break their bonds and set them free. He asks your sympathy for every living creature, even our little brothers and sisters of what we call the animal world. He calls upon you to manifest the invincible courage of a sublime trust and the constructive, irresistible power of unlimited love. And may it be that we shall yet gather with joy and exultation in our hearts and the songs of victory upon our lips, and wave this answer back: "Great Eternal Spirit of Our Time, we, the children of the hour, present to Thee our love and with it these fortresses of gloom and evil forever silenced, the City of the Angels become the home of angelic men and women,

'Diviner but still human,
Solving the riddle old,
Shaping the Age of Gold,' and sending vibrations of peace on earth and good-will among men to the remotest homes of the dwellers upon earth." Thus, to use the great words of Theodore Parker, shall we help to build

"The coming church—the church universal—
Whose temple shall be all space,
Whose shrine shall be the heart,
Whose creed shall be all truth,
Whose ritual shall be works of love and usefulness,
Whose profession of faith shall be divine life,
Whose constant aspiration shall be to be as perfect as God."

A SUGGESTIVE DITTY.

At times an impulse comes to me
That has a power that's quite its own,
And gives to me new thoughts of things,
Leading me into paths unknown.
At times like this I take my pen,
Or pencil as the case may be,
And write with rapid moving hand
The waves of thought that come to me.

Sometimes impressions seem to come,
To show me I've a work to do,
To teach in simple verse and song
That spirits can return to you.
How many times a truth is shown,
In plainest garb, to those in doubt,
Are made so clear—when, in a talk,
They'd wonder what 'twas all about.

So I have had some put in print,
These verses that have come to me,
And offer them to those in need
Of fun and of philosophy.
And should some person wish the book
And wonder what is the expense?
My muse now answers with a smile,
The booklet sells for fifty cents.

UNIQUE MEDIUMSHIP.

A New Phase of Spirit Manifestation Through Dr. J. P. Johnson.

To the Editor:—I am a reader of your excellent paper, and take great pleasure in writing you of a manifestation of spirit power which is different from anything I have ever seen or known of before.

Early in March last, Dr. Julian P. Johnson, of this city, had a vision in which he was shown many scenes in the spirit world and was told that he was to paint them. On waking the following morning the spirit appeared to Dr. Johnson and told him to secure a canvas, giving the size, and prepare for work. The Doctor said: "I have never painted a picture in oil, and know nothing about it." The spirit replied, "Make a copy from a study which you have and then we will be ready." This was done as ordered, and this first painting was done by the Doctor as readily and easily as an experienced artist could have done it, though he had never taken a lesson in painting. The spirit artist even directed what colors to purchase and prepare.

Another large canvas was then ordered by the spirit. We were all told in a trumpet circle, at which Mr. Stevens of Columbus was the medium, that the Doctor was appointed to give the world some paintings of real scenes in the spirit world. In keeping with this promise all preparations being made, the Doctor was standing one morning in his room before the canvas, some days after the canvas had been purchased, and he noticed shadows begin to form on the canvas, and the spirit told him to take his charcoal and go to work. Then followed an interesting experience to which I was a witness. Under partial control, Dr. Johnson rapidly sketched the outlines of a strange and wonderful picture, never making a measurement, never a calculation, and with nothing visible whatever to go by except what the spirits showed him.

The sketch being made he then proceeded to put in the colors. Having to work at spare moments when not occupied by his professional duties, it required over six weeks to complete the painting. Many times I was privileged to watch the work in progress. The Doctor is almost entirely oblivious to his surroundings while at work on the picture. There was every indication of the presence and work of an unseen power. Finally the painting was finished and the guides gave the explanation of the whole painting. The name of it is "The Great Commission; a Scene in the Spirit Land." It lies on the border between the second and third spheres. It shows in the foreground a temple of healing, trees and flowers. Then a bridge over a broad river, and in the distance a city called "The City of Rest." Towering high are the domes of the great Temple of Learning, and the Hall of Worship.

Standing by the Temple of Healing in the foreground is the commanding figure of Jeremiah, the old bible prophet, dressed in the official robe of the great brotherhood of which he is now one of the supreme officers on spirit side. Before him one still in the mortal form kneels to receive a commission and book of instructions in this great Brotherhood whose mission on earth is to work out a realization of universal enlightenment, universal freedom and universal brotherhood. There are several other figures in the painting. Altogether the picture is one that holds and fascinates all who see it. There is nothing like it, I am sure, on canvas. The coloring is extraordinarily fine, and presents a peculiar finish which forces the conclusion that the claim of the spirit artist is true and that we have before us an instructive reproduction of a real scene in the Morning Land.

The Doctor has had the painting photographed, and by request of many friends a number have been made; and in the interest of the cause a copy will be sent to anyone who sends to him the actual cost of the photograph, which is thirty-five cents. The painting is 30 by 42 inches, and the photograph is eight by ten. It shows the whole picture admirably, excepting, of course, the fine color effects. Many people in this part of the country consider this painting a marvel of spirit manifestation.

In testimony of the facts concerning this painting, I append a copy of an affidavit which was made out and signed at the conclusion of the work of painting this picture.

MRS. NELLIE OXANDER.

We, the undersigned, hereby certify that we have seen the painting called "The Great Commission; a Scene in the Spirit Land," by Dr. Julian P. Johnson, and have watched the progress of it from time to time while he was painting it. From the extraordinary and peculiar character of the painting itself, from the Doctor's manner and methods while painting it; from what we ourselves have received from spirit sources independently of Dr. Johnson; and from our own intuition, we firmly believe this painting to have been done under inspiration of spirit forces, and to be what it purports to be, an actual scene in the spirit land. Signed:

MRS. NELLIE OXANDER.
T. S. CLIDDEN.
J. A. PUGH.

I hereby certify that the above named parties have each and all personally appeared before me, and being duly sworn affixed their signatures to this article, this, the 2nd day of May, 1905.

"MATERIALIZED" FLOWERS.

One Method by Which They Can Be Transferred to Mrs. Howland.

There can be but little doubt that the Howlands now figuring in The Progressive Thinker, and the Howlands who gave the "materializing and flower seances" (the simple result, no doubt, of legerdemain), in Los Angeles, about two years ago, are the same, because the report of their doings down east, and the letters from them published in The Progressive Thinker, could come from nobody else.

A man with a physiognomy like his is not going to starve while there are thousands of gullible Spiritualists ready to believe almost anything.

Mr. Hill in his letter published in The Progressive Thinker says: "If their [the Howland's] manifestations are natural tricks of material humans—expose them. Tell me where they kept the white garments? Tell me where they kept the flowers," etc.

Mr. Howland seems to think that the tricks performed by his wife are past finding out; for in his letter to the Banner of Light, dated April 17, he says: "There are no materializing or flower mediums within the ranks of Spiritualists who can duplicate our seances under the same conditions."

There need be no mystery about the Howlands' methods any longer, for they are all very simple—anybody can do them, when they know how. Here is one method: The flowers and the white garments which Mrs. Howland uses in her seances can be supplied by a woman confederate of hers; this woman can carry the flowers or the white toggery, whichever is needed for the occasion, cunningly concealed in her petticoat—a garment made for the purpose. This woman confederate you will always find among the ladies on the committee. When Mrs. Howland has been undressed and searched, this stuffed petticoat can be deftly handed to the medium, to wear during the seance. So you see this trick can be worked right in the face of the committee, and many good people like Mr. Hill are puzzled to know, if it be a trick, how the flowers and white toggery get into the cabinet.

BOOK REVIEW.

Societies for the prevention of the spread of consumption and other forms of tuberculosis, have been formed, and sanitario are being established, but the process is slow and for a long time must be inadequate to the demands. Often the patients are not able to bear the expense and prefer to suffer and die rather than burden their friends. It is for these home patients Dr. Densmore writes. In his book he plainly gives directions how to prepare a room in the humblest as well as most wealthy dwelling, so that it will equal in practical utility the best equiped sanitarium. He gives directions as to diet, manner of living, clothing, in fact every detail, and as no drugs are given a doctor is superfluous. The cures thus made are remarkable and the book everything to be desired.

There is no place like home to the sick, and if the home can be equiped with the facilities of a hospital, a great advantage is gained.

When doctors become hopeless of a patient, and can think of no other remedy, they recommend a change of climate, or a hospital. If the patient is peeuniarily unable to carry out such recommendations, it becomes a source of regret, or if complied with, at great sacrifice. If the home can be made to take the place of the hospital and climate, it is in every way preferable. Dr. Densmore has done a great favor to the suffering in writing this book. It is timely and to all afflicted with disease, and we may add to those in health desiring to maintain its highest estate, the book is of inestimable value.

N. S. A. Missionaries' Report.

For the Months of March, April and May, 1905.

On March 1, we held our last meeting at Ashland, Oregon. The next day we went to Dunsmuir, Cal., where we held two public meetings and organized under a charter from the California State Spiritualists Association. We spent but thirty-five hours in Dunsmuir, but hastened forward to fill an engagement in San Francisco.

We were entertained in San Francisco by J. S. and Annie L. Gillespie. Mr. Gillespie is the very efficient president of the California State Spiritualists Association, and Mrs. Gillespie is the regular speaker at the People's Church at San Francisco.

We assisted Mrs. Gillespie in the services at the People's Church on the first Sunday in March, and the First Spiritualist Aid Society arranged for our work during the week days following. We feel sure we were successful in convincing our audiences of the fact that thorough organization is the only means by which the general public, the Spiritualists, and the mediums may be protected and the cause properly advanced.

There are many Spiritualist meetings being held in San Francisco and Oakland, and both cities have reason to be proud of their many excellent speakers and mediums. The Philosophical Journal, with that veteran Spiritualist, W. T. Jones as editor, and the Occidental Mystic, a new, neat and newsy Spiritualist magazine edited by Mr and Mrs. Arthur S. Howe, are the leading Spiritualist publications, and are deserving of the support of all Spiritualists. Our cause in San Francisco needs only this: Concentration of the forces I have named, and united action. In other words, thorough organization.

While in San Francisco we were invited to take dinner with our old-time friend Henry Harrison Brown, in the new home of the "Now." The "Now," I believe, is the official organ of the New Thought movement; at any rate Mr. Brown is the president of the New Thought organization. They are developing an excellent psychic in this New Thought home.

New Thoughtists develop psychics; Theosophists and other cults develop mystics and independent clairvoyants; Spiritualists develop just plain mediums. It is somewhat a matter of taste, that's all.

Brother Brown is doing a good work for humanity and we are perfectly willing, and insist that he do it in his own way, though it would be nice if he would come back to his old way. We enjoyed the visit with our old friend and the "Now" family very much.

We spent one week in San Francisco, and moved on to San Jose, Cal., where we found a small struggling society. Mrs. Bigelow, the president, did all in her power to make the two Sunday meetings a success. It rained all day and the audiences were consequently small. We were told that this society owns a valuable property the rent of which will soon free it from debt.

There was formerly a good strong society in San Jose, and as nearly every society has its ups and downs, no doubt but this one will soon be strong again. The few earnest workers who now have it in charge were hopeful; and the encouragement brought by the missionaries was highly appreciated as the good words of officers and members testified. Regrets at the shortness of our visit, and invitations to return soon were plentiful.

Mr. Allen Franklin Brown drove from Los Gatos (12 miles) in a terrible rain to attend our meetings. On his return home he disposed of his ranch, secured the appointment of state missionary for California, and has again entered the field. His former success as a missionary is good evidence of his ability in that field of labor.

We visited Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson in her home, Sunnybrae, Cupertino, Cal., where we also met Mr. and Mrs. Grant Taylor. Mrs. Taylor is Mrs. Watson's daughter Lucretia, and Grant Taylor (her husband) is the second son of the well known Spiritualist worker, George W. Taylor of Lawton, N. Y: We enjoyed our brief stay in this lovely home more than words can express.

Mrs. Watson's home is one of California's loveliest. It is surrounded by orchards of prunes and they extend for scores of miles. The trees were full of beautiful and fragrant white blossoms and when viewed from an eminence presented a picture, a paradise that would defy the powers of imagination to describe.

Sunnybrae is a typical Garden of Eden. Its orange trees were filled with ripe golden fruit and laden with sweet-scented orange blossoms at the same time; other trees laden with lemons almost ready to break down with their burdens, and other varieties of fruit trees were in abundance. There were great palms magnificent in their grandeur, long hedges of rose bushes filled with bloom; climbing roses and other vines covered with flowers of every hue, and many other semi-tropical plants, vines, flowers and fruits, and last but not least the grand old "Temple Oak," extending its great arms nearly one hundred and fifty feet, as though reaching out to embrace those who come to it for protection from sunshine or storm. Under this mammoth tree, the "Temple Oak," Spiritualist and other liberal and fraternal meetings have been held from time to time for many years.

In the midst of all this beauty and loveliness is situated Mrs. Watson's hospitable home, where we spent three restful and happy days.

We had a feast. All our senses were feasted. We feasted our eyes on the beautiful scenery, our olfactory sense upon the sweet fragrance of orange blossoms blended with that of the hundred and one other varieties of the flowery kingdom; our ears caught the sweet music of the wild birds that filled the air; our palates responded beautifully to the lovely flavors of oranges, peaches, pears, cherries and other fruits, some freshly gathered, some preserved, and otherwise prepared to be enjoyed. The temperature was like June in New York (though it was the first of March) and we enjoyed feeling comfortable.

There was another product of this beautiful California home that appealed to us ever more than all of the above described loveliness; it was the kindly greeting and genuine welcome that we were made to feel: The conditions in this home were truly spiritual; the very gates of heaven were open and we enjoyed a genuine spiritual feast. May heaven bless these fraternal souls, visible and invisible, that ministered to us on this occasion.

Santa Cruz, Cal., was our next stopping place. Here we found a small society doing good work. It has had much trouble, but seems hard to kill. Mr. F. H. Parker, the President, and his good wife, together with a few good supporters, are the life of the society, and refuse to give up the good fight.

This society has a regular speaker who is a platform test medium (her name I cannot recall). She assisted us in the meeting and her work was good. The longer we remained the larger attendance we had at our meetings. Our work was appreciated and was helpful to the society.

We stopped at Santa Barbara one day and night. The once flourishing society of that place was dead. No meetings were being held in the place. No one cared to take the responsibility of arranging for meetings, and we moved on to Summerland, Cal.

We held three meetings in Summerland, and with excellent results. The Summerland society owns a large and commodious temple free from debt. We succeeded in adding twelve new members to the society, and disseminating peace and good will among the members. The society is chartered with the state association and is in full sympathy with our organization.

Mr. John Lillie furnished the music and Mrs. R. S. Lillie assisted us in one of our meetings. It was a great inspiration to hear good Brother Lillie sing, and to hear Sister Lillie's earnest and telling words of inspiration once more. Dear souls these two lilies are. We spent a few hours in their home and were treated to a carriage ride up and down one of the most beautiful valleys of the state. The Lillie home is as beautiful as hedges of calla lilies, rose hedges, climbing vines covered with blossoms of many colors and many other flowers and beautiful shrubbery could make it. This home is sufficient to keep up the flow of inspiration in full volume for these two Lillies for many years.

Just before leaving Summerland we received a pressing call to return to Santa Barbara and hold some meetings. The call came too late, as we had arranged to serve the society at San Diego and were obliged to go there.

We found one of our finest societies in San Diego. It owns a new and beautiful church or temple; it is complete in every particular, a lovely modern church. Mr. C. A. Buss is president and Mr. McFeron is secretary. Each member of the board fills his or her place to perfection; they are sustained by a large and enthusiastic membership and all work in harmony. Nothing is lacking in this society. It has speakers and mediums competent to carry on the work without foreign talent. We met a number of the old veteran workers in San Diego, among them, Will C. Hodge, Charles A. Gaines, of Anderson, Indiana, and A. W. Belden of Middlefield, Ohio. Our work was well appreciated and we made many friends for our cause and the organization.

At Los Angeles, arrangements were made by the Truth Seekers' Society for a three-days' anniversary meeting. A fine program was carried out at each of the nine sessions held. Mr. S. D. Dye, N. S. A. trustee, presided. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, the regular speaker of the society, together with a number of the Los Angeles mediums, speakers, and musicians, joined with us in making this one of the most successful meetings we have participated in for sometime. The hall was well filled at most of the meetings; at the last one, five hundred persons were present and many went away for lack of room.

Forty new members were added to the society, and including special collections for the N. S. A., over one hundred and forty dollars remained for the Truth Seekers' Society and the N. S. A., after all expenses were paid. This closed the work of the month of March.

On Monday evening, April 3, the Truth Seekers' Society gave a reception in honor of Mrs. Lillie and the missionaries. It was a very enjoyable affair. We had the pleasure of meeting many of the Spiritualists and mediums of Los Angeles.

At Fresno we found the work of our cause at a standstill; we held five meetings and organized a society of forty members, chartered it with the California State Association, instructed them how to carry on the work successfully without employing permanent speakers, and left them filled with hope and courage.

Our friends in Salt Lake City failing to receive our most important letter, made a mistake of one week in our date and we arrived one week earlier than they were arranging for, so after remaining two nights in the great Mormon city, we moved on to Grand Junction, Colorado, where we organized a society of nineteen members and chartered it with the N. S. A. Earnest Spiritualists are working hard in Grand Junction. Missionary work is much needed, and we should have remained longer but a hall was not available during the week.

We held two meetings in Glenwood Springs, Colo., a little city on the very top of the Rocky Mountains. The Town Hall was well filled each evening, though eight hours only were given to advertising the first meeting. A good society may be organized in Glenwood Springs. It only needs the right kind of work.

At Leadville, Colo., we found everything in readiness for our coming. Mrs. L. Agnes Moulton and her good assistants had been holding socials, etc., from time to time during the winter, thereby raising money to pay the expense of the meetings. We held five public meetings and one for Spiritualists only, and organized a society of thirty-seven members, and the cause of Spiritualism in this city above the clouds (altitude 10,200 feet above the sea) has received a new impetus.

We stopped in Colorado Springs and held a parlor meeting there at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sinton. Mrs. May Taylor-Sinton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Taylor of Lawton, N. Y., and sister of Grant Taylor of Cupertino, Cal., whom we previously mentioned. We enjoyed our two-days' stay in Colorado Springs. We should have remained longer so as to have organized a society, for one could be organized there. As we found nothing being done to advance the cause of Spiritualism in this city by the mountain side, and learned that there are many Spiritualists there, it seems quite apparent that to organize a society there would be a benefit to our cause. How can anyone doubt the value of missionary work and organization.

We closed the month of April and began the month of May in Denver. Public halls were hard to get, so Mr. A. P. Roberts and wife, Mr. W. C. Marshall and Mrs. B. Rubicam kindly gave us the use of their parlors for four meetings. On Sunday Mr. Geo. M. Bacon and Mrs. Della Despers kindly contributed the use of their hall and turned their meetings over to us. There was a large attendance at these two meetings. Mr. Bacon was the president of the only society in Denver that was chartered with the N. S. A. There are several societies holding articles of incorporation from the state of Colorado. Some of these societies have granted credentials to mediums, and we were told that the privilege had been abused to such an extent that the common council had refused to honor some of these credentials and were collecting the license fee which is $50 per year, from some who held them.

We organized a new society composed of 47 substantial members, and they propose to learn who are, and who are not, entitled to the credentials, enlorsement and protection of our organization; they will gladly assist the common council in discriminating between the true mediums and the fakirs. The traveling pretenders have nearly ruined the good work of Spiritualism in Denver.

We spent a couple of days at Omaha, Neb., but held no meetings there, as it was not an opportune time to do so. Missionary work is needed there as elsewhere.

At Oskaloosa, Iowa, we found a fine society, well officered, working in harmony, and doing much good. We held four meetings all of which were well attended. The Oskaloosa society is loyal to our organization and its purposes.

We spent two nights and one day in Bloomington, Ill. The society that we organized here one year ago has held regular meetings each week. It employed foreign talent all winter and the interest warranted them in moving into a larger hall. This good work would not have been done without the organization.

We held two meetings in Farmer City, Ill., in the pretty little Spiritualist church, and we thought what a blessing to a society to own its own place of meeting. If every society could own such a nice little church or temple as this one, how much better our cause would prosper. The Farmer City society is all right, and Spiritualism is respected the more for having its own temple.

We held four meetings at Peru, Ind. Mr. A. E. Schram, the president of the Indiana State Association, is also president of the local society at Peru. No one could fill either place more successfully. This local society is an active one. It has had some of the best talent in the land upon its rostrum. Our meetings were well attended and appreciated.

We held but one meeting at Rochester, Ind. The splendid work of this society in the years gone by is a matter of history. Of late years reverses have overtaken it. A number of its staunch supporters have passed to the higher life, several families have moved away, and the membership has decreased, but those that remain are of the persevering kind and will never give up the ship.

We visited the society that we organized at Sandusky, Ohio, and found it doing continuous and effective work. Mr. Irving Jackson, its president, is fully alive to the work and has good backing in the other members of the board. It is pleasant to visit the societies we have organized and note the good work they are doing.

We held two meetings at Elyria, Ohio. The society is doing good work. We were told that twelve new members were ready to join the society, and also that our meetings had given the movement new life.

That faithful and untiring worker, Mr. F. W. Martin is again president of the Elyria society, which insures its success.

At Alliance, Ohio, we found the church closed for the season. All that was required was to unlock the door, turn on the electric lights and go on with the meetings, for the Spiritualists own a lovely church in Alliance.

For nearly a quarter of a century the Alliance society has been faithfully working for the cause of humanity, and it has done a mighty work.

We visited New Philadelphia, Ohio, where we held two meetings. We found the Spiritualists active, their influence extending to other towns in that vicinity. The society that we organized in New Philadelphia some seven years ago is still alive and its work of the past is felt in the present.

The evidence of the growth and advancement of Spiritualism and the good its organization is doing, is everywhere to be seen, and it should be an inspiration to all who love the cause, to push forward, work harder and make every undertaking a success.

The reader may think of the missionaries in their home during the month of June, where they are enjoying a good rest after eleven months of active work and varied experiences in the blessed field of Spiritualism.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

William English, son of S. T. and F. A. Stewart, passed to spirit life, April 27, 1905. Funeral conducted by the K. of P., of which he was a member. He leaves a wife and one child, Josephine. He was only 30 years old. He was a noble man. S. T. STEWART.
New Sharon, Iowa.

Passed to spirit life, Sally Ballou, age 82, Sunday, June 4, at her late residence, 427 Fargo avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. She had been a Spiritualist many years. Her last request was that she be given a Spiritual funeral, which was conducted by the writer.
MRS. A. G. ATCHESON.
Buffalo, N. Y.

Passed to spirit life, May 24, W. Dinglacher, aged 65. He was a member of our society and a reader of The Progressive Thinker for a number of years. He leaves a wife, two daughters and one son. Mr. John W. Ring delivered a splendid sermon at the funeral.
Galveston, Tex. J. EGERT.

Dr. William Stedman Cheney lately passed to spirit life at Troy, N. Y., nearly 80 years of age. He was prominent as a liberal thinker, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He was in the war of the rebellion, having enlisted in the First Vermont Cavalry. He is survived by his wife, one son and two daughters. Rev. A. H. Winn of the Unitarian church, officiated at the funeral. He had been for many years a subscriber of The Progressive Thinker.

Another staunch veteran Spiritualist, Mrs. Alice Douglas, wife of Paul Douglas at Cynthiana, Ky., passed to spirit life, June 7, aged 85. The funeral was held at the residence, East Pleasant street, Friday, June 9, at 2 p. m. Services conducted by Rev. W. E.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 1, 1905. NO. 814

BOGUS MEDIUMS' TRICKS.

By Which the Spirit Phenomena Is Closely Imitated.

Dear Friend:—We are constantly asked by many mediums and Spiritualist friends who wish to protect themselves from imposition, how bogus mediums perform their tricks, so take pleasure in offering some of the latest and most clever. The charge made for them is merely to pay for the actual amount of work required to prepare the instructions. Five minutes practice will make you an adept in any of the following tricks:

No 43.—The Bogus Medium's Best Slate Trick.

Perhaps no trick has ever puzzled scientists more or created a greater sensation than this spirit slate writing trick, the effect of which is as follows: two ordinary school slates are freely shown and carefully cleaned on all four sides; they are then placed together, tied up and given to a spectator to hold. After a few seconds have elapsed the slates are separated and found to contain a spirit message, drawings of any writing that the performer may desire. No chemicals or exchange of slates. You should know this. Price only 30 cents.

No. 48.—The Great Pellet Test.

Very astonishing. Can be performed without preparation or practice by any one. A number of questions are written on slips of blank paper and carefully folded; they are then carefully mixed together in a hat and a spectator selects one of them haphazard and places it in his pocket. The performer at once reads the selected question and answers it. Very mystifying and practically impossible to detect. No impression papers or blank pellet used. If you wish to astonish your friends as a mind or thought reader you should have this. Price only 30 cents.

No. 70.—The Wonderful Chemical Slate-Writing Trick.

Has been used by a number of bogus mediums with great effect. Slates are carefully cleaned with a damp sponge, and closely examined by a spectator, after which they never leave the spectator's hands. The writing that appears closely resembles slate writing, and erases easily at the touch of a dampened finger. Has also been used to produce spirit (?) writing between slates brought to the bogus medium by an entire stranger. This can actually be done. Price 30 cents.

The Spirit Handkerchief.

Performed with sensational success by Kellar and Anna Eva Fay. The performer borrows a white silk handkerchief from one of the company present and after making a large knot in one of its corners drops the handkerchief on the floor. He then asks some "spirit" to animate it, when the handkerchief rises from the floor and assumes an erect position. Passing his hands continually above and around the handkerchief to show there is no thread, etc., the performer causes it to go through a series of very mystifying movements, the handkerchief rising, lying down, gliding back and forth, and answering questions at the word of command. As a finish the borrowed handkerchief jumps into the hands of the performer who immediately hands it to its owner, who can examine it all he pleases, but will fail to discover the secret. Good in the parlor or on the stage. The full secret of this little "Phantom" for 30 cents.

We supply all tricks. Let us know your wants.

All the above tricks are practical and easily performed by anyone. Will send full instructions in all of them, postpaid for one dollar.

Sincerely yours,
THE ——— SCHOOL OF MAGIC.
Address Box ——, ———, Cal.

What more reliable evidence that tricks of legerdemain are practiced for spirit phenomena do we want than the above.

Legerdemain, so advertised, is a legitimate business, if its real intent is designated, and it is a fact that much of the spiritual phenomena can be closely imitated by expert prestidigitators. Methods to imitate genuine spirit phenomena are sent out from Boston, Chicago and San Francisco. Some of them are very clever and calculated to deceive those who are very gullible. There is a great demand for materializing garbs with which to personate spirits, as there are so many that can be easily deceived, it is a rich field for the bogus medium to work in.

Charlatanism.

"What shall we do to be saved" from the fakirs? comes the cry from the host of readers of The Progressive Thinker; and the entire spiritualistic world.

It is pitiable, the wail and cry of resentment and indignation that prevails, at the intolerant audacity and shamelessness of those vampiric charlatans, who, under the cloak of Spiritualism, are waxing fat on the credulity and gullibility of a Spiritualistic public.

And a great cry goes out: "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." Verily, all science and theology, atheism and materialism, stand ready and willing to assist in stamping out the dread disease of charlatanism, could it be demonstrated that there be some wheat among the chaff, that there exists actualities, the authenticity of which can be demonstrated to humanity.

Creedism and skepticism are waiting, patiently waiting, for Spiritualism to arise and shake off the debris that has environed its genesis; and on fundamental principles that are, at once, incontrovertible and irrefutable, stand before the world a pure and sublime reality before which, rationalism, incredulity, and theocracy shall vanish.

A gentleman speaking on the subject of fake mediumship, said: "Why do these pseudo-mediums exist?" For the same reason that Wall Street exists, "There's money in it;" and continuing, he said, "Virulent diseases demand drastic treatment. Let the Spiritualist associations, national, state, and local, frame laws and have them enacted, that, for a period of five years it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any spirit medium, whomsoever, to accept or demand compensation for so-called spiritual information, of any description, whatsoever. And the mountebanks, like their empiric predecessors of old, would fold their tents and silently steal away."

It is only by the unremitting performance of individual duty that any public evil will be remedied or any public good accomplished.—A. W. Tourgee.

SINGING A SPIRITUAL HELP.

Did you ever try singing as an aid to a higher spiritual plane? When in the very depths of distress or perplexity, perhaps, when sluggish of thought and heavy of heart, lift up your voice in song. I do not say first throw aside your burden or care and then sing. But sing—from the very deeps—and the singing itself will dissipate the clouds—will lift you from your despondency and clear your vision. I speak from experience. At first it will not be an easy task—your heart is crushed and your head bowed. But make it a question of will power and each effort will prove easier. For a while you will unconsciously drift back into silence by the weight of your own thoughts. The moment you realize this, begin again, and gradually you will sing yourself into a certain degree of quietness—of peace and confidence.

Nor is singing recommended for despondency alone. Try it when angry or irritated. Before allowing yourself to brood, to harbor and elaborate unkind feeling, sing something—something cheerful, joyful; and sing it heartily. The effect will be almost instantaneous. Afterward you will see your "enemy," or the annoying circumstance, in a wholly different light. The song will have transformed it.

Not only is singing of great benefit in such special instances, but the habit of song is an uplifting one throughout the whole life. Your work will be lighter if you sing while busy. Your play will have a portent undreamed of before. And you will be a blessing, a benediction, to all about you. Were you ever standing over a monotonous task, tired and discouraged, when, suddenly, music sounded on the air? Immediately you felt new energy had been given you, every muscle and nerve responded to the tonic of the sweetness and rhythm. Now, the effect of this, produced by outward means, will even more readily follow a like effort made by yourself. You can verily sing yourself into new life if you will—into a new world—a world of harmony and happiness. Heaven is rightly pictured as full of music—as a place of eternal song; for these are symbols of joy and freedom from care. Then, why not bring at least so much of heaven into this world? Why not sing ourselves from the depths to the heights and hold ourselves there by this same power of song? Let us not, like Naaman of old, refuse so simple a means to health and fuller life, just because it is so simple. Let any skeptic but try for himself—let him who has never sung lift up his voice in strains as sweet and as rhythmic as he would have the dominant notes of his days. Let him resolutely persevere in this (for no thing of worth comes to us without earnest and repeated effort); let him sing as continually as he has heretofore sighed. The result will be beyond his anticipation. He will find himself "keeping step," mentally as well as physically, with the harmony of his song. And gradually his whole life, and the lives of those about him will echo his joy, and his world will be a foretaste of heaven.—Louise Carey Duncan, in Mind.

Spirit Manifestations.

Time and again in my family, I have had hats carried sixty feet away from the house in daylight, while raining, and put into the apple house, up overhead in a berry crate, and not get wet.

My daughter got a new hat and the next day she took it out of the box and laid it on the bed upstairs; then went down stairs, combed her hair and dressed to go to town. We live one-half mile from town. It had been some two hours since she touched her hat. I was out in the summer kitchen; her father out in the garden, and the children at school; no one to move the hat. When she got ready to put her hat on it was gone. She came down stairs and told me. I called to Mr. Kinton. He came into the porch, and we told him about it. He said: "I hear a voice say it is in the apple house." He walked out to the house, got up on a box and reached into a berry crate, and there it was, and not soiled in the least. I, my husband and daughter will all take our oath this is strictly true. This is one case in a hundred of what has occurred within the last twenty years in my house. Now some one will say, "Your place is haunted!" No, far from it. This commenced in Iowa. I lived in town before I came out to the country, and it is the same everywhere we live. I have thought I would write the thing down in shape to publish, but as I was not able to have them published, thought it no use. If you think you would like my experience to print, I will write more for you—only test cases.

Psychical Treatments.

Having noted an article in The Progressive Thinker regarding a psychical hospital for New York City, I at once became interested, and was much surprised at the following statement: "In this country nothing has been done as yet in the psychical treatment of diseases," when we know there is hardly an adult in the land who has not known actual cases which have been cured of afflictions which stubbornly refused to yield to the medical treatment.

At one time the person who possessed this power was considered possessed of the devil. Later he was a divine healer, a spiritual healer, etc., until now our land is dotted by psychic institutes where this work is taught and wonderful cures are being made daily. I have made this work a study and have practiced it for several years; knowing therefore that psychic treatments are not new to the American people; but for convenience' sake, the professions have given the science a new name which is intended to cover all phases spiritual, as applied to the control of the mortal.

To study and note the effect of psychic treatments on the different afflictions is a beautiful and interesting matter, but not wishing to take too much of your valuable space I refrain from giving anything further at the present.

A Remarkable Manifestation.

Illustrating the Kaleidoscopic Characteristics of Spirit Return.

We have tried to impress upon Spiritualists the kaleidoscopic characteristics of spirit return, and that the same is in no sense supernatural, but simply a fact in science—the simple result of a natural law with an intelligent being behind it.

Anyone on the spirit side of life, whether a Jew, Mohammedan, Catholic or Spiritualist, who understands the law, can communicate with the mortals of earth, and that fact has been stamped as Spiritualism.

A far better name would be Naturalism, for then it would be divested of everything supernatural, and there could be no religious sect founded thereon, and no protests would be made by gullibles, "You are injuring Spiritualism by parading fraud before the world."

The exposures of fakes then would be considered as legitimate and desirable as the detection of counterfeiting the United States Currency.

The following case of spirit return is most remarkable, occurring, as it did outside the ranks of Spiritualism. In fact spirit return of a marvelous character, is constantly occurring among those in no wise connected with our cause. It would be difficult to find a more remarkable demonstration of spirit power manifested than the return of that book, however absurd the claim of "talking with God" may be, and the vision in connection with the crucifixion of Jesus.

RECEIVED BOOK FROM A SPIRIT.

Strange Story of Miss Sophia M. I. Gabele—Declares That She Converses With the Spirits of Departed Persons While in Trances—Says a Spirit Rescued a Book From the Great Fire Here and Brought It to Her After She Had Suffered Untold Agony—Claims to Have Seen Reproduction of Crucifixion.

While suffering excruciating agony in a trance that lasted six hours a night for four nights and conversing with what she believes to be a number of persons in the spirit world, Miss Sophia Margaret Ida Gabele, aged 20 years, who resides at 1400 North Luzerne street, says she saw the Savior appear before her in all the agonies He suffered on the cross. On the last night of the trance she says that she received a book, valuable to her grandmother, from "a heavenly woman," as she declares, and which book was rescued from the flames of the great fire in this city by this spirit individual.

The story of the gift of the book by a spirit as told by Miss Gabele is thrilling and also most remarkable. The young lady was seen at her home last night by a reporter for The American, and, with unfaltering sentences, told of the horrible agony she went through and which she knew she would suffer before finally having the book placed in her possession.

It was at an early hour in the morning of May 9 last that Miss Gabele received the book from a woman who had passed out of this world many years ago, and which book she produced last night to vouch for the veracity of her statements. The book, with a pasteboard back covering, about 12 inches long and six broad, was used by Miss Gabele's grandmother, Mrs. Anna Margaret Schreier, with whom she lives, for the past 47 years, during which time she has been president of the Women's Sick Benefit Association. The book was used by Mrs. Schreier to receipt bills made necessary by the members of the association.

How Book Was Received.

Miss Gabele says the book was given her between 2 and 3 o'clock on the morning of May 9 last by a spirit woman, who entered the home of the girl by way of the middle window of the second-floor front room.

"I was truly in a trance," stated Miss Gabele, "and the woman, clad in a black silk dress, with a gauze yoke, and very large in figure, entered the window and handed it to me. I had never seen the woman in my life, and because of the unbelief of my grandmother as to my conversation with spirits while in a trance she would not tell her name.

"'I have rescued this book from the burning trunk in the Raine Building,' the spirit said. 'The building was a mass of flames, the trunk was on fire and the spirits in heaven who were members of the association of which your grandmother is president asked the Almighty God to save the book from the flames. They (the spirits of the women, members of the association, who died before the fire) told God that it was very valuable to the association and he appointed me to rescue the book. I did so and here it is.' The woman then left me and I returned to bed, holding the book in my hands."

Up to the night before Miss Gabele received the book in this startling manner, her grandmother, Mrs. Schreier, as the latter admitted last night, had been a firm believer in what she thought was the granddaughter's folly in "talking with the spirits."

"I knew my granddaughter went into trances," she continued, "but I never believed that she talked with spirits."

But the grandomther has changed her mind, and last night expressed deep words of sympathy for the girl because of the agony she suffered in having the book restored. Three weeks before entering into the trance, which, as stated before, lasted four nights, Miss Gabele had a premonition, being told that she was to receive the book. The spirit which later handed her the book appeared before her and told her of the oncoming agony which she would suffer. She related the visit of the spirit to her grandmother, and the latter laughed at her and said, "Well, my dear child, I will never get that book; it has been burned to ashes."

Punished Grandmother.

Miss Gabele replied that as sure as she was living the book would be returned and she would receive it and suffer horribly before receiving it. The spirit also told Miss Gabele, she stated, not to speak to her grandmother for seven days because of the latter's unbelief in the "workings of God's divine wonders."

"I did not speak to my grandmother for seven days," said Miss Gabele.

"The spirit warned me of the agony I would suffer and told me to prepare for it. Sure enough on Friday night, May 5, at 6 o'clock I was seized with a violent chill. I hurried to bed and was soon in a trance, stiff with cold and motionless. I lay that way until 12 o'clock, but in that time I had conversations with a number of spirits of persons who died both in this country and in Europe. The following nights I was seized the same way and on the last night, Tuesday, the trance lasted between two and three hours longer and the agony was more horrible."

It was on this particular Tuesday night that Mrs. Schreier retired for bed at 11 o'clock, and before retiring prayed to God to take the soul from her granddaughter's body. She says she could not endure to witness the young lady's suffering, and would have been relieved if she had died if she had not become calmer. She was highly excited, rolled and tossed about the bed and yelled loudly, but her sentences were not in the least disconnected. At 12 o'clock, the hour which her sufferings ended during the previous nights, she became calm, but still remained in the trance. While in this state Miss Gabele implored all of her folks, including her mother, Mrs. Sophia Margaret Gabele, who had endeavored to alleviate the daughter's pain, to retire for the night.

She told them to retire for the night, and that their slumber would be peaceful and undisturbed. She told them that the the book had directed her to be alone at the time of the visit, and all, accordingly, retired. Miss Gabele was still in the trance, she declared, but more quiet, and between two and three o'clock the morning in question the book was given her. After taking the book from the spirit Miss Gabele returned to bed.

She arose at 5 o'clock. Mrs. Shreirer had arisen for the day and had gone to the first floor to prepare breakfast for her son. About 5 o'clock, when the son had gone to the first floor, he announced to his mother that her granddaughter wished to see her. Mrs. Shreirer, who was in the kitchen, walked into the dining-room and met her granddaughter.

"She was the most beautiful sight I've ever seen," said Mrs. Shreirer last night. As Miss Gabele advanced to her grandmother, the latter said, and with eyes closed and with illy-white countenance, she handed the book to her grandmother, which the latter had before believed would never be returned to her. Mrs. Shreirer stated last night that she was startled and somewhat frightened to receive the book, but took it.

"Take This Book," It Said.

"'Take this book. I have saved it from the fire, and for punishment because you did not believe in the wonders from God I commanded your granddaughter not to speak to you for seven days.' The voice and words emanated from the young lady's throat, but Mrs. Shreirer said she could not recognize it as her granddaughter's voice. Miss Gabele in all her trances would talk. she says, in different voices—the voice of the spirits who wanted to talk—and she says she believes beyond a doubt that God gifted her with the trances. Mrs. Shreirer stated that she asked the spirit through her granddaughter's body, who it might be, and the spirit answered she need not know any more than that it was a member of the association of which she is president who had died years ago.

When Miss Gabele was first told of receiving the book the spirit described it to her. She says the spirit said that it was a pasteboard cover, with black and yellow stripes on it. In one part of it were three bundles of receipts held fast by black mourning pins, and in another part two bundles of receipts held by white or common pins. These receipts, as described by the spirit, were in the book when seen by the reporter last night, and Mrs. Shreirer says the receipts were in the book when it was placed in the trunk a few nights before the fire.

The Woman's Sick Benefit Association, the organization of which Mrs. Shreirer is president, met in the Raines Building, located at the southwest corner of Baltimore street and Postoffice avenue, and the trunk was left in the meeting room. Miss Gabele had never seen the book up to the time shereceived it through the window, and her description of it to her grandmother, three weeks before, answered it to a nicety.

Says She Saw Crucifixion.

While in this trance, earlier in the night, Miss Gabele says she saw a reproduction of the scene of the crucifixion of the Savior. She plainly felt the pains of having nails driven in her hands and feet, she says, and also had her mother wipe the perspiration from her forehead and give her a drink, which she declared was bitter.

Miss Gabele has been having trances for the past two years, these lasting from two to four hours, and in everyone she has had direct communication with the spirit world, she says. Her first trance was after the death of a cousin, and the spirit of the cousin appeared vividly. Up to the time of her first trance she had ridiculed Spiritualism and scoffed at its ideas. She states that she is still a devout church member, and says that she is always foretold of the coming of a trance.

It is a right reflection that if a man is full of the present moment to glorify it, he is with eternity and infinity; for he has all there is.—Blake.

SUGGESTIVE EXPERIENCES.

Connected With Spirit Return and Control.

I may be laboring under a wrong impression, but it is my understanding that to be controlled by a disagreeable spirit, one who holds a medium against his or her will, and renders itself obnoxious to the medium and others by coarse language and actions, constitutes obsession.

During the first years of my investigations of Spiritualism, I was so enthused over the discovery of future life that I wanted to tell my neighbors about it, and scores of people were welcomed to our home circles, many of whom went away puzzled and surprised.

During a private seance one day the medium was controlled by a spirit who, I suppose, had died of delirium tremens. For a half hour or more the screams and pitiful pleadings for protection from serpents and ferocious beasts, made my blood run cold; but by my calm and persistent assurances that there was no danger, no beasts nor serpents to hurt him, he finally calmed down and soon left. This disagreeable incident led me to doubt the policy of opening the door too wide for spirit return.

Had he objected to leaving, or been at a loss how to leave, it would have been considered an obsessing demon or devil.

At another seance, an Irishman came, and for some time greatly interested us with his great volubility, genteel demeanor and rich brogue.

My wife's two sisters lay sick, their beds side by side. When one was dying the other sat up in bed and watched her closely. When the spirit left, she threw herself back in bed, exclaiming, "My God! she is gone!" For six weeks she was under control of a spirit claiming to be Mary Magdalene. She said Christ cast seven devils out of her. She said that diseases in those days were called devils. She talked almost incessantly. Although the sick one was a mere child, with scarcely any education, yet Mary Magdalene would tell accurately the book, chapter, and verse of any passage mentioned in conversation. When any of the family would go away from the house, she would tell when they came back and what they had said while away. The time wore on, and it was a dreary six weeks to that family, they not knowing but Mary Magdalene would become a permanent installment in the family. To them it was obsession. But one day Mary Magdalene told them that on account of Wardy being so weak when her sister died, there was danger of the shock of grief killing her, and so she had taken control of her body, but that Wardy would come back on a certain day. Any one may imagine the anxiety with which they waited for that day to come; but when it did come, Mary Magdalene told them: "Well, I told you that Wardy would come back to-day, but she can't come to-day, but she will come on ——— day, and———hour," and sure enough, at the very day and hour, Wardy took possession of her own body. So, instead of Mary Magdalene being an obsessing demon, she was a kind and noble benefactor.

THE CHILD ETERNAL.

I heard their prayers and kissed their sleepy eyes,
And tucked them in all warm from feet to head,
To wake again with morning's glad sunrise—
Then came where he lay dead.
Those other children long to men have grown—
Strange, hurried men, who give me passing thought,
Then go their ways. No longer now my own.
Without me they have wrought.
So when night comes, and seeking mother's knee,
Tired childish feet turn home at eventide,
I fold him close—the child that's left to me,
My little lad who died.

FLESHLY SPOOKS.

Dr. Burgess, of San Francisco, Cal., a Prominent Spiritualist, Has Something to Say on the Subject.

To the Editor:—In answer to your inquiry, let me say that I have seen something of materializing mediums, but perhaps I may not be a competent observer of their doings. My judgment is seriously handicapped by what I know of physiology. I start out with the proposition that so far we know of none but nature's way of developing humans, and that takes time—much more time than the few seconds required to develop spooks in a materializing cabinet. I refer now to spooks I have met, who walked, and talked, and gave me perspiring handshakes—one especially who gave the unmistakable accent and odor Africanus. I have also met spooks at a private sitting who called me by name and gave their own names properly—half a dozen of them one after another—but, to begin with, the medium had asked me to write down these names on a sheet of paper which he ostentatiously declined to look at as he handed it, folded, to a diminutive spook that came out of the cabinet to get it. It is hardly necessary to add that this useful little messenger did as requested, and dug up every personality named on the list. Unwittingly, however, I had set a trap which was readily fallen into.

For years before her death my wife had habitually spelled her name Amie instead of Amy, and I wrote it that way on the incarnation list which was to call up the spooks. Soon a feminine figure approached me from the cabinet and called me by name, saying she was "Annie," my wife. I caught on instantly, for I had often seen the same mistake made with my wife's written cognomen. This was enough. It now seemed quite a superfluous waste of energy to critically notice the fact that there was nothing in the form before me to suggest that of my wife, while I could distinguish enough in the poorly disguised features to enable me to recognize the medium's wife, who had admitted me when I came into the house. But I put on the screws a little by asking her to give me her maiden name. Then her voice weakened—it sank to a whisper and she backed into the cabinet sighing forth that the "forces" were failing her. I looked upon the remainder of the performance as one would watch a puppet show, trying to get the worth of his money in amusement.

I have seen such deft conjurers as Herrmann, Heller, Houdin, in Paris, and others, successfully call living beings into apparent existence from apparent nothingness; but they claimed only deception of the senses, though I wonder still at the seeming reality of it. But when I am asked to believe that certain solid, perspiring, and odoriferous corporeities I have met at materializing seances are really manufactured in ten seconds out of invisible spooks, I can only wonder at the presumption of the fakers who dare to presume thus upon my credulity.

But this is not to say that I have never seen genuine manifestations which seemed apparently and of necessity to involve materialization to some degree. I protest only when the spooks are too fleshly; and I never—hardly ever—visit public seances for fear of meeting them there. But, while actual speech without vocal organs is inconceivable, and real vision without materiality would be vision of the invisible, I must admit that things have been mysteriously said and done in my own house that involved knowledge the medium certainly did not possess and active demonstration of force which she was neither in a position or a condition to exert. For she was bound fast to her chair while these things were done at a distance from her—and there was no one in the room that she knew, except myself. Besides, it is only a few weeks since I saw Miller do materializing stunts which were more easily wondered at than explained. This was at a test seance, engineered by Baron v. Zimmerman, and held in a room at the Palace Hotel, which Miller had never seen or heard of before he entered it to begin his work. The seance was held under the strictest conditions, the Baron and his carefully selected committee could desire. Before Miller was permitted to enter the seance room the committee had divested him of his clothing and supplied him with a brand-new outfit from top to toe. When he did enter he was quickly led to the cabinet, formed of draperies nailed firmly to the floor on all sides, with the exception of two loose folds which served as a narrow entrance way in front. He was then bound, hands, feet and body, to his chair with tapes, which were stitched instead of tied, and their loose ends nailed to the floor. In this condition he was left alone in the little cabinet to do his spookling act; while one of the committee, Prof. Van der Naillen, sat guarding the entrance way to make sure that no outside aid could reach him.

It was not very long before the materialized spooks began to walk out of the cabinet, one after another, some fading from view near the entrance and others holding out long enough to cross the room and then disappear. There was a dimly shaded light in a corner of the room not far from me, but none of the ghosts came near enough to enable me to scrutinize their make up. But it is worthy of note that while my friend from Africa had not for a moment hesitated to shake hands with me and seat herself beside me at the public seance previously held at Miller's house, we were now firmly enjoined by him to let the spirits alone. Did the Palace Hotel spirits differ in any essential particular from the spirits which ordinarily appeared at Miller's home performances? Perhaps they were not so grossly material, and I must say that with so many watchful eyes in every part of the moderate-sized room it seemed impossible that confederates could don the necessary toggery and impersonate the spooks without detection. Yet it is true that two or three persons present were known to me as chronic habitues of Miller's seances. They had been invited at his request, purportively to "strengthen the forces." But I took pains, afterward, to learn from one and another of my friends who sat near these persons that not one of them had changed position for a moment.

So there you are. I leave you on the fence where Hamlin Garland leaves his readers in his new and deeply interesting story of "The Tyranny of the Dark."

By the way, I am curious to know whether he has ever met the medium who did the remarkable things at my house referred to above. For many things he relates in a chapter headed "The Test Seance," were paralleled by occurrences that took place at that time.

It seems a safe conclusion that mediumistic events do take place which certainly represent phases of materialization without representing fraud at the same time. But they will all bear watching.

Confessional and Uncleanness.

"As to the effects of the confessional, we could not have much better authority than that of Professor Lecky, the late learned historian. Lord Salisbury asserted that the confessional "has done more than any other intsitution to sap the virility of a nation." And the erudite professor says that self-respect is "the parent and guardian of many virtues. It is one of the most remarkable characteristics that distinguish Protestant from the most Roman Catholic populations, and which has proved among the former an invaluable moral agent, forming frank and independent natures, and checking every servile habit and all mean and degrading vice. The peculiar vigor with which it has been developed in Protestant countries may be attributed to the suppression of monastic institutions and habits, to the stigma Protestantism has attached to mendicity, which Catholicism has usually glorified and uncouraged; to the high place Protestantism has accorded to private judgment and personal responsibility; and to the actions of free political institutions, which have taken deepest root where the principles of the Reformation have been accepted" (History of European Morals, vol. ii., pp. 188-189).

"Professor Lecky mentions various instances of Popish saints who reduced themselves to unclean animals, and have therefore been canonized by the Church of Rome. One was a monk who never washed his clothes, who never changed his tunic till it fell to pieces, who starved himself till his eyes grew dim. He mentions St. Macarius, who for six months slept in a marsh and exposed his body to the stings of venomous flies. He says: 'The saints who were most admired had become one hideous mass of clotted filth. A famous virgin named Silver, though she was sixty years of age, and though bodily sickness was the result of her habits, refused, on religious principles, to wash any part of her person only her fingers. One convent consisted of 130 nuns who never washed, and who shuddered at the mention of a bath.' The famous Romish saint, Simeon Stylites, was buried with honors, numbers of pilgrims coming from every quarter, a crowd of prelates followed him to his grave, and the Romish church pronounced him to be the highest model of a saint, though he broke his father's heart by stealing away from home without his parent's knowledge or consent. It was not for twenty years that his mother discovered him, but he refused her permission to see his face. He kept her waiting three days and nights outside his cell door, until she sank exhausted and died. He then appeared, shed some 'pious tears' over his murdered mother, and returned into his hole and-his devotions" (Lecky, vol. ii., pp. 107 to 131, passim).—From The Rock, Londan, Eng.

FARMER RILEY.

Most Excellent Results Through His Mediumship.

We have just had the grand, exhilarating pleasure of a visit with our true and beloved medium, Mr. James Riley, of Marcellus, Mich. He was with us one week, and had it been possible for him to stay, we could have kept him busy for two months. Brother Riley is noted for his honesty and integrity. He was offered any amount of money to stay three nights longer. If he was really for money, he would have made five hundred dollars in another week. One man offered two hundred dollars if he would stay another night and let his friends in. But when "Jim" Riley says no he means "no;" and when John Benton, his beloved control, tells Jim to go, he goes. Brother Riley, while here, converted two of the most pronounced infidels I ever met in my life. In fact, one of the hardest, most cold-blooded men, as he said himself, in the town. He told a friend the next day, that previous to his conversion in Spiritualism, he could shoot a man down like a dog, but now some other man would have to do the job. It would be impossible to tell in this article the wonderful results obtained in Brother Riley's seances, and the many conversions he made while here. He also made a host of friends that would fight for him. He is kind to all, a warm, hearty, hand-shake to the most depraved creatures and a kind word that leaves a smile on the hardest face.

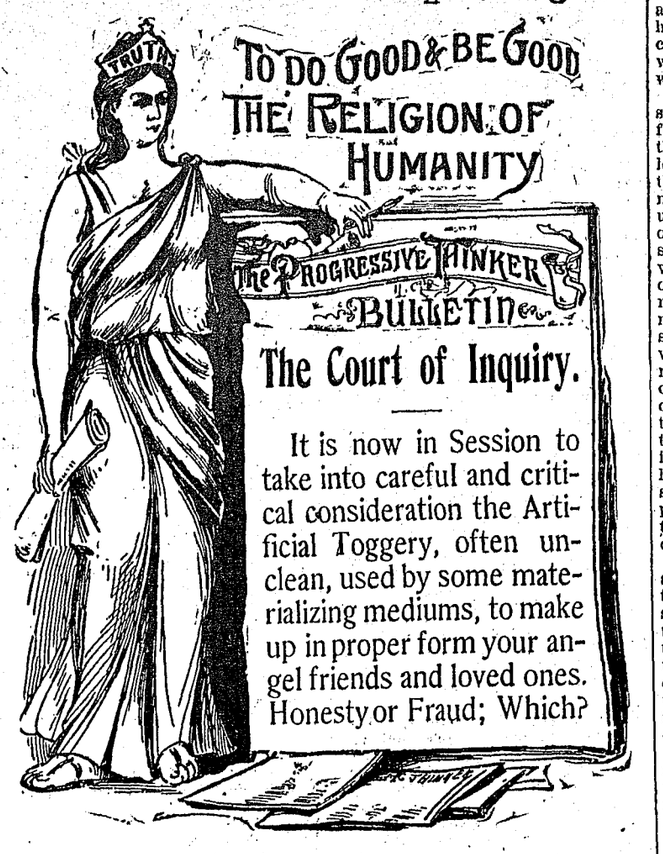
THAT LITTLE BABY HAND.

(Respectfully Dedicated to a Grandma.)

All the world seems filled with splendor and the sun is brighter far,
And the heavens thrice illumined by each scintillating star;
Aye, the very air around me seems enchantingly divine,
As I sit in twilight singing, with that little hand in mine.

As I sit in twilight singing and my soul is lost in dream,
I live over all the pleasures and the joys once more supreme,
And I feel that I should never in this mortal life decline,
Could I ever and forever hold that little hand in mine.



I can sense the soul behind it and within it as one pure;
As a soul so true, untainted, I would have its strength endure.
'Tis the angel in the human, and it makes my spirit shine,
To sit in twilight singing, with that little hand in mine.

I have risen to the zenith, to the highest point in life;
I have been a loving mother; I have been a faithful wife;
But the height of real being is above the human shrine,
And I sense it in the twilight, with that little hand in mine.

All the high and holy angels love that little baby smile;
And the cuteness of unfoldment, with that cupid-like profile,
Sheds its perfect sweetness o'er me, with a halo so benign,
As I sit in twilight singing with that little hand in mine.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

Judge Dunn should be cordially thanked for the part he has taken in bringing before the great mass of Spiritualists certain facts in relation to materializing mediums and their use of artificial toggery in dressing themselves so as to personate a spirit.

Some of the toggery, under the microscope, as said before, reveals poisonous microbes, while to the naked eye it presents an exceedingly filthy appearance.

The hint by Judge Dunn in his first communication that all materializing mediums use artificial toggery of various kinds, is startling indeed, and is rendered much more so by none of the numerous materializing mediums of Chicago and elsewhere, denying the truth of the insinuation.

One prominent Spiritualist and medium unites with Judge Dunn, and says: "You catch the spirit and you will have the medium every time, dressed in an artificial garb."

There has never been a successful grab of the "spirit" along the long line of numerous exposures made during the last thirty-five years that did not reveal the medium or a confederate with an artificial dress on of some kind.

Not a single exception exists—all were dressed to suit the occasion.

Judge Dunn to the Front.

He Replies to the Numerous Critics Who Have Assailed His Views.

To the Editor:—When I penned the article printed in your No. 808, I little thought that I was the "entering wedge" so to speak of a controversy concerning fraud in the manifestation of the force which we call spirit, and most assuredly I did not think that the same could by any possibility be construed into a defense, an apology, or a conniving at palpable guilty fraud committed by those who claimed to be developed as media between the world of spirit and the world of mortal. The article was written and intended only as an inquiry by a seeker after knowledge, as it clearly purports to be.

True I gave rein to a few thoughts upon the matter of haste in condemnation, deploring what seemed to me to be a characteristic of some of our prominent writers, workers and thought molders, to jump as it were to conclusions upon allegations of fact not seemingly sufficiently substantiated—and at the same time distinctly disavowing any superior wisdom or knowledge or ability to determine matters, where our great men disagree or our investigators arrive at conclusions from the same point of view so entirely dissimilar.

But it seems that from the first article published in apparent answer by President Barrett in your No. 808, down to the last, by Bro. C. W. Stewart in your No. 812, there runs a vein of attack upon the writer of this, and the entering wedge, as a person who was entirely given over to the advocacy of fraud, some even going so far as to conclude that it must have been written for compensation paid by the frauds themselves. It is sad to think that friends who are engaged in an honest endeavor to convince the skeptical world of a future state of existence, after the shock called death has been sustained, should be willing to publicly charge an honest inquirer into the most serious problems known to mortals, with dishonesty.

The most astounding feature of these so-called answers is the almost unanimous misconception of the article itself; at no point does it apologize for or defend a person (medium or otherwise) who shall be found guilty of active conscious fraud or deceit in manifesting spirit presence, or spirit powers; on the contrary the crucial question and keynote of the article is found in these words:

"WAS THE MEDIUM (WINANS) AT THE TIME OF THE MANIFESTATION OF SO-CALLED SPIRIT POWER IN POSSESSION OF HIS NORMAL FACULTIES SO AS TO BE CONSCIOUS OF THE FACT THAT HIS OWN PERSON AND THIS BORROWED PLUMAGE, OR ACCESSORIES WERE BEING USED, AND ALSO USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF DECEIVING THE SITTERS" and stating,

"THAT IF THIS QUESTION SHALL BE ANSWERED IN THE AFFIRMATIVE, THEN THE CHARGE OF FRAUD AND SIMULATION IS WELL FOUNDED AND THERE CAN BE NO PUNISHMENT TOO SEVERE TO BE VISITED UPON THE HEAD OF THE OFFENDER."

That question and the statement quoted above states my exact position towards all manner of deceivers and simulators of spirit manifestation, and it would seem as though it ought to have been sufficient to have spared me the castigation from our good brethren received in their articles printed in the following numbers of The Progressive Thinker.

But seemingly with a desire to air their own views, and again give voice to their condemnation of fraud, they seek to draw a contrast between the writer and themselves, and paint the writer as a bad, bold defender of evil, or a mental degenerate, and then seemingly draw the contrast between him and their own sweet purity and honorable position as defenders of the right and condemners of the wrong.

Even the gifted editor of The Progressive Thinker seems to have failed to comprehend the full scope of the article; if I may judge from the prominence given typographically to the admissions of the alleged facts found in the Hot Springs articles, and the conclusions drawn by the writer as to the actual use of borrowed plumage rather than materialized plumage in nearly if not quite all of the seances for materialization attended by him, and the relegation to the rear typographically of the real vital question above quoted and around which all of the suggestions and statements of the article congregate.

The displayed heading of the article itself, while suitable as an attraction, and without which and its setting perhaps the article would not have received the reading it apparently has, was in fact misleading, for it was not written as a defense of any one.

True there were some allusions to the spirit manifested by our Hot Springs friends in their hasty and doubtless by them regretted action in treating a fellow man as was Mr. Winans treated by them; true there were some allusions made to the liability of the spirit forces using material matters for the purpose of manifesting their presence to better satisfaction of the sitters; true there were some allusions to the difference of opinion between men eminent in the ranks of spiritual work here in this mundane sphere, as to certain scientific seances held by Professor Crookes, in which the integrity of some of those manifestations were questioned, especially the hair from the head of the so-called Spirit Katie King; true the article gave the opinion of the writer to the effect that the reasoning of the Editor-at-Large on that matter was perhaps easier to follow than the actual statements of facts by the eminent professor, but at no point does the article attempt to lead the thought or dogmatize upon the matter in question.

And true also is it that in none of the articles called out by it, has the question asked been attempted to be answered except dogmatically affirmatively; this dogmatic assertion unfortunately is too much in evidence every time an inquiry is started; better ask questions than to answer them unless we are quite sure our answers have the impress and sign of absolute truth born of knowledge.

Now, first, Brother Barrett attacks my statement that the medium Winans was one of the oldest, and most trusted mediums in our ranks for this phase of manifestation, and states the contrary to be the fact. Well, if I am in error in that statement, which I think as a late comer into the ranks I was abundantly justified in making, then our good brethren who have so long led the cohorts of Spiritualists as leaders, have not been on the watch for wolves in sheep's clothing, but have permitted the wolves to masquerade in the camps of the investigators and believers to their hurt, for sure it is in 1895 when I began my investigation, this medium Winans was a high priest and within the very sanctum sanctorum, offering his manifestations of spirit power just exactly as he did at Hot Springs, and with the seeming endorsement of Brother Barrett as the head of the cult, for I have been present at camps where both Brother Barrett officiated on the rostrum as an expounder of the faith and dispenser of the truth of Spiritualism from the mental side, and Brother Winans in the seance room at night convinced hundreds of the truth of spirit return and spirit communion and the persistence of life after death, through what is called the physical phenomena of Spiritualism, and both of these high priests were duly accredited by the camps' management as honest expounders, each in his own way, of the truths we all came to love and cherish. At Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, Mr. Winans has ever been apparently a welcome guest and hailed by the officiary as a true exponent of the power of the spirit to manifest itself physically. So I think I am warranted in the claim made in my article so savagely assailed by Brother Barrett.

Brother Barrett fails to comprehend the article, for he deals generally with the abstract question of fraudulent displays, and fails to answer by any argument the crucial question as to the consciousness of the medium. True he makes argument against the use of any sort of paraphernalia unless materialized on the spot, and because in the article the proof of the possession and use of the same was admitted to have been sufficient by the writer, he then in answer to the question of conscious use by the medium exclaims in the language of some cheap sort of logician, "Would a duck swim?", and hence because a duck would swim, therefore Winans was conscious. Such logic is hardly under the present situation compatible with the learning and astuteness of the president of the N. S. A.

Brother Barrett makes a sad mistake when he says that "According to Brother Dunn, the media and their managers had a perfect right to take the paraphernalia into their seances," etc. Now, nowhere can it be found that the article criticised apologized for or justified the taking of anything into the seance room. The only thing in the article was a statement as to what was said to him by other mediums and developed psychics. If they are at fault, say so, but do not permit yourselves to get frenzied over a statement that never was made, and do not do an injustice in criticism—stick to the text.

Brother Barrett claims that there would be no necessity for spirits, "good ones," to make use of any earthly materials for manifestation, for, as he says, if they needed any such aids they could call upon the "more than omnipotent cabinet chemist who would materialize them out of nothing of course, in about one quadrillionth of one second." That is pretty quick, don't you think? and if we can believe that it can be done, why, we'd better no longer balk at faith in the Mosaic account of the creation—"He spake and it was done." Give the Jewish Jahwe credit for the whole creation, call it a great materializing seance and no longer cite the doctrine of evolution as true. But it is possible the brother was using sarcasm to emphasize his position.

Time will not allow, nor space permit further analysis of Brother Barrett's remarkable tirade against the power of the spirit. It is too well known among the mass of Spiritualists, however, that there has arisen in our midst a class of so-called great high priests of Spiritualism who frown upon most physical manifestations as unproved. Brother Barrett himself claims that the only hope of proof of materialization which is worthy of consideration, is the seances held by Prof. Crookes with the medium Cook, at which the corporeal body of spirit Katie King, breathing, pulsating, embraceable, kissable, measurable, photographable and weighable—in fact a living, breathing, bodily entity, as much so as the medium; with hair perfectly natural, eyes that wink, heart that beats, and capable of appearing and disappearing at will manifested its presence to the Professor's entire satisfaction.

It is little wonder that skeptics laugh at this account of Prof. Crookes, and it is little wonder that our own Hudson Tuttle is inclined to much skepticism thereon, but candidly, if this spirit could so manifest, and the hair did not dematerialize, as says Prof. Crookes, is it not fair to doubt the real materialization quality of the hair? and if it was not called into being from nothing in the quadrillionth of one second, why the argument would seem irresistible in conclusion that the same was earth in nature, and if earthy, then it was provided by some agency, either mortal or spiritual; there is only one horn of the dilemma that you can take in solving the riddle, and you take the one that seems most rational, if a non-believer in spirit power and call it a fake, and if a believer, you take the one that while not a natural one according to laws we are familiar with, is taken because you have come to realize as did Prof. Crookes that there was a power other than natural (so to speak) and of whose laws we are densely ignorant, existing itself on that occasion. I venture no opinion on the subject, although I have one.

Next comes Brother Hudson Tuttle, to whom all of us small men in the ranks of Spiritualism look up for knowledge, but with a deplorable lack of acumen he entirely misconstrues the article he criticises. It is true he treats it and the writer with much more courtesy and fairness than does the president of the N. S. A. His article, however, is a blast against palpable conscious fraud, but he entirely fails to affirmatively answer the question around which the article centers, to-wit: "WAS THE MEDIUM AT THE TIME OF THE MANIFESTATION IN QUESTION CONSCIOUS?" Now in the statement of our Hot Springs friends, in your No. 800 there was no proof given as to his condition, and until that question is answered in the affirmative by some one that KNOWS, not merely believes, then as I claimed and now claim the charge of fraud is not maintained. I do not mean to say he was or was not conscious; of that I have no proof, but if we as Spiritualists are to deny a state of trance which renders the person entirely oblivious of surrounding circumstances, why, then we may as well step down and out, and join the ranks of the followers of Brother Thomson Jay Hudson and other explainers of our phenomena, who attribute all manifestations to the personelle of the medium, and set aside all claim to spirit presence, power and persistence.

Brother Tuttle errs when he says that "Mr. Dunn further thinks that all materializing mediums exactly follow Winans' methods." In no place can it be found that I think anything about it. I merely state as a fact that at every one of Mr. Winans' seances that I attended, he claimed through his so-called guides to have three types of manifestations—materialization, transfiguration and impersonation—and he always so stated, and then proceeded to explain what the sitters might expect under certain conditions, and called upon all (our Hot Springs friends included) to verify the statement, and then I argued, and now argue, that if the manifestations were in line with what was promised, there could be no possible ground for a charge of deception. When the show equals and conforms to the advertisement, there can be found no fault with the showman, can there?

Hence, Brother Tuttle's special pleading to show the uselessness of my question as to what constitutes the fraud, can only be relevant by assuming that the medium was conscious at the time of the use of the toggery. That is the vital question, and is entirely ignored by Brother Tuttle, as well as the other critics who enter the Inquirer's Court, but fail to make an answer.

It is not an answer to the question to assert that he must have been conscious when he procured, or suffered to be procured, the toggery, and knew that it might be used by his guides in making up in impersonation—for while in my opinion, the procuring of the same and furnishing it, knowing it might be used, is very reprehensible in any medium, still it does not dispose of the question as to what takes place in the trance condition.

Brother Tuttle asks, in answer to the question of fraud, as follows: "If pretending to have spirits materialize to come before their friends in material form, while it is a sham, a masquerade in toggery prepared for the purpose, is not sufficient, what is more?"

This sort of questioning by way of answer, is, to say the least, not entirely worthy of the questioner, for it assumes that the question asked is answered in the affirmative? My mind will not allow of my making up a judgment upon assumptions. I must have facts well authenticated.

The medium did not confess that he knew that the toggery was being used at the time, did not pretend that impersonation was materialization, as I understand the evidence offered by our Hot Springs friends, they did not arouse him when they discovered the fact of his array in borrowed plumage, to ascertain his condition. No! they knew he was in a claimed trance at any rate, and it would seem to me that they must have then realized that he was at the time unconscious, else he would not have permitted himself to be so thinly and poorly disguised that he could have been so easily detected. It would appear to me that a person intending to commit so rank a fraud as is charged here, would have certainly fixed himself so that detection would have been next to impossible, knowing as he and all mediums must know, that no self-respecting person will submit to being swindled by false manifestations.

Brother Tuttle exclaims that if the spirits advise this deception, they are the greatest knaves of all! Well, we are told by high authority that there are knaves in the spirit realm, as well as in the mortal (Peebles on Obsession).

Brother Tuttle's anathema upon all falsehood in spirit manifestation meets with my hearty approval. I believe that Brother Tuttle was under inspiration from the spirit side of life when in his youth he penned that wonderful treatise, the Arcana of Nature. But it is only because I am a Spiritualist, and have learned to my own personal satisfaction that it is possible, that permits me to sink my earlier belief and steer clear of those other men and women who believe that Brother Tuttle drew the long bow when he asserted his spiritual aids from beyond had written it through his organism.

It is also that belief that has come to me through my investigation among mediums, that has caused me to give credence to the mental phenomena exhibited through the organisms of Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Twing, Miss Harlow, Mrs. Carpenter, Mattie Hull, Lyman C. Howe, Georgia Gladys Cooley, and others, and to join my voice and pen in asserting my belief in their integrity and honesty in the claims they make to (at first) unconscious speech, and finally by further development to a condition called superior, but yet not entirely unconscious, except so far as to be unconscious of what is to be said, and yet conscious to a degree as to what was said.

And so, Brother Tuttle, read my article again and see whether you do justice to the writer in your criticism.

Next in point of misapprehension is our learned Dr. Geo. B. Warne, a gentleman who, having long been the companion of a very choice instrument of the spirit world while incarnate, Mrs. Emma Nickerson Warne, must have imbibed some of the truths of Spiritualism. No one who ever had the real belief in spirit persistence forced upon them through the media of mortals would suspect our friend, Dr. G. B. Warne to be a Spiritualist at heart, while his good wife was permitted to be with us; his voice was not heard to my knowledge in support of the cause (in this I may be in error), I speak only from memory personal to myself. I used to take great pleasure and was greatly edified in listening to the choice guides of Mrs. Dr. Warne, from the rostrum, and was always ready and willing to tell her so. I have heard her guides through her organism deliver lectures that would thrill my soul and fill me with delight, and cause me to repeat to myself: This is phenomena equal to any physical. And moreover I never doubted her statements as to her entrancement to a certain degree, if not total, when delivering the discourses. I was proud of her attainments in her being used by such a choice quality of guides from the beyond, and I never feared for our cause when her mouth was opened to utter her message. Of course the present Doctor was overshadowed in the radiance from her personality. But now he looms up and assumes to criticise the personal integrity and good faith and soundness of mind of any and every one who can not be measured in his limited half-bushel, and to that end he is permitted in the columns of The Progressive Thinker to asperse and to minify, and to class as worthless any thoughts that would seem to ask for a fair deal and square treatment of all mediums, and does not hesitate to publicly doubt the word of mediums as to their condition during a seance.

He attacks an article I sent to The Progressive Thinker some time ago upon the subject of materialization, in which I gave some facts that had occurred in my presence, and now he exclaims upon the authority of some one named Kellogg, that it must be that I was deceived, as he "shared with me the honor of mortal escort to the manifesting spirit on that occasion and he is certain he, Kellogg, was not fooled, but Brother Dunn was. In other words, Dunn was not as smart as Kellogg in the Doctor's estimation, nor as truthful. And then this guardian of all the Illinois Spiritualists proceeds by innuendo to throw some dirt and doubt at the medium on that occasion, Mrs. Critchett, formerly Tripp, of Chicago.

I do not care to offer any excuse for my statement upon that occasion or this, merely saying that my faculty of observation is sufficient for myself. I am possessed of all my natural faculties in a good condition and must be permitted to form my conclusions from their use. But the Doctor fails, as the others, to answer affirmatively the crucial question, "WAS THE MEDIUM SHOWN TO BE CONSCIOUS AT THE TIME OF THE MANIFESTATION AT HOT SPRINGS?"

Until that question is answered affirmatively upon proof other than mere assertion, the verdict must be, not proved—not, not guilty; but not proved. The Doctor says I multiply words with the habit of my profession, to create the impression that Winans was unconscious when he made conscienceless use of his deceptive outfit, and therefore wholly blameless, etc.

Not so. I have not, did not, and do not assert that he was unconscious. I merely stated that he claimed in all his seances that ever I attended, that he goes under the control of his guides, as we call it (but as the world and such Spiritualists as Dr. Warne would say nonsense) and thereby is rendered entirely oblivious to the surroundings. Whether he was so or not, I do not assume to determine; each person must determine that for himself. I may and do have a personal belief upon the matter, but that is of no public consequence; I have long since outgrown the doctrine that belief was effectual for any purpose—it is cold facts I am after.

The Doctor endeavors to show that Winans was conscious of practicing trickery at Hot Springs by quoting a conversation had with Prof. Leith Old, in which the Prof stated that Winans admitted that he practiced trickery upon the Hot Springs people. Now the witness stands impeached by his own statement over his own signature in the April 22 number of The Progressive Thinker, where he joins with apparently a large number of good people in Hot Springs in condemning the so-called exposure and giving to Winans a good recommendation as an honest instrument for materializing. I cannot accept the evidence of the witness as proving anything against the party accused.

The Doctor claims that I out-Herod Herod in charging that all phenomenal mediums carry and use paraphernalia. Now that is an absolute misstatement. I have not so charged, and the article will not be found to contain it. The Progressive Thinker gave undue prominence to my statement that I did not doubt that Winans had this toggery, and that it was used on that, and other occasions under the conditions stated, and that all other materializing mediums that demonstrate the phase of materialization and whose seances I have attended use similar (i. e. earthy) paraphernalia. I do not charge that they do as a matter of fact, I simply gave utterance to my impressions received from a long series of observations, and I still adhere to that belief, whether well founded or not. But I am not at this time to give reasons for this belief; that is not the scope of the inquiry; I backed up my statement by quoting the information given me by a gifted medium to that end.

In order that no earthly material should be taken into a cabinet, it would seem that the medium must enter therein in a state of nature, unclothed by earthly garments and in fact stay outside and never allow his organism to be used by the power of the spirit to impersonate or transfigure; so it seems to me, but it is of course not necessary, neither is it in my opinion proper or in accordance with strict honesty for a medium to supply himself with artificial accessories for spirit use without informing the sitters that such is the case. I do not approve or countenance any such performance. But that is not the question attempted to be solved, it is, after such toggery was used and proved to have been so used, was it by the conscious knowledge of the medium at the time? If so, fraud is proved; if not, not.

Most of the other articles by "Tray, Blanche and Sweetheart"—after the great lights of Spiritualism had set the pace, are modeled upon the same lines of attack upon the writer, as a paid mercenary—a man of little experience with Spiritualism, a man easily fooled, a man who is overcredulous, a poor logician, a defender of fakes, etc., and their effusions do not seem to contribute anything of value to the discussion. All of them however agree with myself that a man who would knowingly deceive a sitter in a matter of demonstration of spirit power in any of its phases is properly branded as a fake and fraud, and ought to be punished so far as the law can do so, and should be consigned to oblivion so far as Spiritualists are concerned, and cast out and denounced.

With such frauds and fakes I have no sympathy nor ever had, and certainly would not offer a word in their defense.

But there are some other contributors who deserve notice. First, Mr. Eastman, who appears on the scene in No. 808, in company with President Barrett, Hudson Tuttle, Dr. Warne and myself. He is one of the witnesses of the so-called fraud, and he ought to have been able to have answered the question proposed as to consciousness.

Next, Brother Boving appears in No. 809, and he certainly ought to be a good witness upon that matter, and as far only as their contributions seek to answer that question are they of importance. Brother Boving attempts to justify his conduct as a man; claiming a deep sense of injured trust compelled him to the drastic course pursued. That of course, is a matter between himself and his conscience, but these two were present and knew something about the condition of the medium at the time, and we shall hear them.

In No. 800 of The Progressive Thinker in giving the account of the fraudulent seance under discussion and which was the occasion of my article, Messrs. Eastman and Boving used this language in regard to Winans, after giving an account of the reproaches they administered to him for his faithless work: "He does not appear to grasp the enormity of the situation. He listened to our pleading and accusation with a blank stare. Silence was our only answer. His trunk has been located and is now at the residence of Dr. Hallman as security for a bill of $100 for professional services. His ticket has been purchased and he leaves Hot Springs this evening." This was written March 8.

Now Dr. Eastman's article is printed in The Progressive Thinker under the grim heading, "Guilty as Charged," but this Dr. Eastman was one of the eyewitnesses to the fraud and made oath to its actual occurrence as narrated in No. 800. He treats my article in 808 candidly, does not berate the inquirer, is the only one thus far who has apparently comprehended the scope of the same, and he fails entirely to offer any proof whatever that the medium was otherwise than in an entranced condition when he was found to have been arrayed in the feathers and plumes alleged. Dr. Eastman virtually admits that he was so, for he says:

"The case then hinges on whether Winans was or was not conscious of what he was doing, and comes under the legal head of involuntary commitment of crime."

Then after making a statement concerning the law of such class of cases, here he continues:

"However, let us grant that Winans may have been unconscious of what was transpiring when attired in these garments, whether conscious or unconscious he knew the paraphernalia was there, had it ready to use and voluntarily gave himself up for their use and is therefore guilty as charged."

This would seem to settle the matter that the medium was unconscious at the time and leaves the matter of procurement of paraphernalia to be the real fraud, rather than the use of it to deceive and defraud. I thank you, Doctor, for your candor.

But now, after having a week or so to look the matter over, comes Brother Boving with his screed and evidently having forgotten that when they accused the medium the day after the fraud seance with the same, that he answered them nothing, just as did another when accused before Pilate of having some wonderful gifts, and blank silence was their only answer. In No. 809 he attempts to justify himself by claiming that Winans admitted to himself, Dr. Eastman and Hallman, that "When I cannot get materialization, I use the paraphernalia to hold and satisfy the audience."

It is strange that Dr. Eastman did not know that, when he wrote his article the week prior. So Brother Boving's claim to conscious fraud at the time of the demonstration is based upon a claimed admission of the medium himself. Without alleging that Brother Boving is drawing the long bow, I would prefer to cross-examine the witness in presence of the accused Winans, before admitting that statement as conclusive upon the question at issue.

The witnesses, Dr. Eastman, Hallman and Boving, should have gotten a little closer together in order to have made their evidence corroborative, and therefore stronger; as it is, Eastman admits unconsciousness in a manner, Boving claims consciousness by a claimed admission made at the time when Eastman fails to have heard it, and Hallman is silent entirely. Still the verdict must be, as to these witnesses, "not proved."

Now comes Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, whom long ago I crowned in my mind as one of the queens of the spiritual rostrum, and whom I believe to be touched with the divine fire from the altar of truth and righteousness, and fit to be classed with the true prophets and seers. Her treatment of the question is worthy of her, and seems to set right in thought at least, if not in actual knowledge, the question under discussion.

While Mrs. Cooley deplores the fact that I state, that in my opinion at no seance that I have as yet attended was there lacking the use of purely earthly materials in some form, and does not charge me with saying that the mediums themselves provide them, which I never did say, and does not charge me with apologizing for them if they do provide them, but she rises to a proper conception of the question at issue, as does Dr. Eastman, to-wit, was the medium conscious (not whether his procurement of accessories was a commendable act) and proclaims her sorrow if such statement is a fact applicable to all mediums, which the writer does not undertake to say.

But Mrs. Cooley seems to me to set the question at rest largely when she says, "Many cases of fraud have been laid to a materializing medium's door through the spirit who is unable to form a complete body, using the medium for personating, and transfiguring purposes, and if said manifestation is poorly accomplished, the sitter readily recognizes the features and form of the medium, and not undertaking the method used, denounces the medium." This from the accomplished gifted medium, Mrs. Cooley, would seem to answer the question of consciousness, as a probability, in the negative; for if the spirit was unable to form a complete body, and used the person of the medium to manifest through it if poorly accomplished might be also accused of obtaining the use of earthly material to further the design, and the medium be entirely ignorant of the personation at the time, through his or her condition imposed by spirit power which we call entrancement or control.

Yes, Brother Will J. Erwood has also a lengthy article upon the question, and is loud in his denunciation of false mediums and the gullibility of Spiritualists, etc. Well, Brother Erwood was the secretary of the spiritual camp at Waukesha a year or so ago. I and wife attended that camp, and we were assured that the mediums there were "all wool and a yard wide," having been tested by the officiary and found true to ring and touch. Well, we attended the seances of some, especially a materializing medium—which seance was given for the benefit of the camp. I yielded up my wealth and sat in a fearfully close closet, with the officers well up in front, to whom most of the manifestations were directed. I passed my opinion on the medium as one that was certainly very weak in development, to say the least, but the official stamp was there and it had to go.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

JUDGE DUNN'S REPLY.

clusive. This medium was alleged to have been a rank fraud, and was claimed to have been exposed because of earthly materials having been found in her possession and used by her in a manifestation (so called.

But why multiply words? The opinion or belief of any one is of no value to the other; in this matter of proof of spirit return and persistence of life after the shock of death occurs, each must be the judge of the value of the proof for himself. We do our own thinking, draw our own conclusions. When we are satisfied that the evidence presented is sufficient to convince us of the fact investigated, we cease to question it, and bend our energies in the direction of an honest endeavor to present the evidence to others. We want that evidence pure, we want it honest, but we know so little about the powers of the spirit that we are apt to become what is called heady, in analyzing manifestations, measuring them by our own limitations, and denouncing all that fails to pass the muster of our plumbbob and measuring tape.

If we are to deny the claimed condition of physical mediums when they assert they are unconscious of surroundings; then to be consistent we must also deny the same as to our mental mediums and message bearers, must also give up all our learning, and claimed knowledge of spirit return and spirit manifestations, and admit that all of our investigations have resulted in nothing valuable to ourselves or the world. I am not quite ready to do that. It seems to me that we have come upon a scientific knowledge of the persistence of the human ego after what is called death has interferred with its manifestation with the mortal form. By many it has been sought, and is now sought, to embarrass this knowledge with a web and woof of religious sentiment and call it a religious movement. For the use of the "Reverends" that are in the ranks of the Spiritualistic workers called mediums, and some not mediums, this is good business, helps in many ways, and so far as it may dignify the knowledge obtained, may result in good. But to my mind there is not much religion in it, when you define religion as a "system of faith and worship," the commonly accepted definition.

When we first arrive at the truth of the persistence of life after death, we are simply overwhelmed with the discovery, but as time passes we get upon solid ground and cease to make use of this knowledge as a mere conduit of communication with our friends who have arisen from the mortal form, and treat it as a fact in nature, gained in our experience, and as a sweet release from the thralldom of creeds, which for many years circumscribed and bound many of us. That is my experience, and while I have been in this controversy the target for all the guns that could crowd onto the firing line, I have thus far escaped unscathed. My question has been unanswered affirmatively, the inquiry is still open and debatable, to-wit: "WAS THE MEDIUM WINANS AT THE TIME OF THE MANIFESTATION OF SO-CALLED SPIRIT POWER AT HOT SPRINGS IN POSSESSION OF HIS NORMAL FACULTIES SO AS TO BE CONSCIOUS OF THE FACT THAT HIS OWN PERSON AND THE BORROWED PLUMAGE OR ACCESSORIES WERE BEING USED, AND ALSO USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF DECEIVING THE SITTERS? IF YEA, HE IS GUILTY; IF NAY, HE IS NOT."

It would seem that he had no difficulty in continuing his work at Hot Springs, for it appears that on April 2, a few weeks after the socalled fraud circle, he succeeded in obtaining from the Spiritual society there an endorsement of his powers and gifts as a materializing medium—see The Progressive Thinker, No. 804.

In closing I would say that I have received many letters from widely separated parts of the county expressing thanks for my article upon the subject and the only abuse received has been through the columns of The Progressive Thinker by people who ought to be willing to have a serious question asked, and one that lies at the very foundation of all of our phenomena, to-wit, the entrancement of mediums, both mental and physical, without imputing to the questioner base, ignoble motives or belittling his powers of perception as has been done here. Practicing before The Progressive Thinker Court of Inquiry is seemingly dangerous to the reputation of the practitioner. "Fiat Justitia ruat coelum."

ANDREW C. DUNN.

Winnebago City, Minn.

Personal Experience in New Orleans.

To the Editor:—I thought it might be interesting to some of your readers to relate a personal experience.

I have just returned from New Orleans, and I would advise every medium to steer clear of that city. The City Fathers there have enacted a law in such a way that no medium residing there can make a living.

But to my story. When I arrived in New Orleans I secured a room with a lady who was a good Spiritualist. After becoming acquainted I was asked if I could relieve obsession? "Yes," I replied, "if I could see the person."

She had a dear lady friend who acted so queerly at times that her own family got afraid of her. In a day or two she went to see her friend, explaining her errand very carefully. Even her husband and her grown son tried to persuade her to let me come and see her, but she simply said, "No! that man is a spy sent here by the Magazine of Mysteries to investigate me so that he might have something terrible to write about." In fact the husband was so wrought up about it that he lay down on a sick bed, which he never left until his body was taken to the cemetery. Of course you may realize by that time I became very interested, and wanted to see this poor man before he passed out, but it was of no use; his wife, in her deluded condition succeeded in barring my way.

In connection with this I also wish to state that one night when a circle was to be held at a lady's house, I was asked by one present if I thought there would be any healing by the spirit guides, as she had a sister at home who was totally blind, caused by sickness the year before. I told her to bring her sister to me, and no doubt she would be benefited; but in the evening the lady told me that after telling her father where she intended going with her blind sister, he told her he would not allow her to attend any such place; that he knew Spiritualism was all the work of the devil; so that in this case, as in many others, we all felt sorry for the blind girl, and more so in being hampered and unable to show what our spirit friends really can do in such cases.

COURT OF INQUIRY.

Nothing ever published since Spiritualism was first inaugurated, has created greater interest among the great mass of adherents than The Court of Inquiry. They have learned an important lesson, and will profit thereby. And now every materializing medium should step to the front, and in the interest of Truth, tell their Experiences, and deny, or admit, the use of artificial toggery in connection with the presentation of spirit forms.

A TRENCHANT REJOINDER.

To the Ten-Mile Communication by Judge Dunn.

It is the hit bird that flutters, the wounded dog that howls and the beaten disputant who resorts to bold assumptions and barefaced misrepresentation. Judge Dunn, with unwitting generosity, concedes Dr. Warne a "limited half-bushel" of comprehension, forgetting that he thereby allows him a capacity thirty-one times greater than his own pint measure, for there are thirty-two pints in two pecks. How sweeping the charge that the poor Doctor "assumes to criticise the personal integrity and good faith and soundness of mind of any and everyone" who differs from him, when he distinctly said of his amiable opponent, "the rest of us concede his sincerity and think too highly of him personally to indulge in any individual abuse" of him. Fortunately, or not, as you choose, Dr. W. happened to know Brother Kellogg's story of the Clinton seance and had the temerity to say publicly, that the man who stood on one side of the "spirit" form did not agree with Judge Dunn, who escorted the other side. Perhaps one had hold of Chang and the other one of Eng, but more likely both were grasping a masquerading human being.

That "some one named Kellogg" is a loyal Spiritualist, a man careful in judgment, open to conviction and one of the best known and most faithful officials of that camp for a decade, at least. I do not hesitate to say that I believe Judge Dunn was fooled on that occasion and that it is the cold facts that "asperse, minify and class as worthless" his judgment instead of Dr. Warne so doing.

Let me urge our flustered attorney to try and get Alonzo Thompson, ex-president of the camp, to supply him information about the methods of the medium in question, and tell how he was made wise thereon.

Every Illinois Spiritualist owning a normal conscience is its sole custodian while those who have strangled that mentor of the soul welcome the stimulant of plausible platitudes offered by our Minnesota brother as a momentary rejuvenator of their moribund self-respect.

Since Judge Dunn, with very questionable taste, introduces Emma Nickerson Warne's personality into the controversy, he is entitled to the full benefit of her views. Supposed to be wrapped in a restful afternoon nap before the inroads of disease had been recognized, that lady suddenly opened her eyes and said to her husband: "George, I want you to promise me that if I pass out of life before you do, you will never try to reach me at a materializing cabinet, for I shall never come there." She knew that the rarely possible never becomes the frequent or constantly actual, and that it was a waste of time, money and judgment to dance attendance upon commercial dark cabinets.

On more than one occasion she said to the same gentleman: "You are right in your position on the 'fraud' question, but you will only get yourself hated"; and when herself sick to disgust over existing conditions, she urged him to join her in abandoning Judge Dunn's kind of Spiritualism and unite with a liberal church. The "present Dr. Warne" is quite satisfied with her past and continued approval, even though that of our badly duped judge is withheld.

Small wonder Brother Dunn is looking about for a scape-goat on which to lay the responsibility for his present humiliation, but President Barrett is not available, for he has been criticised and cursed from coast to coast by Dunn's proteges for doing too much work along the very line of exposing "wolves in sheep's clothing." The Judge himself covertly classes Brother B. among a "class of so-called great high priests of Spiritualism who frown upon most physical manifestations as unproven." And yet Brother Barrett has said by voice and pen, after referring to "sixty or seventy different varieties of phenomena," that "I honestly believe that the majority of these phases of mediumship are based on facts. I must not be misunderstood as being a foe to phenomena, nor as an enemy to mediums. On the contrary I am a loyal friend to both, but I do not want the spurious coin to pass current for the genuine."

Anyone offering Judge Dunn overwhelming evidence that he has been imposed upon will be met with his self-satisfied, cock-sure utterance: "My faculty of observation is sufficient for myself. I am possessed of all my natural faculties in a good condition and must be permitted to form my conclusions from their use." Here we may have found the only finite man who is endowed with infinite omniscience. It is beyond the prerogatives of the president of the N. S. A. to determine what mediums shall be allowed within the jurisdiction, or upon the platform, of any camp.

Judge Dunn's "faculty for observation" must sometimes be unreliable, for the officers of the Clinton Camp aided in leading it astray. Observation embraces several faculties, but our astute brother evidently allows them to work singly instead of in natural co-ordination. Has he entirely lost the one called reason, or common sense? The official board of that camp does not hire physical mediums, as it does platform talent, and welcomed Winans just as it did Dunn or any other individual. Some of its members patronized his seances, while all of them hoped his work was genuine. Had they dared to compel him to undergo critical investigation, and by chance rendered a conscientious verdict adverse to the medium, Drum-Major Dunn would have been found in the front ranks of the chorus which howled, "High priests of Spiritualism, opposed to physical phenomena!" while the financial patronage of such as he would have gone a-glimmering.

In order to attend Winans' camp seances last summer admission could only be had by a ticket reading "the purchaser, holder, or user is during attendance simply a spectator and is to conduct himself or herself in as quiet orderly manner as any religious meeting, and to interfere in no way with the progress of the seance." Thus such things as flash lights, or seizure of the medium, were guarded against and the jury agreed to a verdict before evidence was introduced.

Brother Dunn's "observer" fails to note that Winans does not claim to give the phenomena of Spiritualism, for the entrance ticket to his show further reads, "At no time does Mr. C. E. Winans charge for spiritual manifestations, but only for his time; no guarantee whatever is made as to the character, origin or mode of manifestation of any phenomena occurring at the seance, and C. E. Winans or the holder of the ticket may entertain or advance the spiritual or other explanation thereof, and the other party shall in no way be held responsible for such views or explanation."

Attorney Dunn was unable to close his client's mouth before he had admitted to Prof. Leith Old that he resorted to trickery at Hot Springs. Every lawyer strives to ignore evidence adverse to his side of the cause. The "defense" signed by Mr. Old simply said after a totally different seance by Winans that "we received under strictly test conditions very fine materialistic demonstrations and according to our way of thinking the recently so-called expose is a personal matter between Mr. Winans and the parties concerned." The original seance was so decidedly "materialistic" as to be in no sense due to spirit intelligences.

Very carefully the identity of the gifted psychic, "whose mediumship has always been unquestioned," is concealed. Can it be possible a medium has been found upon whose genuineness all men and women are unbrokenly agreed? Until we know her personality and record we will delay our final acceptance of her theory of artificial toggery in spirit manifestations, and maintain firmly that such things are never used by a medium except when in a conscious state. Judge Dunn endorsed the unconscious theory by giving it his approval as unqualifiedly "reasonable" and thus became its public sponsor. Clairvoyants on every hand bear record that they rarely, if ever, see spirit forms unclothed. The celestial wardrobe appears to be complete. The clothing is as easily shown as the form itself.

Eugene Crowell, author of the "Spirit World, Its Inhabitants, Nature and Philosophy," says the garments of male and female spirits are always found in their homes ready for them when they enter. Their tastes in the choice of garments are anticipated and the latter are of every color, texture, and style they can desire, and never wear out or become soiled. When they are qualified to advance to a higher heaven, garments from that heaven are brought to them in which they array themselves, not being permitted to take anything whatever from one heaven to another, everything in any heaven belonging exclusively to that heaven.

Suited as to pattern, style and fit, what need have the spirit hosts of luminous cheese-cloth, ill-fitting wigs, concealing masks and convenient dummies? The clothing of heaven is good enough for flitting visits to earth. Why compel them to patronize old clothing dealers and fake paraphernalia houses?

EXPERIENCES OF A MEDIUM.

Various Premonitions Given in Dreams.

In the fall, just before I went to Clarinda to see my sister, I dreamed I owned a large brick building; it seemed to be a mansion; it had marble steps, and it had something like marble around the windows and doors. I dreamed that I went into a room on the south side of the hall, and then went through the hall to a room in the back part of the building.

My sister was at the hospital being doctored, and my father got word that she was worse, and so, he, mother, brother Harry and I went over to see her the 7th of July, 1903. She died the 7th day of August, 1903, just a month later.

In September, 1903, after my sister died, I was sitting on the floor looking over some letters, when I came across one I had written to her and didn't send it, because I went to see her. While I was reading it I felt her standing behind me. I turned to see her, and felt as if there was a curtain between us.

On December 31, 1903, at night, just after I had got into bed, there appeared a corner of a room with something in it with a white cloth over it. Three days later my husband's aunt Susan died. Everything was just as I had seen it, and she was laid out in the same corner with the same cloth laid over her.

On February, 1905, I was sitting by the table reading. Just as I was folding the paper there appeared a black crape, like the one that hangs on the door when anybody dies, coming down from the ceiling. Just five days later I heard about a man dying. He has a daughter who is a friend of mine.

In March, 1905, just as I had got in bed there appeared a brick church with a sidewalk in front of it; on the sidewalk appeared ladies carrying flowers, and they were going into the church. Near the sidewalk appeared horses and buggies. There appeared men, too, and they were tying their horses to posts by the church. A week after I heard that a friend of mine died.

Just awhile before Aunt Susan died, I heard singing two nights, the songs I heard were, "Nearer my God to Thee," and "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

JOHN F. M.

The Question at Issue.

A Calm and Dispassionate Consideration of the Same From the Standpoint of Reason and Common Sense.

I have refrained so far from writing anything under the caption of the Court of Inquiry, but having been requested, and urged by some to do so, I will venture a few thoughts.

There has been much good said on one side. I think many have been bettered by reading the same. Those on the other side having presented no real argument—not even a denial; rather they have for once in their lives acknowledged the truth. They do not deny using, but SAY IT IS AT TIMES ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY TO USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, SUCH AS FALSE BEARDS, WIGS, TURKEY FEATHERS, ETC.

The only question I see involved is, "Is honesty, or fraud right?" Deceit seems to be their greatest forte. If they are so anxious to convince the sitters when called upon to examine the cabinet, sew the medium in the chair, put meal in his hands, etc., why not open the music box, or some secret place and show them the exact contents?

When I first wrote to Brother Boving of Hot Springs, Ark., congratulating him in the exposure of fraud, I did not dream of it ever going into print, but when he returned it typewritten to me for my signature for the part I had written in regard to my experience with Winans, for publication, I hesitated, knowing that by so doing I would make perhaps everlasting enemies of some of my friends, but on meditation I affixed my signature, saying: "I have said nothing but the truth, and will stand by it if the whole world turns against me. I would rather have the approbation of a few spirit friends for truth, than of the whole world for error."

I now think that the enmity of some will only be transient, for I am in hopes that in a short time they will see the error of their way.

In regard to Mr. Dunn's article, it is such a palpable falsehood in so far as materialization is concerned, I predict no evil will come out of it to true Spiritualists, for no reasonable person will believe it.

I want no sleight-of-hand, no legerdemain, no trickery of any kind, and knowingly I will not accept it.

As stated before, I have attended but three so-called materializing seances. I saw, perhaps, forty so-called spirit forms, and to my positive knowledge not one genuine manifestation. Nor do I believe there is anyone on earth that can at a stated time and place, for money, produce one genuine materialized form. Many will say to the contrary. If they have an evidence of such, let them proclaim it. Because some will affirm that they have seen the genuine in these paid seances, don't understand me to say they are false in their statement, but sadly mistaken. But a person who will not acknowledge the truth when fully demonstrated is not worth bothering with. Wait till he gets the philosophy, and then the truth will demonstrate itself.

We have many statements made about materialization, but if you wish to go back to bible times for proof I am perfectly willing you should do so, yet so far as the validity of the scriptures are concerned I do not take it for granted by any means, but many love it because they have never been born into a higher life.

When the apostles were all congregated in an upper chamber on account of the fear of the Jews, and when the door was shut (perhaps bolted) Jesus is said to have appeared in their midst. Now who was the medium? Who was looking for any such manifestation? Was there an entrance fee attached? What was the idea in this manifestation? Was it not for a purpose?

In olden time it was said that the dead know not anything; that they have perished, and can not rise again.

According to the narrative Brother Thomas was a man just like me; he could not believe without evidence, so that appearance was for a purpose. So was it with Father Abraham. He was in his door when God appeared to him in the form of three men, and he had victuals prepared for them, and they did eat. That is as unreasonable to me as Jonah swallowing the whale.

Now, as I have stated what I do not believe, let me state what I know. I know there is genuine materialization. It may occur when you are alone or in company, but never at a stated time or place for money. There is always a purpose in it. The natural law which rules and governs all things, at stated times unknown to the mortal, this phenomenon occurs.

I have been defrauded so much that, if it were not for the manifestations that I have received when alone, I would almost be compelled to deny the whole thing.

Oh! the ignorance there is! Why some are always looking for the unreasonable, and are not satisfied with anything else, is more than I can understand. They have good judgment in other things. Many of them can drive the very best of bargains, but when it comes to Spiritualism they must have the turkey feathers, false beards, wigs, etc., concealed in a music box, or somewhere else before they can believe in materialization.

The simple plain truth can not be understood by some; they insist on the ridiculous, and that in the dark.

Spiritualism is overrun with phenomena, so-called, and not enough philosophy. The so-called phenomena does not always appeal to reason. If we were but acquainted with the law of evolution which governs all things; if we knew whence we came, whither we are going, and for what purpose we are here, we would not require the phenomena we otherwise would.

A man said to me the other day: "I am sure I have talked with my father, mother, brother and his wife, after they had passed through the so-called death state." He was positive of it, yet he said he could not believe in Spiritualism. I said to him: "Why, it is because you are filled full of the old traditional religion." He was full of the old God-idea, of the creation and fall of man, and the doctrine of a redeemer. I said that when his intelligence was developed till he could understand the truth, then he could understand the phenomena.

I am acquainted with a man who, when I first began to investigate, was an earnest and sincere Spiritualist so far as the phenomena was concerned. I attended many seances at his house, but the time came when mediums were exposed, their deceptions disclosed. Not understanding the true doctrines of Spiritualism and its laws, he became disgusted and is to-day what is termed a good church member.

Admitting the fact that all things pass through darkness in unfoldment, we should not conclude that we must always remain in the dark. The grandest phenomena I ever witnessed transpired in broad daylight, and when I was not expecting it. Don't understand me that I want something for nothing. I believe we can not do too much for the true medium. We should be very careful of them, and give them our best. But mentally developed mediums have the transcendency over the physical medium, and it is through them we attain to greater vibration.

Some people are so constructed that they insist on having the unreasonable, the miraculous, before they will accept the truth. If we can understand through all we can see and observe of nature's wonderful works, that there was nothing of a creation, a Garden of Eden or a flood; that Lot's wife did not turn into a pillar of salt; that mankind never fell; that we do not stand in need of a redeemer; that Christ's body was never raised from the tomb; that there is no resurrection of our physical body; that there is no reason or sense in a conception by a holy ghost—when we can understand all this, we will have no need for turkey feathers, false beards, wigs and costumes. When we have learned the above, it is then we can unfold just as the rose does, leaf after leaf.

Every lesson we learn prepares us for a higher one. As soon as we get out of the a b c's, we learn to spell, read, write and to make unerring mathematical calculations. We soon learn that the world is not flat and rests on posts driven in the mud. If we want to be enlightened, let us read the best papers and books; hear our best lectures; get the leading thought—be right up with the front ranks of progression.

Let us understand we suffer for each wrong we do; also suffer for our own ignorance; for what we sometimes call punishment, is nothing but the result growing out of our ignorance.

Many cry and weep in their deepest agony when some loved one is born into the spirit world. If they could only realize that their loved ones are around and about them, that they are not dead, then their sorrow would be turned to joy; their grief to rejoicing. So give us more of the glorious philosophy, and fewer turkey feathers, wigs, skull-caps, false beards, etc.

I know a lady who lost her husband, after living a long and happy married life. She grieved and grieved. One night while in bed weeping, without a moment's warning, without a medium, and without any artificial toggery, her husband stood by her bedside and told her not to weep, and to go to a certain bank and there she would find out all about the business affairs. She did so. Everything was as he had stated. You could not make her believe anything else but that she had seen him. It satisfied her mind in a measure, but it did not make a Spiritualist of her. Now, if she had had the philosophy with it, how grand would be her enjoyment during her remaining earthly days; but, alas! she is still a strong orthodox, expecting millions of people to be burned in that lake of fire.

If materializing mediums can produce the genuine, why not go to California, and try to get the $1,000—yes, simply try—that Brother Hale has in the bank for just one genuine materialized form?

I am acquainted with some parties who claim to produce trumpet work and etherealization. When the light is blown out, the first question to the sitters is, do you want trumpet work or etherealization first? Fraud at the very outset. There is no honest medium on the face of earth who can control the spirit forces. The spirits control or produce such phenomena as they choose. No medium can tell beforehand who will come or what they will say. Again the medium would state as to who would be next—saying there will be four or five etherealize at once directly. Any sane person can know at a glance that it is fraud.

Just take a little wire rod two feet long, with a little crook on the end, and you can put every etherealized form in your coat pocket. Their fate is settled, and it will only be but a short time till they will weep and howl that the rocks and mountains may fall on them and hide them from their shame.

Oh! for true mediumship, and for true spiritual Spiritualism. Let us all try to live pure true lives. Let our light (if we have one) shine so that the whole world may be lighted.

About the best way to get rid of the spurious is not to recognize nor patronize the same. Spiritualism cannot exist much longer running in the same channel it is now in. There must be something done and that quickly. I think the stand The Progressive Thinker has taken is the correct one, and the paper is the means of doing more good for our grand cause than any other one power. My earnest prayer is for the prosperity of the truth. Expose evil on every possible occasion.

AN AWFUL SUFFERER.

It is agreed by Medical Authorities in general that Hay-Fever and Asthma are the two most disagreeable and distressing maladies known to Medical Science. The season for the former disease will soon be with us once more and we think it but proper to call the attention of sufferers to a Remedy which is known to have proved a remarkable success, as evidenced by the large number of people who advise of their cures after from one to thirty years' suffering, when change of climate or Physicians gave them very little, if any, relief.

This truly remarkable Remedy is a product of Darkest Africa, called the Kola Plant, and is an unfailing cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. All over Europe physicians are endorsing and prescribing the Kola Plant as a positive Constitutional Cure for these Diseases. So sure are the importers of Kola of the fact that it cannot fail to cure that they are sending out large trial cases, free, to any sufferer of Hay-Fever and Asthma who makes the request.

For the benefit of our readers, who are sufferers, we cheerfully give the address of the Importing Company that has given this boon to humanity. Address Kola Importing Company, 1162 Broadway, New York, and they will send you a large trial case prepaid by mail. You should surely try it.

THE CRUCIAL POINT.

There Is No Virtue in Tainted Phenomena.

Judge Dunn insists in his "plea in abatement" anent the Winans case on trial in the Court of Inquiry, that the crucial point to be decided is, was Winans entranced or unconscious at the Hot Springs seance; or was he conscious of his acts?

Under the circumstances connected with this case, the question amounts to this: Did Winans, in his normal condition, practice wilful deception—or, did discarnate spirits put him under unconscious trance and use him for the purposes of deception?

One thing must be admitted: The appearances all indicated conscious, wilful intent to deceive. The careful beforehand preparations in the supply of paraphernalia, and the deftly cunning hiding of the same indicate consciousness of guilty intent, and fear of discovery and exposure. The whole manner in the pre-arrangement and after-disposition in the case points to wilful and consciously guilty purpose to deceive.

The point now is, whether it was Winans' own conscious act and purpose, or whether it was the work of his "controls" while he was in unconscious trance—it was equally reprehensible in either case.

Deception by "controls" should no more be condoned and excused, or defended, than deception by the "medium."

If the "medium" was unconscious during the time of actual performance of the toggery display, he gave beforehand, a willing consent to be thus used, and so was a willing coadjutor and assistant—particeps criminis—partner in crime.

There is yet another point of vital importance involved in this unhappy business. Admitting—for this purpose—that the medium was wholly unconscious of his acts—and further still, that he was even in unconscious trance when he prepared, purchased or supplied the paraphernalia, and when he bid it in a music box before and after using—what then?

Simply this: The dark shadow of the APPEARANCE OF DECEPTION hangs over the manifestation as a murky pall—and utterly vitiates and destroys its usefulness as a "test," or as evidence of spirit return.

Doubtful "manifestations" are of no value except as bogus money is of value—and except, again, to the gullible "dead-easies" who are ready to accept on "satisfied faith," like the good orthodox believers who gulp down bible "proofs" of bible "facts," as "the sun stood still," the whale and Jonah, the literal physical resurrection of flesh-and-blood dead bodies, etc.

Such "manifestations" may give satisfaction to such gullibles—but it is like the satisfaction of the man with a bogus dollar in his pocket, believing it is genuine.

The use of artificial toggery, even under unconscious trance conditions, can only tend to bring suspicion and cast doubt and discredit on all "manifestations" and all "mediums" concerned in such performances, hence should be avoided—by spirits and mortals alike.

The argument, or plea, of unconscious trance, even if true, does not justify the use of artificial paraphernalia in seances for spiritual manifestations. Such manifestations, to be of value, must be free from all APPEARANCE of trickery and deception. This must be the crucial test of their value.

Even admitting that Winans was in a state of unconscious trance at the time of his performance, it does not excuse nor justify such manifestations. His "controls" have no right to use him in such manner, and he has no right to lend himself to "spirits" for such uses.

Spiritualists cannot afford to allow their cause to be loaded down with tainted phenomena—such as are produced by "mediums" who resort to stock tests, "blue book" methods, and artificial toggery—to aid the "dear spirits" in their "wonderful manifestations."

I am reminded of a visit I made to a seance held by a "materializing medium" in Chicago, whose name and fame was somewhat prominent a few years ago. Her "strict test conditions" were in fact strictly loose and unconditioned. The lights were turned as low as could be without utter extinguishment. The "medium" for the wonderful display of spirit power took her place within curtains on a raised platform, and—of course (?) went into an unconscious trance. Her hubby acted as manager. After a time, the curtains parted slightly, and a light object—(spirit)—was barely discernible at the opening. Hubby coaxingly inquired: "Dear spirit, can't you appear a little more plainly? Sweet spirit, try to show yourself more distinctly," etc., etc.

But the coaxing was all in vain; the conditions were not right; the dear spirit could not gather sufficient strength, the seance ended, the medium came out of her "unconscious trance," greatly exhausted—and the show was over. J. C. UNDERHILL.

A Louisville Medium.

While in the city of Louisville, Ky., on professional business, I dropped in to see Mrs. George Marks, who is an excellent medium. I visited her as an entire stranger. She did not know my name or my place of residence. I quietly asked her if she could give me a message upon the slate. She informed me she had done away with slates and used a paper tablet. I told her that was better, for if I should receive a message from my dear ones I would be pleased to have it on paper.

I stepped across the street and purchased a small tablet, brought it in, and Mrs. Marks had a small table sitting in the middle of the room where there were several other guests who were receiving messages of love from their dear ones. Presently my turn came. I drew up close to the table and she took my tablet in her hand, turned back the cover and placed a small piece of lead pencil upon it. Presently I heard the writing under the table and then heard one leaf of the paper turn over, then the pencil began writing again, a leaf turned, and so on until there were five pages written full, not one mistake, my name called in different places throughout the letter, and all my business affairs mentioned, things that I had really forgotten, and the most wonderful of all the very uncommon name of Mehitabel signed in full. I know Mrs. Marks never heard of me before, and I know she had never seen me.

Mrs. Marks is crowded with visitors. My business has kept me in the city for nearly six weeks, and there is hardly a day but I drop in to hear the independent voice of her brother, whom everyone knows as Bud Morgan. The voice is something wonderful.

Mrs. Marks also gives trumpet work in the light, in fact all her work is done in broad daylight or gas light.

She informs me she will visit the Chesterfield camp grounds this summer, by special invitation.

First Step in the Plan of a Catholic Revolution Defined.

The Knights of Columbus, which seems to be a secret religious organization under Jesuitical management, was late in session in Los Angeles. A high pontifical mass was held in the cathedral, with an immense collection of people, one hundred and fifty priests, and several prelates were present. His Grace, Archbishop Montgomery, of San Francisco, preached a sermon to the assembled thousands, representatives from every part of the American Union, all bound together by a common obligation, with degrees and of course secret signs, by which to distinguish each other. That sermon was an opening wedge to a contemplated revolution whose culmination can only be known by a knowledge of the past. It was a thrust at our common school system, which has made the United States the great, prosperous, and majestic nation it is, with unthinkable possibilities. "His Grace" unquestionably voiced the will and determination of the secret organization he addressed which he said was—

"To have the government specify what shall be taught in the public schools as a free system of education.

"To allow Catholic, Protestant and Agnostic to have this free education given in schools where such religions are taught.

"To have such education as is specified by the government furnished at the government's expense, and such other instruction as the particular school wishes to have given at the expense of the church or society which supports it."

"His Grace" declared: "The system now carried out makes schools of agnosticism. Under this system the percentage of religious population in this country has been growing steadily less since it was first founded."

His Grace neglected to state that the criminal statistics of every American state show that a majority of the convicts in the penitentiaries were churchmen, and that Catholics are far in the lead; whilst of Spiritualists, Agnostics and Jews there are but few or none.

Divide the school funds and give Catholics exclusive control of all children priests can coax, wheedle or frighten into their schools, then those children in the forming state of character are made to believe that faith in Jesus is a guaranty of eternal rewards; and that he will pay all the debts for wrong-doing they owe.

Gaining control of the youth of the country, and educating them in their barbarian faith "His Grace" seems to suppose this decline in religious population will be arrested. We beg leave to assure him that the only way to stay the march of mind is to obliterate our entire system of education; relegate instruction to the pulpit; contract knowledge to the limits of the Bible; revive the myths of the patriarchs and Christian fathers; restore the Inquisition with all its instruments of torture; and give it control of all persons they shall designate as heretics; then the retrograde will cease, and then the church will be victor. That this is the end the holy father and his secret conclave have in view all well know; but as all cannot be accomplished at once the first strike is at the system which has robbed them of power to tyrannize over the people and make them slaves to priestcraft. But they will fail. Intelligence cannot be enslaved. Ignorance has had its day, and priestly rule in America is hastening to its end.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

Japan Trampling on the Cross.

Way back in the early years of the last century, when time was yet young with this then juvenile, and he was a close student of Woodbridge's Geography, he often critically examined an illustration on page 139, underneath of which was printed: "Japanese Trampling on the Cross." The picture represented a large group of the islanders of both sexes, who were trampling on the emblem of the Christian faith, while mothers were also teaching their children how best to express their hatred of that sect. Then we read:

"The Japanese were formerly obliged every year to trample on the cross, as a token of their hatred of Christianity, which was once introduced among them by Portuguese Catholics."

This old-time geography further added:

"Japan is subject to extremes of heat and cold, but is highly cultivated, and is said to be the richest of all countries in gold and silver. The people are very ingenious, and considered superior in arts, sciences, and good laws, to most if not all other nations of Asia."

That was Japan and its people, as told by an American scholar, near a hundred years ago. Though the annual custom of trampling on the cross has probably disappeared; yet still very few of that people have any respect for that instrument. In our boyish days we wondered what gave rise to that hatred. As the years passed on, and we learned of the horrible cruelties and outrages which Christians practiced on barbarian nations, to spread their faith our surprise ceased. Look at Peru, Central America, Mexico, and note the ruin the Spanish cavaliers, in the name of a crucified God, wrought in those countries. The population, 40,000,000 of them, says Las Casas, suffered death at the hands of Christians, he, himself, the historian, being a Christian missionary. Look at the desolation of Africa, raided during many centuries for slaves by Christians, under a permit from the head of the Christian church; Not a country in all Europe but was desolated by wars to propagate Christianity. On one occasion a bull was issued for the depopulation of Germany, because her nobles were too intelligent to adopt the faith. When they did do so it was to save her people from extermination, not because they believed the cruel creed.

Japan experienced the excesses, and the crimes of Christianity. They have welcomed our science, our arts, our manufactures, our engineering skill, our methods of warfare, and improved upon them; but our religion is held in contempt, they having a better than ours, that was not established or extended by bloodshed.

Every Christian sect, without regard to name, which accepts the cross as its symbol, is an outgrowth of the vices and cruelties, as well as crimes, which made it an emblem of Christian faith.

As Spiritualism is not an offshoot of Christianity, and is in no way responsible for its crime, so The Progressive Thinker feels honored to be the organ of the new faith, and is glad to herald the victories the Japs have gained over their ancient foe.

Says He Heard the Voice of the Deity

The Rev. Frank A. Scofield, pastor the East Sixty-first Street People's Church, New York City, declared that he had talked with God and had heard His voice in reply, in an address at the Methodist preachers' meeting recently:

"I heard the voice of God speaking to me, telling me that I should be restored to health and strength and be enabled again to labor for the kingdom," he said.

"I well remember one Sunday morning in March a year ago when I lay there in that situation and called upon God for help. And I heard as truly as any prophet ever heard the voice of God speaking to me, telling me that I should be restored to health and strength and be enabled to labor for the kingdom. Ah! God does answer prayer."

How easy it is for a person of such limited knowledge to be mistaken.

No doubt Rev. Scofield heard a voice telling him he "would be restored to health and strength to resume his labors," and it may occur as told him; but should it not, would he accept the voice of falsehood as from a perfect God? Not if he is a rational, thinking being.

Many such voices are heard in accurate prophecy, but the mind of man has become so advanced and enlightened upon such matters that but few, in fact only the most ignorant, the least informed, ever think of crediting the central Godhead with being the author.

But when we think of the gift of clairvoyance coming upon one educated, or rather taught to believe in an Omnipotence, an Omnipresence, an Omniscience, etc. without any other agencies, or but one intermediary, it is not to be wondered at he would think it the voice of God.

When a voice speaks to a person, seemingly right out of space, it has a tendency to bring out all the electrifying or horrifying (according to the nature of the message) superstitious fancies in his narrow mind, if he has been brought up under the old dogmatic religions.

In a sense it was the voice of God, and no doubt will become a verified prophecy. It was the voice, perhaps, of a loving relative in spirit life, who knew his earnest desire to labor for the cause he loved, speaking into his attuned ear the words of cheer and encouragement.

It was an angel of love conveying to a weak and despondent mortal a message of hope.

It was an angel of peace imparting to a despairing human soul a soothing balm.

It was the voice of spirit speaking unto spirit out of the sea of spirit.

It was the voice of God, the voice of Intelligence, inspiring a mortal by speaking to him those consoling words.

Rev. Scofield is far more elated with the idea of being in close touch with his God than he would be with the actual truth in his possession.

PROGRESS.

'Tis weary watching wave by wave,
And yet the tide heaves onward;
We climb, like corals, grave by grave,
That pave a pathway sunward;
We are driven back, for our next fray
A newer strength to borrow,
And where the Vanguard camps to-day
The Rear shall rest to-morrow!

A Dangerous Impulse—Was It Obsession?

A strange story comes from Muncie, Ind., setting forth a story of a modern Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in the person of an apparently sane, well-to-do farmer, who, at times, can scarcely overcome an overwhelming desire to seize and strangle to death persons whom he loves, was told calmly and in a straightforward manner by the man himself, John Donnahue, who came to this city from his country home and surrendered himself to the police. As he sat in one of the chairs at the police station, he told his story, as follows:

"I am here because I want to be locked up, that I may not harm those about me, especially my family. I am perfectly sane, and am all the time, so far as my family and friends are able to tell. But at times I am possessed of an uncontrollable desire to strangle and kill those about me. The last time this desire to strangle came over me was a few days ago, just as my little daughter was kissing me. I wanted to seize her by the throat and strangle her to death, right there. I battled against the desire and overcame it for the time. The strange part of it is, that I love the little girl better than my own life. Just before that incident, the same kind of an impulse came upon me when a woman wanted to take from my arms a baby that I had been holding. I could have killed the woman, but, again, I was able to overcome the impulse. Thus far I have been able, by great exercise of will power, to get the better of it, but the inclination seems to be growing on me, and I am afraid I will do somebody violence if I am not put in a safe place. At times, just as I do now, I know that I am all right and would not harm a kitten. Then, all of a sudden, my whole nature changes, and I become a tiger. Of course, I am insane, I must be. That is the reason I want to be locked up."

The police committed him in jail, where he will be kept, pending an examination as to his sanity. Donnahue is known as a sober, industrious, hard-working farmer, owning a small tract of land north of this city. He has never exhibited symptoms of insanity to those who know him, and is said by his friends to be a model man, fond of his wife and children, and a good citizen.

Ann Odelia Diss de Bar.

Ann Odelia Diss de Bar, who is serving sentence of seven years' imprisonment for procuration, is now the most exemplary prisoner in the Aylesbury female convict establishment in London, England. She preaches to her sister convicts, her favorite text being "The Righteous Life," and she is known among them as "the queen." She is reputed to exercise an extraordinary influence over even the most refractory convicts, the prison doctor believing it to be hypnotism. She is head of the dressmaking department and is petitioning for release on the ground of ill health and the excessive severity of her punishment. Dis de Bar was at one time a prominent medium in this country, but was finally exposed, and punished by imprisonment. The gullibles were taken in by her as usual, and many raised their hands in holy horror because The Progressive Thinker took an important part in exposing this medium. Perhaps she has reformed, but knowing her real nature, we fear her pretense to living a better life is all a sham.

In Reference to Music.

Wm. Rauschmayer, of Coshocton, Ohio, presents the following question, and requests us to answer it:

"ARE THE PRESENT SO-CALLED ORIGINAL MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS STRICTLY ORIGINAL AND NEW, OR ARE THEY MERELY STRAINS BORROWED FROM OTHER COMPOSITIONS?"

The brother should submit this question to some learned musician or composer. In conclusion he says:

"We know that there are only 13 notes or tones (I think 13 is correct), in the chromatic scale. Now when we take into consideration that these 13 tones have been arranged in every conceivable combination for hundreds of years, and the millions of pieces of music that have been written, it would seem as though the limit had been reached in composing. Of course, a piece of music may be arranged in different keys, with different accompaniments and all shades of variations, but its originality must remain and the question in this case refers only to the solo part of the piece itself."

The Yankees of the Orient.

To the present Japan has used the Chinese characters in all their literature. There are thousands of these characters, each the representative of a word, and each must be learned and remembered. News now comes that the government of the Sunrise Land has determined to substitute the Roman alphabet in place of the clumsy symbols now in use. This done and in a few years Japan will take front rank with the most favored nations in literature, as they have already done in many other departments of civilization.

It is said the Mikado several years ago proposed to introduce the English language in all the schools of the nation. It would not be surprising if this would be an accomplished fact in a few years, for many of her learned men now write and speak our language fluently, and consequently know its great worth.

A VISION FREES SUSPECT.

St. Louis Witness Who Had Identified Accused Man as Slayer Reverses Testimony as the Result of a Vision.

Jacques Stark, who had positively identified Schneider as the masked robber who shot and killed Mutzberg, said that two months after the crime he had a vision. He saw again enacted before his eyes the slaying of Mutzberg. Two men entered the saloon, wearing black mufflers as masks and with their hats pulled down over their eyes. Stark and a man named Charles Salisbury and several others were in the saloon. Mutzberg got a shotgun and rushed to the front door after the robbers, one of whom shot him. He followed them outside and was again shot. Then he re-entered the saloon and fell dead at the bar.

Thus far Stark's dream was a duplicate of the real killing of Mutzberg. But in his dream, he says, at the moment that Mutzberg was shot at the door the muffler fell from the face of the man who shot the saloon-keeper, and Stark says he saw that it was not Schneider.

Because of this dream Stark told Circuit Attorney Sager he was not willing to take the stand and swear that Schneider was the man who killed Mutzberg. This left the state without an identifying witness.—Record Herald.

Review of Passing Events.

From the editor, W. C. Nation, of the Message of Life, Levin, New Zealand, we received a pleasant acknowledgment of an article, such as was deemed useful in that field. Spiritualism in that island world has been of peculiar growth and free from the choking weeds which have impeded it in this country. There is manifested a pure desire for spiritual knowledge, and less attention to bizarre phenomena which attract the crowd. Although Mr. Nation writes a private letter, he will pardon me for quoting a passage:

"I shall use your interesting communication in the June number of the Message, and believe me it is thankfully received. I am glad that my little magazine finds its way all over the colony and has been the means of bringing the Spiritualists into a closer knowledge of each other and what is going on in other parts of the world. Mrs. Nation and I have no trance, or clairvoyant gifts, but our house is a sort of Liberty Hall for all genuine mediums, and as our share of the work is to herald the glad tidings, we publish the Message of Life.

"Many years ago we had wonderful manifestations among the members of our family—mere children—and I am about to publish the story which I think will be interesting to Spiritualists generally.

"The work goes slowly, but steadily forward in New Zealand. Mrs. Prior is doing a good work in Wellington, confounding skeptics, helping the laggards over the stile, and brightening up Spiritualists generally. Such visitors do much good, for we have no such development here. Our mediums keep too much in shallow water. They do not realize the ocean of truth that spreads out before them. The want of a suitable literature has been a great drawback, and most depend on what they receive at their home circles.

"There is not a book depot in the colony worth the name. Of course we have some stern fighting, but this does us all good, and the very correspondence in the papers is useful, because so many get acquainted with the subject.

"The 'subjective self' is a subject that has to be faced. In my investigations I must admit that the sensitive's inner self often shows up. The difficulty is to know the border line between spirit control and the workings of our own "recording angel."

"We have to investigate, discriminate, hold fast as our sheet anchor to reason. The infinite is for you and for me to draw from. The 'well is deep.'"

From the bright pages of the Message, we learn that the Spiritualists of Wellington have built a new hall, called the New Century. It occupies a conspicuous position in the city. The auditorium is large, with a sky-blue ceiling, dotted with stars, and the walls are ornamented with paintings on spiritual subjects. There are two spacious cloak rooms for ladies and gentlemen, a library and reading room. A broad flight of stairs leads to an elegant dining-room in the second story. It is a well equiped spiritual home.

At Wauganui is a flourishing "Spiritual Scientist's Association." This is the most conservative town in the colony.

It is notable that while Spiritualism in New Zealand may be regarded as almost of indigenous growth, the believers having to rely on their own "home circles" for their knowledge, yet the philosophy taught of spirit life is identical with that of America and Europe. Is not this conclusive evidence that the communicating intelligences are superior and beyond the sphere of this earthly life? In all the diversity there is unity of thought and purpose.

Views of Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

This writer who has acquired a wide hearing by her contributions to the Hearst sensational syndicate of journals with black head-lines, has forced on a wide public consideration of psychic subjects of which it would have otherwise remained in darkness, and well she says:

"To scoff at what we do not understand is to brand ourselves vulgar, as well as ignorant."

It appears she is fully convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, and yet has a wholesome fear of the bugaboo of "obsession," yet what she says on this subject, and her personal experience is valuable, and should be held in mind by all sensitives:

"I would earnestly advise any one who is not in robust physical condition and not in the possession of a strong will, a clear reasoning brain and a well-balanced mind to keep away from psychic phenomena.

"During a time of very active investigation I learned the important fact that my own sense of personal responsibility and my own will power were being lessened by frequenting these places. I was unconsciously leaning upon predictions or being discouraged by the absence of them.

"Added to this came the knowledge that it is of vital importance to keep our minds wholesome, our brains occupied, our bodies strong and healthful and our desires clean and normal, if we would escape obsession by unclean spirits and earth-bound souls, and if we would earn immortal life on a high plane. Many degenerates, if not all, half the insane and many invalids are simply victims of obsession."

If a person becomes conscious of this weakening of the will, this loss of self-control, her advice to let the subject alone, is most wise. But sensitiveness does not necessarily carry with it disease of the will. The power to be independent, to think and act along lines determined by the highest reason, is the birthright of every human soul, and is to be chosen above everything else. Fortunately the highest form of spiritual impressibility is fostered by this complete control of self. No spiritual being worthy of being received, ever demands its sacrifice. Of the much-talked-of "obsession," and its dangers, the obsession by the conniving, selfish, earthly persons is far more menacing and dangerous than that of all the "spirits of the vasty deep." The mantle which protects from one shields from the other.

To attribute the crimes of "degenerates," the disease of brain of the "insane," and weakness of "invalids" to "obsession," is an assertion not supported by facts. It removes responsibility for which Mrs. Wilcox so strenuously contends.

When does the evil influence start? Admit that evil spirits "obsess," must they not be obsessed? Where shall we stop in the chain, and fix the responsibility?

Wherever we do pause, we shall have to admit identically similar conditions exist as we observe in the "obsessed," and produce the results. Why then go beyond and outside for an "occult" cause, when it is so readily explained by physical means?

That there is "obsession," is a corollary of the general proposition of sensitiveness to spirit control. The distinction should, however, carefully be made between the results of organization, and disturbance of physical functions, and spiritual interference.

Ever since, and ages before, the Israelites packed their sins on a goat, and sent it away into the wilderness, the sinner has sought to excuse his sins by throwing the burden on some one else. Weak and cringing Adams would have the "obsessing" Eves held responsible. They should remember that the first Adam did not find sympathy with God when he sought to save himself by criminating his wife.

DO SPIRITS ASSIST HER?

Indiana Child Is a Wonder—Beasts of the Field and Birds of the Air Take to 10-Year-Old Miss, Which She Attracts and Tames in a Remarkable Manner.

A phenomenal case of control over animals has been developet in Laporte County, Indiana. Little Edith Decker, a child of 10 years, having been attracting the attention of her neighbors through an almost supernatural power to influence and control birds and animals about her. She is the daughter of well-to-do people living on a farm a few miles southeast of this city.

Since her early childhood the girl has displayed an unusual friendliness toward all animals, and out of this friendliness has developed a faculty that is remarkable. She seems to exert an influence over wild animals that cannot be explained. The domestic animals and fowls which have been her playmates from the time she was able to toddle about the barnyard, seem to have a regard for her that is little less than human. The most shy of these have always permitted her to fondle them while the other members of the family were repelled.

Controls Vicious Ram.

Three years ago little Miss Decker's father owned a vicious ram, which none of the farm hands were able to control. Its disposition was so ugly that it was impossible for anyone to enter the field where it was pastured, and it would occasionally break through the fences and do damage about the farm. On such occasions the little girl, then only 7 years old, could control the animal as easily as could any of the ewes of the flock be controlled. She would calmly enter the field, place a strap about his neck and lead him to the barn or whither she wished with the confidence of absolute mastery. A ride upon his back was a romp that she greatly enjoyed.

A Shetland pony which through maltreatment when young had developed many vicious traits and which was practically unmanageable she readily brought under her control and taught to do many clever tricks. The cattle and the hogs that positively refused to be driven she led about as easily as she handled the other farm animals. Pigs, cattle, sheep, horses and the barnyard fowls follow at her heels as she goes about over the farm.

Little Edith's power over wild animals and birds is even more pronounced than that over the farm animals. At the age of 3 years she went out into the fields of her father's farm. On a score of occasions she brought to the house full-grown rabbits she had caught single-handed in the open fields and frequently came in with a meadow lark perched on her hands. A few days ago she entered the woods near her home, and seeing a bluebird sitting on a limb of a bush, stepped up to the bird and took it in her hands, where it nestled unrestrained until she saw fit to place it on a bush an hour later at her home.

While attending school near her home last spring the child and her playmates discovered the nest of a flying squirrel in the soot pan of the schoolhouse chimney. The other children made the first attempt to remove the young squirrels from the nest and were severely bitten by the mother squirrel. Little Edith, however, put her hand into the chimney hole and took out the little squirrels without causing the little mother the slightest uneasiness or being bitten. For weeks after that she made daily visits to the chimney and came to be on such good terms with the mother squirrel and her children that the hairy little beings seemed almost to await her coming.

Everyone knows that field mice will resist capture with all their might, and even when taken in custody will repulse an attempt to touch them. But they seem to be content to rest in her hands or pockets.

The above case is most remarkable, and places this young girl on the same plane as the adepts of India, whom, it is said, the most fierce of the wild animals of the jungle will not harm.

TRUTH.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Notable Personages Address College Women and Incidentally Express Their Views.

In a recent address by Cardinal Gibbons to the women graduates of Trinity College, Washington, D. C., he solemnly warned them against woman suffrage, and declared: "Because we give our women a college education, it does not follow that we intend them to clamor for the prerogatives of men." In times past men usurped about all the "prerogatives" there were, higher education among the rest, and if women had never "clamored" for this one, they would be where their foremothers were when they were not even taught the alphabet.

If Cardinal Gibbons did not wish his church women to clamor for the so-called "prerogatives of men" he should have kept the doors of the higher educational institutions closed to them. Catholic women have not shown themselves slow in "usurping" the so-called prerogatives of men in the past whenever opportunity offered.

In happy contrast to the utterances of Cardinal Gibbons to his women graduates, are those of Bishop McVichar of Rhode Island in his address to the graduating class of Bryn Mawr College, and Supreme Court Justice David J. Brewer in his address at Vassar College. Bishop McVichar said:

"I hope and pray that we may see woman suffrage come to pass soon. In this fuller citizenship there is no chance that woman would unsex herself. I believe that the paths she would walk in would not only be brightened, but they would be straightened."

Justice Brewer, after expressing his belief in woman suffrage said:

"Who shall say that before gray hair shall cover the heads of the women here to-night, there may not sit in the White House a woman who, like Queen Victoria, will shed lustre upon this country as Victoria shed lustre upon England?"

Legerdemain vs. Mediumship.

A VIVID EXPLANATION.

Wherein Legerdemain Is Exhibited in Its True Light, and In no Sense of Spirit Origin—A Trenchant Reply to Mr. Burr.

A great showman is credited with having said that the American people like to be fooled. Perhaps he had reason for making the statement.

I sometimes wonder if a large number of so-called Spiritualists of the present time do not like to be deceived with respect to mediumistic phenomena. At any rate some of them seem to shut their eyes resolutely to the unwelcome reality and refuse to open them until assured they are again in the realms of the unreal. There may be some profound reason for this condition, but if there is I shall leave its statement—at least for the present—to the philosophers of the press.

The venerable and learned Wm. Henry Burr, of this city, is a frequent contributor to the columns of The Progressive Thinker, and in the issue of June 17, there appeared an article from his pen that must be a source of considerable amusement to investigators. Evidently not the least of Mr. Burr's qualifications as an observer and reporter of psychic phenomena is an active and robust imagination. This will appear, I think, from a careful examination of his latest contribution.

It should be said here, however, that I do not question Mr. Burr's sincerity, honesty, truthfulness or integrity of purpose; and what follows must not be construed as reflecting upon him in any unkindly spirit.

The amusing portion of his article is the last paragraph. He has related some of his experiences and observations at a seance given by Mr. Fuss for the production of physical phenomena, the "medium" asserting that they were not produced by discarnate spirit intelligences. Mr. Burr says:

"We all went away satisfied that in spite of the man's assertions to the contrary, HE IS A MEDIUM, and that the performances we witnessed were spiritual."

It is a matter of regret that Mr. Burr's physical vision is sadly defective. Not long since, at the funeral of Mr. Morris Keim, I noticed Mr. Burr trying to get a view of the coffined face of his friend, and, in order to do so, his own face was lowered to within a very few inches of the glass cover. The room was very light, and it was in the middle of an afternoon. If such a defect in vision exists, how much dependence can be placed in what he "saw" at the seance of which he writes in the article under review?

What happened at the seance? The following: A "battery" was formed; "the ringing of a bell, beating a tambourine and drumming on the back of a guitar;" the man's coat came off "while he clasped with both hands" the arm of the one sitting next to him in the "battery." Another "battery" was formed, the persons composing it being chosen by raps from the cabinet, pads and pencils were handed into the cabinet and about twenty messages "were recognized and received" by those present; then followed writing by "a visible hand." How wondrous strange! Writing was actually done "by a visible hand."

Why is Mr. Burr anxious to charge these phenomena to the spirit world when the "medium," as he says, declared to the contrary? There was not a single phenomenon mentioned that might not have been produced by a clever sleight-of-hand amateur.

I regret that I was not present. However, I attended one of Mr. Fuss' exhibitions some weeks previous, and carefully noted what happened. I think it is safe to assume that practically the same conditions were present each time. When I was present all the paraphernalia (bell, guitar, small stand, writing paper, pads, pencils, tambourine, a split clothes-pin for drumsticks) were placed in the cabinet before the seance proper commenced.

The cabinet was formed by a curtain stretched across the corner of the room. The "battery" was formed by Mr. Fuss first taking his position in a chair the back of which was against the outside of the cabinet curtain; two other chairs were placed at his right, similarly situated. A second curtain was pinned around the necks of the three persons comprising the "battery" and thus fastened to the cabinet curtain. This second curtain hung down to the feet of the "battery," thus hiding them from the view of the audience, with the exception of their exposed heads.

Mr. Fuss sat at the end of the "battery." The orthodox method in a seance under such conditions is for the "medium" to clasp the wrist and arm, or hand and arm of the one next to him, in his hands, while the other two simply join hands.

Here you have the ideal conditions for the production of simulated spirit phenomena. There is not a single condition imposed to prevent fraud and deception. In regular seances of this kind, of course, no such test conditions are permissible. If they were insisted upon, there would be no phenomena.

If any genuine phenomena are produced under the conditions here outlined, it is my earnest conviction that the medium who sits under such conditions does himself a grave injustice. And the invisible forces using such a medium are sadly deficient in discrimination.

But to return. At the exhibition I attended every opportunity was afforded me to critically watch the proceedings. There were about thirty others present, the room being so crowded that a number stood. All the phenomena Mr. Burr has mentioned were produced, and I was the recipient of several messages, one, by the way from "Thomas Paine," who favored me with a longer epistle than he did Mr. Burr.

At the conclusion of the exhibition Mr. Fuss announced that he did not believe physical phenomena were produced by spiritual causes, directly, or words to that effect; plainly intimating that he did not regard the phenomena presented as in any sense spiritual. From mere curiosity I asked all present who credited the phenomena to discarnate spirits, after hearing Mr. Fuss' statement, to raise their hands. Either ten or twelve of the audience held up their hands, and among that number I noted some of the old Spiritualists of the city.

The exhibition I attended was free, but unfortunately it did not occur to me to "take up a collection." Perhaps that was because I am not a regular churchgoer.

What are we to believe? Mr. Burr says himself and all who witnessed them when he did are satisfied the phenomena enumerated were spiritual. The medium asserts otherwise. Who knows?

FOR MYSELF I AM NOT IN DOUBT, NOR HAVE I BEEN. IT IS A PLAIN CASE. MR. BURR'S ENTHUSIASM AND IMAGINATION HAVE PLAYED HAVOC WITH HIS CRITICAL FACULTIES AND HIS SOBER JUDGMENT.

I do not want any of my friends to imagine for an instant that I am opposed to physical phenomena. We need all the proofs and demonstrations of spirit presence, power and intelligence that may be obtained; but we have no need of simulated phenomena when it is sold in the market places as the genuine. It should be properly labeled.

The merchant in this city who sells adulterated flour is liable to arrest and fine. The medium who takes money for simulated phenomena, passing them off on a credulous public as genuine, should not be encouraged. At least it seems so to me.

I knew a Spiritualist who was extremely bitter against churches, religion, and priestcraft and who often ridiculed Christians for their ignorant credulity. A purported spirit told him that he should buy some shares of mining stock in a mine out in Colorado that he had never seen. He bought the stock. He paid assessments on it. Not long since he told me that he had paid out, on that investment, several thousand dollars, and received in return not a penny! And he talked about credulity!

There is before me a little volume printed in London, entitled "Some Reminiscences, by Alfred Smedley." It contains an interesting account of the physical manifestations occurring in the presence of Miss Wood, an English materializing medium. She seems to have been very successful in the work, and what attracted my mind in reading the account is the very suggestive fact that she was always willing and ready to comply with any reasonable test conditions that might be imposed. Perhaps she realized that unless the phenomena are produced under such conditions that there cannot reasonably be two opinions as to their genuineness they are practically without value. Of course, if the phenomena themselves are so distinctive and unique that to simulate them would be a practical impossibility, this consideration would not be applicable.

In the current issue of the Banner of Light, the venerable spiritual pilgrim, Dr. Peebles, in reply to a question asked by the interviewer, declares that when he reaches the Summerland and wishes to communicate with friends still in the mortal he will insist on suggesting and fixing the conditions under which he is to manifest, and if mortals do not fancy them "they can stay at home and attend to their own business." The Doctor is delightfully dogmatic in his statements sometimes, but in this instance softened and qualified what would otherwise have been a "hard saying" by the parenthetical remark, "unless I change my mind." Possibly there may be concessions on both sides.

I enjoy reading Dr. Peebles' trenchant articles and have often desired to meet him; but, if from the spirit side of life he should seek to communicate with me through the mediumship of a so-called physical medium, where the conditions all favored simulated phenomena and were arbitrarily dictated by the medium, I fear he would fail, because I should be elsewhere "attending to my own business."

And, unless I change my mind, I shall continue to think the exhibition Mr. Burr witnessed was a studied presentation of simulated phenomena, given with the excellent purpose in mind of teaching investigators to think and to discriminate.

BRADY'S LAKE.

Beautiful Brady, with hills set round,
A picture in frame of verdure bound,
Ah, softly the wind sweeps o'er your face,
As sinks the sun to its resting-place.
Within your depths, as in mirror bright,
Gleam all the colors of sunset light.
The birds are singing their evening lay
Bidding farewell to the dying day.
A poem of beauty, peace and calm,
Which brings to the wounded spirit balm,
Soothes into rest the turbulent mind,
Awakes a pity for all mankind
To whom is denied this picture fair,
Away from the city's toil and care.
A sharp contrast to this peaceful scene
Is that of the long ago, I ween,
When Brady, the man, a settler bold,
(A story that's true and often told),
Ran for miles over hill and through dale,
With Indians fast upon his trail,
To brink of the river, high and steep,
(A place that is now called Brady's leap),
No time to look for a place to ford
If he would escape the savage horde;
Across his path it lay deep and wide,
A bound, and he reached the other side.
The Indians stopped upon the brink,
And gave him a cheer, amazed to think
That anyone such a leap could take.
Then on he ran till he reached the lake.
His mother wit now stood him in hand
To help him escape the savage band,
The trail led plain to a log that lay
Out into the lake, and this, they say,
That ere the Indians found a place
Where they could ford and take up the race,
Brady arranged in this time of need,
To hide himself, and breathe through a reed,
So when the Indians reached the place,
On land or lake, not a single trace
Could they find, to tell which way he went.
Where he lay he heard them giving vent
To their opinions above his head,
And they decided he must be dead.
So at last they turned and went away,
But Brady lived for many a day.
His story is told by camp-fire's light,
On many a pleasant summer night,
As laughter and song, the echoes wake
From hill to hill around Brady's Lake.

United in Marriage.

Sunday, June 18, at the residence of Mrs. Hamilton Gill, 522 West Monroe street, Chicago, Mrs. Olive Croxton of Warsaw, Ind., and Charles J. Barnes of Chicago, were united in marriage by Rev. Dr. Thomas. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Snyder and Mr. and Mrs. Smith of Warsaw, Ind. Great things are expected from such a spiritual alliance, and we voice the congratulations of the many friends of that well-known medium, Charles J. Barnes, who has been an open door for the spirit world more than thirty years. Mrs. Barnes, who is also a Spiritualist and a good worker in the cause of truth, stands high in the esteem of residents of Warsaw, regardless of any creed or sect. All the friends spent an enjoyable time while here and have now returned home to their respective duties. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes will spend their honeymoon at their beautiful home in Warsaw, Ind.

CONDITIONS OF THE SPIRIT.

G. W. Kates and wife, of Philadelphia, have been serving the First Church of Spiritualists, on Boquet street, for some time, and yesterday held their concluding meetings. Mr. Kates gave an address at the morning service, upon "Conditions of the Spirit." He quoted as follows: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (I. Cor. 3:16). "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." (Prov. 16:32).

"The spirit is thus heralded to be the dominant part of man. This spirit force is thus, as a part of God-force, made to be the most important power of ourselves for proper relationship to our life. This spirit is now a part of our physical self—and we shall not wait for death to develop it, but should allow it to now be expressed with the fullness of its divine energy. As the temples of God, we should be ruled by the spirit of God.

"'The greatest duty of life is to properly rule one's self. Paul said: 'I know that in the flesh dwelleth no good thing.' Paul made a great mistake, for, in the flesh dwells the spirit—every atom thereof being an expression of spirit energy. Thus, if our flesh is impure so will our spirits be, and thus the spirit of God (good) be defiled. These defilements will not be sacrificially atoned for, but will become a great responsibility for us to purify. The results of sin are sure and the purification a task of ages in spirit life.

"'Theology has not been reasonable in making mankind only a person of body, bones and brains, powerful only to sin, and immortal only to be tormented eternally. Such theology debases God and degrades man. We sadly need a religion of the spirit, and a religoin of revelation. These we are now obtaining, and we realize the true conditions of the spirit here and hereafter. The spirit life is as natural and as material as this, only related to another dimension of space. The occupations in spirit life are as natural and important as here.

"The one great need there will be to find our true powers and cultivate them. Then how much better it is to unfold them as much as possible here, and leave less to compel us to undo over there. That life is a progressive one, as is the life on earth. They are each conditioned upon the spirit. This natural life in the spirit is what enthused the early Christians and made them brave to meet martyrdom, and the same has lately been demonstrated to exist with the Japanese, who have no fear of death.

"The resurrection is immediate and the spirit self is your dual self in exact similitude. 'If there is no resurrection of the dead then is Christ not risen.' (I Cor., 15:13).

"Paul realized that Jesus could not repress an unnatural law. Mankind must have been and must be resurrected or Jesus could not have been. His supreme mission of life was to demonstrate that resurrection; but it has been held that He was the first resurrected, and without him could not have been this rising from the dead.

"No wonder Paul said: 'If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.' (I Cor., 15:19). No, we need to have the facts of resurrection demonstrated by every possible spirit. With the record of only Jesus being arisen and reappearing, the people of earth have grown materialistic. Now with this being demonstrated by hosts of our loved ones, mankind is growing to be spiritualistic. This is restoring and demonstrating the true Christ, and is unfolding our ability to demonstrate that the Spirit of God dwelleth in us, and causes us to rule our spirits and not be defiled by the lusts of the flesh."—Pittsburg Leader.

PRODIGALS.

Open the door to the prodigal son
Weary of husks and the keeping of swine.
Cast from your hearts all the ill he has done,
Meet him with festival, music and wine.
Strip from his form all his rags of disgrace,
Lave in pure water his travel-stained feet;
Bear him with honor and joy to his place,
Cleansed from the soil of his manhood's defeat.

Bend to him; pour him and praise him the cup,
Set a rich crown on the sin-abased head!
Swift from the dust raise his purity up.
Is he not living, our son who was dead?
Draw down the curtains and shut out the night—
There was a wild face looked in thro' the pane—
Haggard and famished, world-troubled and white,
Pinched by the north wind and drenched with the rain.

Sound the loud music, let laughter be heard,
Fill high the cup and let none pause to hark—
Only an echo—a sob or a word
From that wan woman shut out in the dark!
Who? Hush! be silent. What matters the rest?
Would you dare claim her, your daughter or mine?
Were she the infant that slept on our breast
Leave her unsaved—with the husks and the swine.

LET HOPE PREVAIL.

There is never a time of grim despair
But faith will at last prevail,
There is never a day that is full of care
But trust will uplift the veil.

There is never a burden that weigheth sore
But laughter will make it light,
There is never a sky all clouded o'er
But a smile will make it bright.

There is never a night that is full of fear
But hope will make it calm,
There is never a life that is dark and drear
But love will bring it a balm.

A Tale of Cosmic Multiplication.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

I have rarely been so interested—almost thrilled—by a thought new to me, as by an article in the North American Review for May, by Sir Oliver Lodge, the well-known English scientist. The article is headed "What is Life?" but the title is a clear misnomer, almost a joke, for he makes no pretense at an answer to his own query. The reader will know no more about "life" after he finishes the article than he did before. But, all the same, the article rings with a truth for me that has evidently been one of Nature's dearest secrets in her wondrous creative processes. Sir Oliver might appropriately have headed his article "A Tale of Cosmic Multiplication," but as that did not occur to him I will pre-empt it for my present use. Of course the learned ex-president of the Society for Psychical Research is not responsible for anything more than the text for this sermon, but for that text he should receive the thanks of every student of Nature.

Every school-boy of the eighth grade knows that matter—which is Nature's fig leaf to hide her nakedness—is composed of molecules. And a molecule is in its turn, a friendly gathering of certain units that have a liking for each other. The learned scientist may know all about units and atoms, but the rest of us mingle only with molecules as we walk through life. And everything we know, and even think, is just a gathering and blending of these molecules. And at this point we face the great truth I find in my text. When units enter into married life and become one molecule they don't settle down into a silly young couple that thinks all the world of itself, and almost nothing of its neighbors, but, on the contrary, they are anxious to make friends with as many as possible willing to row hard and pull together in the same direction.

The school-boy knows that Nature has some very singular methods of manufacturing the various articles she produces in her factories. For instance, here is a unit of hydrogen posing as a most worthy and respectable cosmic citizen, and admired by all her acquaintances. Her next door neighbor is an estimable unit of oxygen. They make eyes at each other, but nothing comes of it, and nothing would come of it through all eternity except when a second hydrogen damsel begins to flirt with the same young oxygen. The result is not exactly bigamy or mormonism, for all three of them immediately disappear, and nothing is left but a drop of water, though the scientist can coax them apart again if he so choose.

This, so far, is but the old and well-known truth of the composition of matter by the blending of units in different proportions into molecules. But after this blending there is something left which did not blend, and this is the tale which the learned professor has to tell us, and which I am now taking for my text. We know that the atom of hydrogen had within itself, all ready for use, the power to blend with an atom of oxygen, just as the atom of oxygen had the power to blend with two atoms of hydrogen. The point we had not noticed, and which the professor now points out, is that there is a further power possessed by those atoms after they had seemed, and been believed to be entirely satisfied with their union.

That water molecule has the power to tear apart atoms which have blended into other forms, for instance, as sugar, salt, and everything else which can be dissolved by its action. In other words, as you added molecules to each other, forming what the scientist calls "Mass," you were discovering or uncovering a power entirely latent in the atom though active in the molecule. The mere increase in the size of your "Mass" thus evolves powers that are of tremendous import in the process of creation. This addition and multiplication of the atoms—this celestial arithmetic— unlocks one of the greatest mysteries of life itself, as we shall presently see, although it by no means tells us what life is.

Now instead of talking about hydrogen, oxygen and so forth, let us keep in mind that back of the blended molecule is the great fact that intelligence, energy and substance are always present, inhering in every unit, but exhibiting themselves in proportion to Mass. For instance, every blending, whether of liquid, solid or gas, contains all three and their manifestation will depend not only on the first attraction of atoms to each other, but will differ as more and more molecules aggregate into a larger and larger Mass. We don't even perceive in the first mating of atoms the separation into solids, liquids and gases. There must be a great collection of those units and atoms before even our most sensitive instruments can tell us of any change that is taking place. To illustrate, here is a ball of matter we can handle. It is composed of atoms and molecules we call "lodestone." Those most compressed we call solid. Those least so we recognize as exhibiting attractive force, and actually whirling round that solid core, and out into space. These finer particles would constitute what we call an atmosphere, but the Mass of that ball cannot hold them from rushing right out and away from the center. Here is where we first discern the importance of Mass. Add more and more of that so-called solid matter and we have at last bodies large enough to fly through space with orbits of their own. We notice that meteorites and asteroids are such bodies, but we soon perceive their limitations. None of them has enough Mass to hold these finer particles as an atmosphere for its own use, and consequently its intelligence, substance and energy could not manifest as life, for life can only appear amidst the less solid particles of Mass which we call atmosphere. Retain them and you might possibly have life, but to retain them you must have the attraction of gravitation which depends upon Mass. And there is not enough of Mass in meteors and asteroids to permit and hold any such family gathering of intelligent forms.

Even our earth had a narrow escape, as its hydrogen atoms are constantly breaking the shackles of gravitation, and traveling out into space. So the first great truth we find embedded in Mass is that a vast collection of molecules must assemble before any manifestation of what we call "life" could take place. Of course other conditions than mere Mass may be necessary, for we know that life such as ours would still be impossible on some planets with more Mass than our little earth. But, all the same, the mere accumulation of Mass renders what we call "life" a possibility, and without that quantity of matter there will be no expression of intelligence such as we know and manifest.

So much seems reasonable and clear, based on a natural fact. It is the next step which the writer would present as a new thought. The effect of Mass doesn't cease with the production of "life." If the Mass be increased till it would make a million of our earths, then there are new conditions that must and will produce new effects, for Mass has been added to Mass until the collective molecular energy seems transformed into a radio-activity so vast that a whirl in the ether is created which outreaches the furthermost planet. There, for the first time, the scientist discovers energy at work without exhaustion, which is an impossibility in any less accumulation of Mass. Watch the mere vibrations of that molecular Mass, note their vast range, and you presently discover not only the heat, light, electricity, etc., which we now register and use, but the student now perceives that Life itself is but a product of sufficient Mass UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS, in other words, that it is just an effect, like all the rest.

Intelligence and energy act upon and through substance in proportion to Mass. There is the Mass vibration we call "zero," because it is our limit of perception in that direction. In the other direction we have radio-activity which destroys even when we attempt to study it. Both alike are effects of Mass. It becomes only a question of a sufficient aggregation of molecules, and any effect possible between zero and the fearful output of radium might be marked on Nature's thermometer. Somewhere between those limits, at a point we score as, say, but ten degrees on that thermometer, "life" appears, just as heat, electricity, magnetism, and every other effect of Mass movement appears when its points in vibration are reached.

Science has long noted that certain very unexpected effects appear in Mass as you increase or lower its vibration Ice, water, steam, gas are a mere matter of changes of vibration of the same. Mass.

And the particular vibration at which the change takes place is called "a critical point" by the scientist. And I am now urging as an idea that I believe is new to the world, that life itself is also an effect reached at a certain definite "critical point."

If we choose to speak of the appearance and action of intelligence from molecule to Mass, from crystal to cell, as "life," we may outreach humanity by a few degrees, more or less, but at each stage there will be these wonderful "critical points" to mark these changes outwrought by the mere vibration of sufficient Mass. Given intelligence, energy and substance, their manifestation will be in proportion to vibration, and the vibratory movement will be in proportion to Mass.

We now can begin to realize what Nature is evolving in her planetary systems. We see that the mere energetic movement of the particles of any sized aggregation of molecules produces or evolves certain effects that no man, without experience would deem possible. That is a natural fact to be ever remembered. A still more important fact is that as the size of the lump of molecules increases—as its Mass becomes greater—very different manifestations become possible, so that the mere size of the Mass is really of vast importance.

The work done by our sun would be impossible without his Mass. And, of course, other suns a million times larger may be, perhaps must be evolving effects as much greater than that of radium as radio-activity outspeeds the vibration of a piece of burning coal. Necessarily the mortal is limited in his conceptions by his sense limits. Thus the power of Mass may evolve vibrations almost infinitely beyond those of electricity and radium, but we have no words—not even thoughts—by which to express such powers, save as we may, perhaps, think of our own known forces as still manifesting, but in higher octaves. The greater Mass will surely evolve a greater electricity. And if my claim that "life" is also only an effect of sufficient Mass at a certain rate of vibration be acknowledged as a natural fact, then it follows that the higher conditions produced by greater aggregation of Mass will and must evolve something vastly superior to what we know as "life."

We acknowledge that consciousness is an effect of "life" which ultimately exhibits in humanity as self-consciousness. Just for a moment we pause here to recall the fact that increase of Mass does not exhibit its changes as ounce by ounce, and ton by ton the aggregation increases, otherwise the elephant having more Mass should be far more intelligent than the ant. Nature advances by critical points at which she suddenly exhibits the change she has been preparing as she added Mass to Mass.

We have but so far touched the fringe of the mighty thought that lies embedded in Mass. For Mass is all there is. It is the blended expression of intelligence, energy and substance, and is really the finite expression of infinity. When we talk of "life" being evolved as one of its steps, just as electricity and radium are manifested by energy, we are insulting no Godhead. For these wondrous changes are the great nameless Creative principle and power working in its own way, which becomes manifest to mortal sense in Mass, and in no other manner.

The scientist with the mighty brow recognizes his own limitations. He has neither sense nor tool that can give him facts outside the Mass he would fain study. So he lays him down on his couch, with a rug over him to keep him from catching cold, and proceeds to dream. He dreams of the nameless "all in all." In his dream he calls it "ether," and endows it with the potentiality of everything of which he has ever thought, including himself. But as "ether" it is beyond even dream analysis. He knows it must contain intelligence, energy and substance in potentiality, but he cannot even dream them into his own possibilities. But somehow his dream flashes at a "critical point" and he finds himself watching units—specks, if you please—darting hither and thither amidst that ether. That unit he recognizes as substance, proclaiming its own intelligence and exhibiting its own energy. He perceives that no two units are alike, any yet, as he dreams, he sees each one seeking a mate, and thereby he discerns the eternal law that progress depends upon one becoming two. That critical point has evolved the one, intelligence and all, and by its intelligence it perceives its own need. That critical point was CREATION, and all that followed was evolution. But the dreamer dreams some more and presently discerns, or thinks he discerns that the unit mated into two is still unsatisfied. The two become a dozen, a thousand, a million, and the dreamer calls them an atom, and notes they are yet unhappy. But this unhappiness does not mean they are needing something new. It only means they have potentialities and powers yet unsatisfied. This unsatisfied crowd the dreamer calls an "element," by which he means he can't imagine what that crowd is going to do next.

His dream is really becoming interesting, and if his wife will let him alone for another hour or two that dreamer fancies he may find out something.

But on this occasion the planets smile and he goes on dreaming. And presently he sees, or thinks he sees a lot of these element crowds associating with another crowd that is not so select. In a word, the gathering seems to him in his dream like a little of everything, and to grow larger and larger, till he calls it a Mass. And the bigger it grows the more plainly he sees that every individual molecule, whether of element or otherwise, is full of powers that are unexpressed, and cannot be expressed until the Mass has grown a great deal bigger.

So he dreams on and watches. And in one spot where there are a whole lot of units tightly squeezed together he sees, like a flash, a crystal make its appearance. It was the child of a "critical point" for he could not detect any preparation. It just came when there was enough Mass for intelligence to show itself more clearly. So the crystal became the then highest expression of intelligence possible in that Mass.

As he watched it seemed to him as if every unit had two hands, a right hand and a left hand, which in his dream he called positive and negative, and as the Mass spun faster and faster the swinging of these hands in the tricity and magnetism, or sometimes scintillating as light and heat or gravitative attraction. But as he dreamed on he felt sure they were all original properties of the unit, and the ether back of the unit, and that it was the growing size of the Mass that permitted this unit play to be perceived by his sense.

He saw the Mass keep growing larger and larger, as units kept coming from the ether, till he noticed, in his dream, that in the greater whirl many of the molecules pressed less closely on the center. So he dreamed that they surrounded the Mass most compressed and became its atmosphere. Continuing to look, in his vision he saw the intelligence in the Mass now expressing itself as mineral at the core, but becoming liquid, and even yet more free as atmosphere, but still Mass to its outmost "gases," as he called those dancing units.

Now another "critical point" was passed, for he saw a new effect when the Mass began to push out from within, a new expression of the unit's inherent power which could not peep out before. And he dreamed that it was "protoplasm," and he called it "cell life." And because the Mass was now large enough to permit the unit to so far satisfy its longings that cell multiplied, and the collected units, spinning round in the ether, became a world. In his dream he saw that vegetable life and animal life had now appeared on the outside of this last "critical point," although they had been latent in the unit from its beginning, and in the ether from which that unit had emerged.

The dreamer still dreamed on, for it seemed to him that his vision was giving him the key to many a mystery, at least in his dreams. He could see intelligence, with vast energy, pushing this manifestation of "life" out through substance and into "consciousness," and at each step nothing seemed lost, but everything gained. The electricity flashed into light and heat as before, for the unit was continuing its eternal dance, and the waving of its two hands. But now there was added a "consciousness" that grew and grew, affecting substance in its form and its powers by a process which the dreamer called "evolution."

It was here he learned the wonderful lesson of "critical points" which meant something new and unexpected peeping out whenever there was a Mass of sufficient size. He had watched in his dream the unit mating with unit, and yet always a potency left unsatisfied; that is to say, the new partnership, whether exhibiting itself at certain critical points as solid, liquid or gas, was always ready for yet another step onward. And nothing more seemed required to that end, at least in his dream, but a sufficient accumulation of Mass. As he continued to watch he saw that wherever units gathered and blended into Mass there was always "form," and intelligence using that form to its own end. Then he perceived that the more solid the matter the less manifestation of intelligence seemed present. And then the dreamer who had discovered that at one "critical point" life had appeared, and at another consciousness, now perceived that in his own form intelligence had gained another step and become "self-consciousness," which was watching and studying the powers of its own selfhood.

But the dreamer grew very impatient, for the tools which he dreamed he had evolved and called his "five senses," were clumsy and imperfect. But once again he discovered it was a question of Mass. The core of the Mass was too solid for his "self-consciousness" to work in and use. When it became liquid, conditions were a little better, though little but monsters were able to be evolved by intelligence. A step forward and he saw the Mass become gaseous, which he called "atmosphere," in which intelligence evolved the form of manhood, and first gained its "self-consciousness."

The dreamer was now struggling for a yet greater manifestation of his intelligence. He wanted to see more, and hear more, and think more, for the eternal unit was yet unsatisfied. It still had powers it had not been able to manifest. It needed more Mass, but the trouble for the dreamer was that the Mass was becoming vaster than he could grasp, even in his dream.

He presently discerned that where his five senses found their limit was another "critical point." There was Mass, plenty of it, more of it than ever before, but its units and molecules were still further from the solid. So he dreamed that beyond this last "critical point" was still "form," for self-consciousness cannot manifest without "form," but it was not the old form with its five senses. It was from a different part of the Mass, and therefore with new senses, and a higher "self-consciousness."

In his dream he saw that the old form and the new had faint possibilities of touching each other at just a few points. He perceived that where the old form was slightly sensitive to the new in a manner the old sense could not express, the mortal called it clairvoyance and intuition, because not one of his five senses could tell the tale.

It was now the dreamer thought he saw that this last step past a "critical point" left the Ego with two form personalities, one on one side the point and one on the other, both existing at the same time, and having occasionally some faint connection. Still when the mortal form could not maintain itself any longer they called it "dead." It soon dropped apart, and then the Ego lived altogether in his new form.

Watching while both forms were in existence the dreamer saw, or thought he saw that while living in two forms might be progress it was not happiness, for each was cumbered and confused by the other. So he perceived that when Ego was released by the dropping to pieces of the old form he presently encountered more "critical points." But at each step it was always a question of Mass, for the more Mass the greater the power.

It was now the dreamer noticed that by this last accumulation of Mass electricity and light and heat seemed to change their nature, while new forces, for which he had no name, were manifesting around him. And with these new forces burst out new life, taking new form for the indwelling Ego. The dreamer was here obliged to cry "enough," for he could bear no more. But at every step, as he looked back, he saw it had been always a result of Mass growing larger and larger, for even the humble unit had contained within itself vast potentialities and powers that only needed association with its fellows to enable him to become manifest and active.

The dreamer confesses to himself that he can conceive of no limit—no "critical point"—beyond which lies exhausted power, for every unit is itself but a manifestation of infinity.

When the dreamer woke he had learned the lesson that Creation is an impossibility, and even theologically unnecessary, for the great UNKNOWABLE is absolutely complete. His every manifestation is through Mass, whereby intelligence can alone exhibit its mighty power. And this is the Tale of the Cosmic Multiplication Table.

CHARLES DAWBARN.

Home Again.

Dr. Peebles, Returning From His Lecture Tour Through England, Scotland and Wales, Is Interviewed.

Question.—How long were you absent, and where did you spend most of your time?

Answer.—I was absent about three months, enjoying the ocean passages exceedingly. I am never seasick. It is the ocean that rages and rolls at times, but not my stomach. Seasickness, like most other sickness, is a bad habit.

I spent most of my time in London, and though smoky and foggy, it is pronounced healthy, and is a world of itself. Samples of every nationality, race or tribe may be found in this city of cities. When not off in Scotland, Manchester or Wales lecturing, I was daily in the literary department of the British Museum. Accompanied by a professor and an employe of the museum, richly did I enjoy his reading from the clay cylinders, the boundary stones, the inscriptions on the door-stones of Nebuchadnezzar II., king of Babylon; the lucid writings on the Tell El-Amarna tablets; the records of the defeat of Merodach Baladan in his invasion of Palestine and siege of Jerusalem; the Assyrian tablets giving an account of the creation, and the flood, etc. That the writer of biblical Genesis borrowed extensively or thieved openly from Babylonian history, there is not the remotest doubt.

Q.—Did you do much lecturing in these countries?

A.—Every Sunday I was upon the platform lecturing once or twice, and a portion of the time two or three evenings during the week. I went over the Atlantic waters to rest, and remained to work. It should be remembered that I first crossed to England in 1868. J. J. Morse, uneducated in the schools, was then just developing into trance mediumship. He is now a noted writer, lecturer and editor. During the winter I delivered the first course of Sunday evening lectures upon Spiritualism ever given in that country. There was no organized society of Spiritualists then in London. Now there are over twenty holding regular meetings.

Q.—How about the Spiritualist literature of these countries?

A. They write and publish much each year, yet I noticed no very large recent volumes. Neither Scotland, Wales nor Ireland prints a Spiritualist Journal, but England publishes three: Light, London; The Two Worlds, Manchester, and The Spiritualist, Bradford. I am unable to say how liberally they are supported.

The progressive lyceum work is far in advance of what it is in America. There is more enthusiasm. Never did I witness such order, system, drilling, marching and chain-variations during calisthenic exercises as I saw in Glasgow, Scotland. Those who got up their lyceum and service were honorable and broad-minded enough to make extracts from our best writers, giving them due credit The children of the lyceum connected with the Birmingham Ethical and Psychical Society, have an elegant decorated card entitled "The Four-fold Pledge." Children and youths connected with this lyceum pledge themselves to "abstain from all intoxicating drinks, from using tobacco, from all forms of gambling and from all profane language." The pledge is splendid. May it be practiced to the letter.

Q.—Is there as much fraud under the name of spirit mediumship in those countries as in ours?

A. This is an inquiry that I am not competent to answer. That there have been and are vile, shameful, wicked frauds practiced among us in the name of spirit mediumship, no honest, well-informed man will dispute, for these villains have been caught with their phosphorized muslin toggery on their persons, and some of their wigs are still held as trophies of their frauds. What can be more daring, more terrible than trickery in the name of immortality? Spiritualists are learning, through deep tribulation, that it is indispensable to know something of the moral standing and character of mediums, especially of traveling tramp mediums, before trusting to the genuineness of their manifestations. It is often difficult to draw the line of demarkation tween the genuine, with their good and pure influences, and the fraudulent, influenced by some clown or tricky lifelong legerdemain actor while in the flesh—now a spirit. These obsessing demon-like spirits often take on great flaming names, prophesying and promising much, yet doing little unless to deceive.

It gave me great pleasure to meet Walter Howell at Manchester, and again at Sheffield. He has been for several years the regular speaker at Birmingham Society, and it has greatly prospered under his ministrations. Mr. Lucas, a solid, clear-headed and ethical thinker, is the main financial support of this society. The lectures of Mr. Howell in San Francisco and other parts of our country a number of years ago will be remembered only as having been clear in expression and rich in philosophy. Mrs. Howell is a native of this country. Come home, my children!

Q.—How does the Spiritualism of England compare with movement in this country?

A.—Though comparisons are considered "odious," I venture to say that it ranges along a higher vibration. It has more of a religious trend, and so societies are more substantial and permanent. Old hives do not send out new swarms so often. Frequently with us in our cities if a man gets a psychic spasm, or a woman feels a chill down her spine, they leave the older society and start up a new one. This affords a field for leadership. Hades is doubtless crammed with would-be leaders. If such cannot occupy the highest seats in the synagogue, and so rule, they will often seek to ruin. Though this may be "speaking out loud in meeting," I must use my "gift" in this direction in order to have it increased a hundredfold.

The orthodox world is not thinking or talking so much just now about the phenomena of Spiritualism. These are quite generally admitted by the intelligent to be true; but they are watching and waiting to see what effect this professed angel-converse and these spirit-messages have had and are having upon the lives of Spiritualists. They never tire of tossing at us the text, "By their fruits shall ye know them." Really, are we any more conscientious, more benevolent, more truthful, more temperate, more charitable, more prompt to pay our honest debts, more forgiving, more trusting, more fraternal in spirit, and more sweet and tender in social life than our orthodox neighbor? Upon the whole, I think perhaps we are, but possibly I am too prejudiced in favor of Spiritualism to be a competent judge.

Q.—I see that a writer in the Banner of Light charges you with "hedging," or modifying your views upon obsession. Is this correct?

A.—"Hedging" is not one of my accomplishments. Every sentence in that book upon the "Demonism of the Ages or Spirit Obsessions" that came from my brain and pen, I strenuously stand by, and the unjust effort made in certain quarters to hold me responsible for what others wrote for the book, is as unmanly and unwomanly as it is unspiritual.

I am just in receipt of the Harbinger of Light from Australia, and I see by this issue that the able editor, W. H. Terry, takes precisely the same view of the fact of obsessions by undeveloped or evil spirits, that is taken by nineteen-twentieths of Spiritualists who have given this subject thought and a thorough investigation. These are some of his verbatim words: "The spirits who hover about the earth plane are not the elite of the spirit world, but those seeking to participate in the sensuous pleasures of their earth-lives by associations with those of like disposition; and when they have, through the acquiescence of the sensitive, obtained control, they are often difficult to get rid of. "Commercial spirits," or those on the lower planes, may be clever and faithful to their mediums, so much so that when the conditions are unfavorable to produce legitimate phenomena, these spirits will co-operate and help substitute bogus ones."

And here is a hint from an old-time editorial Spiritualist, that when brought out more fully before Spiritualists may induce them to understand that there may be bogus spirits and fraudulent-inducing spirits as well as fraudulent mediums. This class of spirits were very wisely named by Andrew Jackson Davis—"Diakka."

While in Boston a very cordial reception was tendered me at the residence of Mrs. Soule, message-bearer for the Banner of Light, under the auspices of Mr. Irving F. Symonds and Mr. J. J. Morse. Among those present were the poet, Rev. Wm. Brunton, Dr. G. Lester Lane and other prominent Spiritualists. Miss Morse sang charmingly. Mr. Morse's address was a model. The culinary refreshments were most inviting.

I also had the pleasure of personally meeting the illustrious seer, A. J. Davis, M. D., while in the city, in company with Dr. Lane.

I leave tomorrow morning for Sturgis, Michigan, to attend the 47th anniversary of the erection of the Spiritualist Church-edifice in this beautiful prairie city.

Q.—"What of Wales?"

A.—In Merthyr Tydvil, Wales, I came in contact with some of the Welch revivalists, and stopping for the night with friend Davis just across the way from one of their chapels, their singing, praying, screaming, and agonizing kept me awake until twelve o'clock at night. The favorite motto of Emma Hardinge Britten, was, "God understands." God may have understood these Welch prayers and they may have gratified Him, but they were a pest and a torment to me.

On Sunday I lectured twice to a Welch society of Spiritualists. They sang in Welch.

While over the water I visited that distinguished scientist and naturalist, Alfred R. Wallace. While in his library, I felt every precious moment that it was good to be there. His hospitable home, including his good wife, the scenery, the shrubbery and flowers, many of them from oriental lands, were all entrancingly beautiful. Dr. Wallace's firm stand for Spiritualism, and his moral bravery in the diffusion of it, have endeared him to millions upon millions of English-speaking and Latin people. Upon the whole, though my labors were extremely arduous, I richly enjoyed this visit to England, meeting as I did, with the anti-vaccination club, with the anti-vivisection club, and lecturing before the Psycho-Therapeutic Society as well as one of the Vegetarian societies.

Heartily thanking the Spiritualists and liberalists of these far-away countries for the receptions given me, and the personal kindnesses received, I left with the promise of returning again within two or three years.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, therefore it is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

On the Fourth of July, the Illinois Ladies Sunflower Club will hold a basket picnic on the grounds of the Minnetonka Cottage, at Lake Bluff, Ill. A number of Chicago's most prominent mediums will give spirit messages between 2 and 4 p. m. Bring your lunch. Coffee, lemonade and ice cream served. Come and have a good time. Committee: Mrs. Isa Cross, president, 540 E. 55th street; Mrs. O. B. Wilson, vice-president, 2 E. 47th street; Mrs. Ella Bloom, corresponding secretary, 892 S. Turner avenue; Mrs. Frances Koehler, treasurer, 222 Irving avenue; Mrs. Belle Curtis, financial secretary, 615 Otto street.

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "Religious faith is finding its true foundations in the recognition of man as a spiritual being, a being who has had dominion over nature given to him as the child of a vaster spiritual being, the lord of all life. The one belief absolutely essential to ethics—immortality—is coming within the ken of a scientific demonstration. This is the potency and promise of psychic research."

What is science but the revelation of a new world different from the visible one? When we see light and colors, they tell us of an invisible ether with particles vibrating with almost incalculable rapidity; when we hear faint or loud sounds, sharp or grave, they tell of the more or less ample and rapid vibrations of matter.

Mrs. May A. Price expects to be at Lily Dale Camp, New York, from July 14 to the close of the season's work there. She will be glad to arrange for work with other societies during the fall and winter. Address her at 423 First street, N. E., Washington, D. C., or at Lily Dale, during the season of work there.

Henry Melder writes: "Another year has passed, and I have been permitted to read the dear Progressive Thinker, and I hope I shall be able to do so the rest of my days. I am now 75 years of age, and what progress the paper has made since I first became a member of its many readers. You are doing a great work in driving out the fakes. You ought to have one million subscribers."

Light, of London, speaks of the work of Dr. Peebles while in England: "Dr. Peebles had a series of crowded and enthusiastic meetings during his trip to the north. At Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield and Leeds he was warmly welcomed and listened to with sympathetic appreciation. The Sheffield Daily Independent, May 18th, gave a good report of his address at the Attercliffe Vestry Hall on the 17th inst., from which the following extract will be of interest to readers of Light. 'Spiritualism,' he said, 'demonstrated the fact of a future conscious life. It gave the people knowledge for faith; it brushed away the mourner's tears; it taught mankind to live righteous, godly, and spiritual lives here on earth, and prepared them for the heavenly life to come. Every objection brought against modern spiritual manifestations might be brought against the ancient manifestations recorded in the bible. There was nothing so uplifting to the human soul, said Dr. Peebles, as the great truth that ministering angels were always about impressing and inspiring, and seeking to induce men to lead higher and holier lives.'"

W. F. Schumacher writes: "The West Side German Spiritualist Society held its annual picnic at Reissig's Grove in Riverside, June 18. A very elaborate programme had been provided, Sister Gartelman, Sister M. Schumacher and Brother Koeller, M. D., being the speakers. Wm. Lynn, with many other mediums, gave communications. Circles were held on the grounds. While 500 or more in attendance were treated to a feast of spiritual food the physical body was not forgotten. When the natural wants of man were satisfied, we were ready for the glories of the camp fire, which was celebrated in honor of the Indians. Camp broke about nine o'clock, and everybody repaired to their homes. Remember the picnic of the Rising Sun Mission, on July 1, at the same grove. All are welcome."

J. W. Ring, a prominent leader in the ranks of Spiritualism, is now in California. He will lecture at the camp-meeting near Los Angeles.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Isabella Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union will close its meetings the last Sunday in June. Do not forget the picnic to be held at Jackson Park, north of the German Building, July 4. Everybody cordially invited. We heartily thank those who have attended the meeting, and hope to see the interest renewed in September."

J. W. Buchanan of Dallas, Texas, thinks that section of the state a most excellent locality for a good, honest test medium to labor in.

D. G. Hill writes: "At the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society's meetings on Sunday, June 18, the afternoon was given to short talks by Jas E. Coe and Mrs. Nora E. Hill, with messages from the latter, and for the evening the speaker, Dr. J. H. Randall, was at his very best and delivered a masterly lecture on Spiritualism. He was followed by Dr. MacFarland with short talk that was much enjoyed, with messages by Mrs. Kittie Gifford. Our choir, with music and songs assisted in making the services most enjoyable. Our speaker for Sunday evening, July 2, will be Mrs. Nora E. Hill. This date will be the first of our series of summer meetings, with open door; all welcome. The entertainment given by this society on Saturday evening, June 17, was most satisfactory in every way. This society will hold a grove meeting and basket picnic in John A. Robb's grove, Lyons, Ill., on the bank of river near the junction of Ogden avenue and Joliet street car lines, the terminal of Ogden avenue line, on Sunday, July 9, 1905. Come with your lunch and enjoy a pleasant outing. Admission to grove 10 cents."

The feeblest form of religious emotion is that "good" feeling which certain supersensitive natures, chiefly among women, feel in a cathedral. "Subdued light, and magnificent architecture, and devotional music appeal to their feelings in some transient fashion; but they return to ordinary worldliness as they step out into the air. The 'cases' of the revivalist differ from these in the greater force of the original motion, and in the extent to which it is maintained by surrounding circumstances and restrained from immediate escape in action. The subjects of it do not step out into the air; and the force which has been excited obtains no immediate channel of operation, but is restrained until it produces an explosion."—Truth Seeker.

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "Jesus said: 'My words are spirit and they are life.' I am a Spiritualist, and Jesus of Nazareth is the medium through whom I receive the greatest spiritual light. For me, He has brought life and immortality to life. I regard the better element among Spiritualists as the best exponents of His gospel that we have in the world to-day. I am sorry that Spiritualists (some of them) have imitated other sects and established a theological school and priesthood. I regard priestcraft, kingcraft and moneycraft as belonging to a very low order of Spiritualism, indeed, as antagonistic in a measure to sincere spirituality."

Oscar A. Edgerly's engagements as made for the coming year are as follows: The last two Sundays of June at Hampden, Maine; July and August at Grand Ledge, Mich.; September still open; in October will visit Minneapolis, Minn., and attend the N. S. A. convention; November and December are still open for engagement, January, 1906, is engaged with the First Spiritualist Church of Pittsburg, Pa.; during February he will serve the First Association of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C.; March and April are engaged by the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md.; the first two Sunday of May he is engaged with the Spiritualist society of Worcester, Mass.; first Sunday of June he is engaged with the society of Providence, R. I. Mr. Edgerly will be pleased to hear from societies which have open dates in September, October, November and December, 1905, and in the last part of May and June, 1906. Permanent address, 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

E. Fries writes from Galveston, Tex.: "Our much beloved lecturer and teacher, John W. Ring, who has been with us continually for nearly nine years, will leave us next Monday, June 19, for a short vacation; he will be a month at theLos Angeles Park Camp-meeting; from there he will go through Colorado and lecture at different places, and then go to the Clinton camp and lecture there. We hope that the change of atmosphere, change of scenery and change faces will have a beneficial effect on his health, so that he will come back so recuperated that he can take up his work here again with pleasure. The Spiritualists of Galveston will miss Mr. Ring very keenly, but their love and good thoughts will follow him wherever he goes until he returns to them and his old home."

J. L. Cameron writes from Salt Lake City, Utah: "After looking over the greatest of spiritual papers, The Progressive Thinker, which arrived at my home to-day, I feel strongly impressed to say a word or two about those great books, Rending the Vail and Beyond the Vail, both of which I ordered from you recently, and which I have carefully read. Many people at the present time, in my opinion, are straddle of the fence on this question—don't know which way to jump. If those books are true, and I can't see for the life of me how any candid reasoning being after reading them can come to any other conclusion, then materialization is a demonstrated fact. We have W. W. Aber, and may the angels bless and protect him, the instrument through which those great books were given to the world. Here, then, we have one at least who is honest, and I would say to every one who is interested in the great questions of life and immortality, get those books. In conclusion, Brother Francis, never give up the fight on the frauds. I don't call them mediums; their place is, in darkest Africa, which if they don't get in this sphere, they certainly will in the next."

Under the heading "Interviews With the Dead," the Edinburgh Evening Dispatch, Scotland, devoted nearly a column to a report of what is call "a weird lecture," delivered by Mr. John Lobb, in Queen's Hall, Edinburgh, the previous evening. In the course of his address Mr. Lobb affirmed that some four hundred and thirty "dead" people had manifested their presence to him, including his old and revered friend, the Rev. Charles Spurgeon, also Cecil Rhodes and Dan Leno. The Dispatch says: "Mr. Lobb impressed on his audience the fact that these people were not dead. 'They want you to know that they are alive and keenly interested in your affairs. They are living in the enjoyment of all their powers, refined and invigorated.' There was hope for all, for 'on the other side' there were myriads of good spirits waiting to give light and point out errors. When he saw Lord Shaftsbury he saw 'the marks on his face.' It was a 'sad looking face,' but he was glad to see the speaker, His mother said to him: 'John, I am glad you have stopped preaching hell-fire.' Mr. Lobb explained that he used to preach some terrible sermons on that subject. He replied: 'Yes, Mother, you used to promise me it for breakfast, dinner and supper.' (Laughter.) He was glad she she had come, and she said she had not seen the hell-fire she used to tell about. With Dr. Talmage he discussed a sermon the doctor had preached, and said he wanted to ask him about 'that blessed sermon' against Spiritualism. The doctor confessed that if he were on earth now he would not preach it. Since he became a Spiritualist, Mr. Lobb continued, he knew the bible, 'that blessed old book' better than ever before; it was full of Spiritualism. In conclusion, Mr. Lobb expressed the deep conviction that there was a 'blessed immortality in store.'"

Dr. Beverly writes, speaking favorably of the work of Prof. Hillis and Mrs. Dixon, who has developed a new phase. She turns her back to the audience and gives each one a short reading from the sound of their voice. Her daughter, the child medium, gives remarkable tests. Visiting mediums are present every Sunday and every visitor is promised a test. Every Sunday, public services from 3 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, 31st street and Indiana avenue. Dr. Beverly's address is 44 East 31st street.

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Church at 3514 Vincennes avenue, corner Cottage Grove avenue and 35th street, will not close this summer. Meetings will be held at 3 and 8 p. m. every Sunday; short lectures, tests and messages by Mrs. May Elmo. Mediums are invited to assist in the afternoon service. Mrs. Lora Holton has charge of music and choir. Our choir consists of fifteen girls and boys from 12 to 15 years old, and receive vocal lessons each week at the expense of the society. They are highly praised by the audience. This society will hold its last social of the season, Saturday evening July 8. All welcome."

W. D. Livingstone writes from Toronto, Canada: "We have at present serving our society, Mrs. J. A. Murtha, whom we consider to be one of the foremost, if not the very best, test mediums on the continent of America. There is no fake, no make-up with her. Her tests are honest and hit home every time. There is no half work about her. In fact, of all the many psychics who have served our society, we have had on very, very rare occasions her equal, but never her superior. She draws overflowing houses, and converts nightly scores of investigators and curiosity seekers. We do not state this to puff her, but as her just due, for 'honor to whom honor is due.' When writing this, it was not our intention to give her address, to avoid the appearance of this letter being an 'ad,' but we will give it in justice to her and societies, which, like ourselves, desire to engage fully attested first-class psychics, and in return for this service, we ask sister societies to give us the names and addresses of such psychics, whom they can as honestly endorse, as we do Mrs. J. A. Murtha, 24 Ann street, Toronto, Canada."

Maurgerite Mac writes: "On Thursday, June 23, at 3019 Vernon avenue, the residence of Mrs. Jeffery, her regular monthly social will take place. A good time is expected for all psychics and palmists being present to give spirit messages and readings. We expect a large crowd on that evening, as Violet, her little Indian, is making an extra effort to let everyone have a good time, and she always makes the coffee so we always have a good cup of coffee with other good things."

The religious atmosphere being full of the spirit of revival, the London Hospital takes occasion to allude to a few "plain duties of medical practitioners, to speak a word of warning in due season, and to point out the evil tendencies of emotional excitement, to whatever causes it may be attributable, or by whatever name it may be called. The 'religion' described by the apostle, 'to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world,' is of a type distinctly superior to that which is said to be 'got' at camp meetings and revivals."

Owing to a misunderstanding, we have one week open on our summer program, namely August 6 to 11 inclusive. Correspondence solicited with first-class speaker and descriptive medium; also would like to list one or two good phenomena mediums. Address H. R. LaGrange, secretary, Island Lake Camp Association, Brighton, Mich.

Mrs. Laura Smith Ellsworth is open for engagements as a platform speaker. She would like engagements in the middle western states. Societies desiring her services may address her at 1825 Curtis street, Denver, Colo. She is said to be an excellent test medium.

Frances A. Sheldon, pastor of the First Spiritual Society of Spokane, Wash., writes: "I have returned from my visit to Colorado where I went on account of my health, last April. I am again at work, and while not as strong as formerly yet with the help of the angel world, I am fast regaining my usual strength. We have decided to establish a table of literature believing that to be a stepping stone to a library. We would like to correspond with anyone who will be willing to allow us a commission for selling their books. Any donations will be thankfully received. Address me at Hotel Symons, or A. B. Leonard, 1820 Buckeye avenue, Spokane, Wash."

Correspondent writes: "St. George's Hall, 3337 State street, is just now a place of great interest, conducted by L. H. Freedman, M. D., the well-known Australian healer. He spoke on Ethical Spiritualism, and sang two very beautiful songs, 'The Choir Invisible,' and 'Just Send an Angel Down.' Miss Zazelle gave many messages, and all were well received. Mr. Ellis then gave a demonstration of independent telegraphic messages. People must come to the hall to see this in order to believe. The Doctor then followed, and asked for those who were sick to come forward. He then made extemporaneous diagnosis, never failing in one in-

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, July 2, 1905, S. E. 58: "Our Nation's Birthday Anniversary.

Gem of Thought:—

This glorious day we celebrate,
This fourth day of July;
For freedom and her vast estate,
Our growing needs supply.

Unfurl her standard to the air,
The red, the white, the blue,
The strong, the pure, the true, so fair,
With strength our lives imbue.

stant. Come and bring the sick with you Sunday evenings. Good music."

Prof. Lockwood is now located at Hotel Victoria, Buffalo, N. Y. There are many regrets expressed that he will not be at Lily Dale this year. In the past he has been one of its principal attractions. He has been engaged to lecture two months in Buffalo next year.

The New Era (Ore.) Camp-meeting.

To the Editor:—We are having every indication of one of the grandest camp-meetings on the New Era campgrounds during the month of July ever held by the association. Many letters are coming to me daily from speakers, mediums and seekers for truth, as well as old and tried Spiritualists, asking about the meeting, and its prospects, and they invariably finish with the declaration, "I am coming."

Certainly we have lovely grounds, good accommodations, splendid talent, lofty trees, pure water—everything that is needed to make a camp-meeting what it should be, will be found on the grounds, and surely the people will be there in great numbers.

Come everybody. We want you with us while the camp is in session, and will see to it that when the meeting is over you will say, "I'm glad I went to the Spiritualists camp-meeting at New Era, Oregon."

The report comes to me that I would ignore speakers and mediums from our sister state of California. This statement never was made by me, and I will as president of the Association extend to workers and people of California every courtesy I possibly can. We can offer no financial aid, having used up in securing our talent all the funds we had in sight, but the latch-string is out to all, with a hearty invitation to come and see us and enjoy the spiritual feast we are preparing for one and all during our coming camp-meeting.

I am in receipt of some articles of fancy work, and those who wish to send in their donation may address them to me at New Era, Clackamas county, Oregon, as wife and I will go to the grounds next week to arrange hotel, clean up the grounds and be ready for the people when the camp-meeting begins on the 8th day of July. Camp-meeting takes in Sunday July 30. Everybody come. REV. G. C. LOVE,
New Era Ore. President.

FROM THE ORIENT.

The Japanese Spirit as Vividly Portrayed by Y. Okakura.

We have already more than once referred to the real and practical nature of the Japanese belief in the survival of the dead. How strongly this belief animates the Japanese people is well shown by a book recently published by Messrs. Constable, entitled "The Japanese Spirit," by Y. Okakura, whose brother K. Okakura, has written a similarly enlightening book upon "The Ideals of the East." In spite of the prevalence and spread of Buddhism in Japan, the old Shinto religion still furnishes the groundwork of the national psychology, of the innate character and beliefs of the people. In "The Japanese Spirit" we are told that:

"When the father of a Japanese family begins a journey of any length, the raised part of his room will be made sacred to his memory during his temporary absence; his family will gather in front of it and think of him, expressing their devotion and love in words and gifts in kind * * * And if he dies on the field the mental attitude of the poor bereaved towards the never returning does not show any substantial difference. The temporarily departed will now be regarded as the forever departed, but not as lost or passed away. His essential self is ever present, only not visible. Daily offerings and salutations continue in exactly the same way as when he was absent for a time. Even in the mind of the modern Japanese, with its extremely agnostic tendencies, there is still one corner sacred to this inherited feeling. You could sooner convince an ordinary European of the non-existence of a personal God. When it gets dusk every bird knows whither to wing its way home. Even so with us all when the night of Death spreads its dark folds over our mortal mind."

This last simile is very beautiful, and characteristically Japanese. But where the Japanese are ahead of us is in their cult of the absent living as well as of the present dead. They seem to regard the absent one as being psychically in connection with his home and friends, and who shall say that this is not so? Indeed, persons absent from home have been known, during sleep, to attend seances held in their homes, and to carry out promises then given; an instance of this appears in Light for November 1, 1902, p. 526, and we would commend the cult of the absent living to the attention of home circles and sensitives. —Light, London, Eng.

WHO DARE DO MORE?

An Impromptu Note From Mrs. Virginie Barrett.

I am pleased to inform the friends that, with the permission of the City Board, I have been permitted to use a small part of Howard Park, public, for Sunday meetings at 3 p. m.

In this way I am able to reach the public and be sure of an audience this hot weather. So far I have distributed nearly 100 spiritual dodgers, and a great many copies of our spiritual journals.

This work is important, and will result in much good. We should all feel, as Spiritualists, that we have gained a victory in being allowed this privilege from our city officials. I feel that it is time we let down the fences that surround us, and meet success in the same manner other churches do.

Let every city and town continue the good work and interest in the open parks, if they can do so with respect and dignity.

I have named this meeting "The Flag Service," and indicated the place by a flag.

Who will follow me in this new move? No canvas over our heads but the blue sky. Every Sunday brings new faces. These meetings consist of singing, poems and Bible history, reading, invocation and discourse on our philosophy, and a collection from those around us.

Now, friends, let us have more "Flag Services." I am ready to lead, and open such meetings on reasonable terms.

Not being able to donate to the "Mediums' Fund," I make this offer: I will send free a copy of my song, "The Katydid," words in French and English, to those who will inform me of their donation to the N. S. A. Mediums' fund, or send it to me, together with two 1-cent stamps.

If dear friends, each tear that flows while I write, were gold, our darling workers would not want.

While my heart goes out to every one on the new list of pensioners, yet because of having seen and heard one—Lyman C. Howe—and Sister Belle Bush (whose beautiful poems I have often read to my audience, who responded in a wave of sympathy). Can I not be permitted (for the sake of these and others) to mail a song to every one who reads this? "Katydid" will sing to you in thanks for that act of goodness.

Do not forget to put your hands in your pockets for a dime! No! shall I say dollar, instead? My little song is free as the angels' breath. Who wants one?

This hot weather, dear friends, these old soldiers need ice and comfort, and who can eat ice cream and know that these are in want? Do not lose this chance of doing good.

One more request of the friends who love truth. I have placed in the city library of South Bend, Ind., two books, "Encyclopedia of Death," and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; one, "Religion of Man," by Hudson Tuttle, in the public library of Indianapolis, Ind. Now I can place a few more books here, and elsewhere, and if anyone desires to aid in this work, send me the books, and I will donate it in your name. Who will donate a yearly subscription to the Libray, of one or more of our spiritual journals. This city library is ready to accept one of these publications, though this is one of the very pretty, but church-ridden cities of Indiana. Come, do something! Please address me at No 333 W. Colfaxe avenue, South Bend, Ind. VIRGINIE BARRETT.

UNITY CAMP.

Meeting Held in the Interest of Organization.

The committee appointed at the union meeting held in Lynn, May 5, for the purpose of discussing plans for the better organization of the spiritual societies of Massachusetts, requested the different societies to send delegates to a meeting to be held at Unity camp, Sunday, June 8, a request which was very generally complied with. The meeting was held directly after the conclusion of the noon service, and a goodly number of delegates reported. The meeting was opened by Dr. Caird, chairman of the committee, who briefly stated the object of the meeting, after which remarks and suggestions were made by nearly all of the delegates, the sentiment being strongly in favor of some movement tending to bring the societies of this state into a better working union than at the present time.

On motion of Mr. Hall, seconded by Mr. Ham, a committee of five (with Dr. Alex. Caird, chairman), Mr. Ham of Lowell, Mr. Fuller of Newburyport, Mr. Hastings of Brockton and Mr. Hall of Brighton, was selected to discuss plans during the summer months, and be prepared to place such plans before the societies for action in October, when they shall come together again for the winter's work. Among the delegates present were Mr. Hall of Haverhill, Mr. Wright, Salem; Mr. Hastings, Brockton; Mr. Fuller Newburyport; Mrs. Bennet, Stoneham; Mrs. Szwahlen, Cambridge; Mr. Brown, Waltham; Mr. Hilton, Malden; Mrs. Scott, Cambridge; Mr. Taft, Salem; Mr. Jones, Lowell; Mr. Hall, Brighton, and Dr. Caird of Lynn.

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

If you have a gray-haired mother
In the old home far away,
Sit down and write the letter
You put off day by day.
Don't wait until her tired steps
Reach heaven's pearly gate—
But show her that you think of her
Before it is too late.

If you've a tender message,
Or a loving word to say,
Don't wait till you forget it
But whisper it to-day.
Who knows what bitter memories
May haunt you if you wait?
So make your loved ones happy
Before it is too late.

We live but in the present,
The future is unknown—
To-morrow is a mystery,
To-day is all our own.
The chance that fortune lends to us
May vanish while you wait,
So spend your life's rich treasure
Before it is too late.

The tender words unspoken,
The letter never sent,
The long-forgotten messages,
The wealth of love unspent.
For these some hearts are breaking,
For these some loved ones wait—
So show them that you care for them
Before it is too late.

A Remarkable Medium in California.

To the Editor:—I have thought proper to send you three letters received from Prof. Wm. Denton through the mediumship of Chas. Frederickson, a young man, whom Mr. Denton is developing for a scientific phase of thought. They throw considerable light on the problem of life. Mr. Denton tells me through the medium that he reads The Progressive Thinker, and was greatly interested in the debate in the Open Court on Obsession. He had half prepared an article himself but did not complete it in time. The medium has a beautiful picture of himself with Denton, Franklin and Faraday as an aureole around his head, taken by Wylie, the photographic medium of Los Angeles. I think great things may be expected of Mr. Frederickson, as Franklin proposes to give to the world through him, a science of meteorology. He is able to foretell rain in exact amount a week beforehand. He also is a good telepathist, receiving messages from his friends three hundred miles away.

I wish to remark also that Mr. Denton told me that the highest mentality that has ever come from the spirit world has come through Mrs. Cora Richmond, beginning at the early age or twelve, but that a medium will come who will be along the line of spirituality what Mrs. Richmond has been along the line of mentality. He also told me that wireless telegraphy would soon be an accepted fact, by having one medium at the end as a receiver. This band of spirits propose to do a great many things in science through this medium.

AMBROSE YOUNG.
Bakersfield, Cal.

AN INFAMOUS LIE!

Told by the Catholics in Reference to Our Martyred President, Abraham Lincoln.

The following story about Lincoln appeared in an account of the Lincoln celebration by the pupils of the Immaculate Conception School of Germantown, printed in the Catholic Standard and Times of Philadelphia, and reprinted in the Boston Pilot:

Father Moore made mention of a fact not generally known, namely, that Lincoln was a Catholic, but owing no doubt to the scarcity of priests in Illinois, where Lincoln lived, and to his environments, he drifted away from the faith of his fathers.

Father Moore stated that Father St. Cyr, an old pioneer priest of Illinois, and who afterward died at the convent of the Sisters of Saint Joseph in Carondelet, St. Louis, Mo., told Fathers James McGill, C. M., of Germantown, and Thomas J. Smith, C. M., of Perryville, Mo., who paid Father St. Cyr a visit for the express purpose of finding out something about Lincoln, that Lincoln was a Catholic.

Father St. Cyr said that he often celebrated mass in Abraham Lincoln's father's house, and that young Abraham Lincoln, who was a boy then of some ten or thirteen years ofage, frequently served his mass.—The Christian Register.

To the Editor:—The above article on "Lincoln and Catholicism," I clipped from the Christian Register. Why is such a DASTARDLY LIE allowed to pass through the press without comment? It has on good authority been proved time and again that our beloved Abraham Lincoln was a Spiritualist.

During Mr. Lincoln's term of office seances were often held for his especial benefit at the Mansion. The masterly work (now out of print), "Was Abraham Lincoln a Spiritualist?" proves exactly how he stood as to "religion." J. OSBORNE LUNT.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

My dear companion was released from earthly bondage at our home in Haverhill, Mass., June 2. She was a good wife and mother. She made home happy. The change called death held no terrors for her. Flowers brought by loving hands more than covered her grave, showing she had many friends to miss her in this life. Her maiden name was Charlotte A. Russ. Her age was 62. GEO. F. LEIGHTON.

Henry Rockefeller Blakeman was born in the state of New York, and passed away June 2, 1905, aged 71 years. The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Emily D. King.

Mr. Charles Raymond was born in the state of New York, and passed away Feb. 10, 1905, aged 55 years. The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Emily D. King.

Passed to spirit life from his home near Morenci, Mich., June 15, 1905, John T. Colegrove, aged 85 years. He leaves a wife, two sons, Otis D., of Medina, and Benjamin M., of Morenci; also four grandsons and one granddaughter, and seven great grand children. The family are all believers in Spiritualism while he and his wife have been Spiritualists ever since it started in 1848. The family are universally respected by all who live in that part of the state, and the funeral was largely attended. Rev. Fred D. Dunakin of Cecil, Ohio, conducted the services from the home near Morenci.

Passed to the better life, from Footville, Ohio, on June 2, Marlow Trail, aged 83. Brother Trail was well known as an earnest Spiritualist and kind neighbor. His happy faith inspired him in his last illness and made death a welcome guest. He leaves a faithful wife and daughter to call him from his spirit home. Services conducted by O. P. Kellogg.

Fidelia Andrus, a good and true woman, 82 years of age, passed to the higher life from Geneva, Ohio, on June 15. Mrs. Andrus was well and favorably known in our community. She will be missed by a host of friends who will remember her as a woman of true worth and noble impulses. She leaves a daughter whose watchful and tender care over her during her long illness, can only be equaled by angel ministrations. Services were conducted by O. P. Kellogg. MRS. O. P. K.

Mrs. Sally Delano, widow of the late Oscar Delano, whose home is near Oxford, Mich., passed to spirit life, June 7. The funeral occurred at the family residence on the following Friday, the writer officiating. They were among the early Spiritualists, and their three children are firm in the faith. Sons and relatives bore the casket to its final resting place. The lives of the Delano brothers, with their families, have left a lasting monument to Spiritualism, where they have been and are known. MRS. A. E. SHEETS.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific.

Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 45th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a hopless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. K. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Geaan, 125 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanborawille, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mrs. C. F. Carlson: Q. Is it possible for an unscrupulous medium to draw the strength from the members of a circle, thereby gaining development himself, at the expense of the others? If so, how can it be prevented?

A. This correspondent explains her question: "A number of persons, including myself, sat in a circle with a medium for over a year, none of the members developed an iota of mediumship. Often they felt weary and exhausted at the close of the seances. As the medium disclosed the cause, the members formed circles in their own homes, and some half-dozen, in a little time developed phases of mediumship."

It is a law of control that the influence of the circle is given to the medium, and really they become the negative to the positive medium. Whether the medium is "unscrupulous" or not, does not change this result. If the medium is dependent on this assistance, it will be employed. The breaking up of such a circle, and organizing others is the only corrective measure. Do not get the "suggestion" fastened in your mind that low or evil spirits are determined to trouble you. You can have converse with such departed friends as you desire. No other "medium" has the power to dispossess you of this treasure and substitute others of a lower order. Your innermost soul will be revealed by the communications you receive.

This correspondent further gives an instance where a medium boasted that he could prevent any manifestation of spirit power, by the force of his will, and that he did do this many times to prove his power and for annoyance. Those who have investigated these phenomena well know that it is possible for one antagonistic person to prevent the least manifestation. It may be done, even unconsciously, for there is a condition of mind, negative to positive mediumship. The presence of such a person would be like that of a lump of ice among the coal in a grate, or an extinguisher over a lamp.

This condition may accompany an earnest desire to receive evidence, and is by no means confined to skepticism. Unbelief has very slight influence of itself. This explains why many earnest seekers receive no response to their prayers and endeavors for spirit communion, while those by whom it is less sought, and of less meaning, receive extraordinary evidence.

Perhaps sometime these delicate conditions of receptivity and impartation may be so well understood that they may be induced or complied with, but at present it must be admitted that our ignorance of them imparts a shadow of mystery and the spirit intelligences appear to have only slightly more knowledge.

Judge Richards: Q. What is the cause of cyclones and tornadoes, and great and sudden changes of temperature experienced recently in the west? What reliability is there in the weather predictions of Rev. Hicks?

A. Probably of all influences which affect the weather that of the sun is incomparably the greatest. This is accomplished by the changes of temperature over great areas, and by the change in electric and magnetic conditions which are heralded by appearances of disturbances on the solar surface, and responsive movement of the magnetic needle. It is impossible to predict these changes with great knowledge, even for a day. The weather bureau, with the instantaneous knowledge of the weather conditions over the vast area from Atlantic to Pacific, from Gulf to Alaska, is able by the course and velocity of a storm-center, to foretell its coming. Yet it often fails, for there are conditions involved which are as yet absolutely unknown.

Observations made accurately on the influence of the planets, have proved that it is too slight to be taken into account, and that of the moon, which from its nearness should be greater than that of the planets, has been shown to be too weak to be measured. The "changes of the moon," have as little to do with storm or shine, as its heat has in raising the temperature of the earth. The moon for the present month is a typical "dry moon" and of course is the same for all the world. Why, then, is Maine and New England suffering from a drought, and the western states deluged with water? It is futile to argue, however, with believers in the moon, for the superstition remains impregnable to all the facts which may be brought against it. And from spiritual communications, it appears that these remain to bias the mind, in the next sphere. From such we have "learned" disquisitions on the influence of the planets, and the horrible effects of their aphelion and perihelion and conjunction.

Perhaps the most typical charlatan is the man who sets up as a weather prophet. It is a subject in which all are interested, and hence attention is gained. Newspapers advertise free. The fakir becomes notorious. He sells his almanac, or "predictions," and grows fat on the spoils gathered from his dupes.

Hicks, who writes "Rev." before his name, never makes a verifiable prediction. He never says what a given day in a given locality will produce. "About a certain time there will be storms," again there is a "hot" or "cold wave." Where? Somewhere in this vast country, and there is sure to be. There will be hot days in July and cold in February.

Then like all fakirs, Hicks has a jargon of science. It means nothing, but it takes the attention of the masses, who are impressed with his "scientific" lingo.

If Hicks would dare predict what the weather on the Fourth of July will be in New York, or Seattle, he has a good guessing chance, of say one to two, to be correct, but he dare not make the test. He nor any other prophet has foretold for a locality, the date of a storm, hurricane or dry weather condition. He never can, and his claim that he is able by his knowledge of the planets, is entirely a pretense, made to delude people out of their money. What is more, such predictions as he makes, as unreliable as dyspeptic dreams, are positively harmful to those who give them credence. In all the years he has been before the public, he has not made a single prediction of a local weather condition, which came true. The amazing effrontery with which he continues to issue his bulletins, which are so worded that they may be applied to any locality, is only equaled by the credulity of the people who accept them. The time will come when the magnetic currents of the earth, now only conjectured, will be understood, and the more important influence of those of the sun. Then the greatest assistance in predicting the weather of to-morrow will be an instrument which will indicate the magnetic condition of the sun.

STURGIS JUNE MEETING OF 1905.

An Unbroken Chain of Forty-eight Links—Let Us Respect the Old Home for Its Strange Eventful History.

The brick building on Chicago street, Sturgis, Mich., is known abroad as the First Spiritual Church of the World (a name given to it 25 years ago by the writer of this report). At its dedication to freedom of speech, 48 years ago a resolution was adopted that that event should be commemorated every year following in the month of June, and for 48 years that resolution has been respected without a missing link. When the idea got abroad that there was a free platform in Sturgis, it was supposed to be gratuitous to every rag-tag and bobtail who wished to exploit himself, and Mr. Jonathan G. Wait, the then president of the Harmonial Society, had a hard job on his hands for the first ten years, to correct that idea.

The writer of this report can look back over 44 years of the 48, and has heard a great variety of speakers in that house; they extend all the way from the orthodox priest down to the rank materialist, and from the modest and eloquent woman to her who, had she remained at a washtub, might have been respected, but who was despised upon a platform. He can remember how on one occasion at a Freethinker meeting when the house was full), the great church bible was removed from its place on the desk and put down on the lower floor, where the dust from the feet of the people might accumulate upon it. He got up from his seat, in full view of the audience, took up the book, dusted its covers with his handkerchief, and put it back in its place. When spoken of this, his reply was: "Millions of respectable people honor that book, and I shall never sit calmly by and see them insulted." The Harmonial Society approved of such sentiments and the First Spiritual Church of the World" is a "Free Church" only to those who are too polite to offend those who differ from them. The writer is not a member of the society, and the above may come with better taste from him than if he were.

Strictly speaking, it is not correct to call the church and society Spiritualistic. The by-laws of the society declare that any one may become a member by signing the roll, and resign therefrom by signifying in writing his desire to the secretary, so that both church and society are free in the higher and better sense of that term, and no one is refused membership, be his opinions what they may.

The onus of rendering this annual convention a success, rested, of course, upon the president, T. Collar; the secretary, C. Cressler, and the committee of women (the name "woman" is much more noble than that of lady). We think they made a mistake, however, when they shut off the usual conference meeting from the printed program, as the opportunity to relate experiences has always been a nice and interesting feature of these meetings. The individual members of a society should be made to feel that they had a personal interest in the proceedings, and a duty to perform in rendering the meetings a success. Orthodox churches well understand this, and create quite a number of offices for private members to fill, and "what the Lord has done for them," is an important and useful inquiry at the Methodist class meetings. The long experience of social clubs ought not to be ignored. "Take care of the cents, and the dollars will take care of themselves," is a useful hint outside of finance.

Saturday, June 17.—Although not on the printed program, the people from abroad held a conference meeting, and many curious recitals of psychic experiences were heard The meeting was opened by the president of the Harmonial Society, who after a few remarks, called on Dr. J. M. Peebles, who, as usual, was quite interesting. Mr. Cross also spoke; he and many others related experiences.

At the evening session, a wild thunderstorm broke over the city on the hour appointed for the meeting, and continued for a couple of hours, which kept many away and interfered greatly with the exercises; nevertheless the meeting was a success. A solemn invocation was uttered by Dr. Peebles, followed by a solo by Miss French, nicely rendered. Then an address by Dr. J. M. Walton, of Jackson, winding up with a solo by Dr. Warren.

Sunday morning.—Invocation by Dr. Peebles, then came a solo at the organ by Dr. Warren, sang with earnestness by a voice of great compass, and the effort was exceedingly loud and far-reaching. Then followed an excellent address by Dr. George B. Warne of Chicago.

At the Sunday afternoon session, after the invocation, Mrs. Jones sang a solo; the address was by Dr. J. M. Walton, and a solo was sung by Miss Zula Grubbiser.

Sunday evening, the address was by Dr. George B. Warne, vice-president of the National Spiritualists Association. His subject was "The Spirit and Spirit Body." He drew a picture of a visitor coming from another world where there was no death, and the visit of such a one to our graveyard. He, the visitor, reads the history of the Christian church and the character it gave of God. He reads the sermons and books of Christian fathers who taught that an eternal hell awaited a majority of his children; that the Jesuits considered it a virtue to lie and deceive and plot to benefit the cause of God. Dr. Warne quoted from numerous Catholic authors who described the horrors of hell and the character of the personal devil. He spoke of cruel tortures inflicted on those who dared to think for themselves, and of the burning of men at the stake for the glory of God. Dr. Warne also referred to the Presbyterian confession of faith, and he eulogized those Presbyterian ministers who were instrumental in obliterating from the creed the faithful confession that infants were to suffer the tortures of the damned to all eternity.

A solo was sung, followed by remarks by Dr. Peebles. After the benediction the 48th anniversary meeting closed.

As one who has seen much at home of spirit manifestations, I may be permitted to express an opinion thereon:

1. I believe spirit return a fact in nature belonging to the world at large, not to a sect or party.

2. It does not prove immortality—it only proves that life continues after the body's death; immortality cannot be proven; we may suppose or expect or hope for immortality, but we cannot know.

3. It is not a religion; it cannot be made to be so; as well might we make a religion of gravity or the telegraph; it comes like rain on the just and the unjust.

4. Men, women and children possess the same character there as here and will try to continue the methods and manners of the past life.

5. "Birds of a feather flock together" there, "like attracts like," and the people live in communities.

6. I consider that prayer and benediction are out of place at a Spiritualist meeting.

Finally, I remark that the horrors referred to, of hell and persecution, though they may have had their place in a barbarous age in keeping savages in check and frightening the "dangerous classes" into right doing, have no place in a civilized country and no intelligent Presbyterian or independent thinking Catholic would, at this day endorse such teaching.

THOS HARDING.

SPIRITUAL AGE IS UPON US.

The World Is Experiencing a Reaction From the Thought of Materiality.

"What is it to be spiritual? So much is said nowadays about the reaction of the world from materialism and the growing interest of people in things spiritual. What is your idea of spirituality? Is it not impossible to be truly spiritual while we are inhabiting physical bodies? INQUIRER."

If there is any one idea concerning which the human understanding seems to go astray it is the question of what constitutes spirituality.

The spiritual life has so long been considered as synonymous with a cloistered, pallid existence, remote from the live interests of the world, that human beings find it difficult to adjust their minds to its real significance, as pointed out by modern thinkers.

Spirituality in its true sense is directly opposed to any condition of mind or life that is not thoroughly alive, vigorous and radiant. To be spiritually minded is not to ignore the body or the physical universe, but to really see them as expressions of spirit; to be conscious of the divine energy pushing through them; to live in the thought of your own connection with this divine source.

It means simply to remove your consciousness from your body to your spirit while you are still living in your body. When you do this you do not rob existence of its natural joys and interests, but you thrill them with a new meaning.

To think of yourself as a soul, a spirit, does not take away the happiness of living, but intensifies it. To know yourself as vitally connected with an inexhaustible source of life and love and intelligence is to discover what existence really is.

Spirituality is not something vague and colorless and remote. It is a condition that is tangible, positive and glowing. It is a condition you may enter at any time by letting your thought down below the surface into the depths where you have your real being.

You have been keeping your thought above ground, as it were, where the physical part of you shows itself as does a plant on the earth's surface. Now realize that you have roots and fibers extending deep into the spiritual, into the source of life, and that you draw your sustenance from it even as a plant draws nourishment from the earth. When you have once grasped this concept of yourself, you will wonder how you ever tolerated the little surface life that thought its leaves and branches and flowers constituted the whole of existence.

To be spiritually minded is to realize this extension of yourself into the spiritual; it is to be conscious now, while yet in the body, of immortality.

Bodies have nothing to do with it. You need not wait until you drop your body to lead a life of perfect spirituality. You can live such a life now.

Not to be spiritual is to miss the highest, keenest, sweetest flavor of life. To be spiritual is to be alive in the most glowing, vital sense. It is to know that you have never been separated from your source and that you never can be.

Yes, indeed, the world is experiencing a reaction from the thought of materiality that has held it so long. People are coming to see that life reaches out far beyond the limited ideas the race has held, that existence is deeper, higher, finer than we ever dreamed. The spiritual age is upon us now.—Angela Morgan, in Chicago Daily Journal.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

With Expressive Thoughts on the Needs of Spiritualism.

My first two Sundays in Buffalo, June 4 and 11, were dark, cold and wet. But considering the unfavorable weather, the chilling gloom and rain, our audiences were surprisingly good. Brother Atcheson presided pleasantly, and the little organist (I cannot recall her name) charmed the choir as they sang, and the audience, as they listened.

Prof. Lockwood's scientific lectures were much appreciated by those who heard them. Whatever one may think of his radical utterances on religion and the church, his scientific discourses are what all societies and camps need. But I hear that he is not on the program for Lily Dale this season! This is the more surprising because he has been so enthusiastically approved by a large portion of the people for the past three years, and his and Mr. Wright's "class lectures" have been regarded by a large majority of all who heard them as the most interesting and instructive of anything the camp has presented to its patrons.

We often hear the question "What is the cause of the apparent apathy among Spiritualists, and the lack of support for public lectures?" In my opinion there are several causes, prominent among which is the catering to the sensational and superficial novelty seekers, the consequent low grade of intellect that leads and follows, and for this reason the withdrawal of thousands of the best minds, who find better intellectual entertainment at the liberal churches, and even in the profoundly orthodox bodies, than the majority of spiritual societies provide for them. Such scientific lectures as Prof. Lockwood and a few others give, do not draw the mob, but they raise the standard of our meetings, and give the thinking public better estimates of Spiritualism and its advocates. True, there are many who cannot appreciate or fully understand his expressions; but when will they learn, if they have only baby talk to inspire their thinking?

The supreme need of Spiritualism is more science and less dogmatism, more demonstration and less metaphysical moonshine, more religion and less theology, more moral enthusiasm and less sectarianism, more sincerity and less boastful ambition, more spiritual life and less scheming, more facts and less frauds, more mediumship and less monkeying, more truth and less trash, more love and less jealousy, more rational thinking and less brain-muddling reincarnation; and finally more Spiritualism all the time, and a vigorous application of its principles to the problems of life and the betterment of human society.

On Sunday, June 18, a rarely beautiful baby was presented at the platform to be christened. This event is regarded by many Spiritualists as a step backward; since Spiritualists do not recognize any such necessity, nor any "saving grace" in any church ceremonials. Nevertheless if a mother desires it as a symbol of spiritual guardianship, it can do no harm, and may carry with it a psychic influence that will be satisfying and therefore helpful.

Christening is said to be of pagan origin. But that does not affect its influence as applied to modern life. It is held by able men who have studied deeply, that the human race is derived from our animal ancestry. Are we any the less superior because we have ascended from the animal kingdom? Is a lily less beautiful because its roots are fed from mud and slime? Is astronomy less reliable because its origin was in mythology? Is chemistry less a science because it was founded in alchemy?

I am far from advocating any compromise with error, or any surrender of the noble philosophy of life and the all-embracing principles of Spiritualism, to the shams and superstitions of church dogmatism. But because church people eat, I do not think it necessary for us to starve. If they weep, I will not refuse my tears the expression of emotion that enriches my life. If they smile, it need not prevent me the luxury of a similar expression of the sunshine of the heart. If they perform loving charities, it shall not hinder me from blessing the sorrowing with my love; and if they perform a Christening with some absurd concepts of the dealings of God with men, it need not carry a blight to a baby that is dedicated to the larger life of a more beautiful ideal.

It is always a pleasure to me to recognize the efforts of all sincere and worthy mediums and public advocates. Mrs. A. Atcheson, of 274 North Division street, Buffalo, has held regular meetings in her parlors each Monday evening, with occasional variations, for five or six years, giving personal readings, short talks, tests, etc., to each person present. The fact that her meetings are patronized with full houses, often many more than can gain admission, and this interest keeps up from year to year, is pretty good evidence of merit. Then, too, for about three years past she has spoken regularly at Niagara Falls every Sunday evening, except in the summer vacation, and thus a good work is kept alive and growing by her good help.

On the 14th of June nature seemed to make an extra effort to adorn herself with sunny smiles, and floral charms, to greet the nuptial appointments of Martin Byrom and Jennie T. Darch of Buffalo, who by the ceremonial rite were made husband and wife according to law.

Both are mediums and have long lived in the light of Spiritualism, and been helpers to the cause. Mr. Byrom has been generous towards mediums, spending his money freely with them—more to help the medium than for the messages he received. Apparently this is a union of souls, with a fair outlook for a happy pilgrimage together with love and mutual helpfulness to make life sweet and distribute happiness along the journey, blessing as they are blessed. The writer said the words that gave their union the legal sanction, and love did the rest.

I had the pleasure and profit of a visit with Tillie Reynolds, who is the state missionary for the Empire State. She is active, lively, sparkling and social, and makes many friends.

Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, the noted medium and clairvoyant doctor, of 248 North Division street, is busy as ever, and does more work of venture to assume, than any other woman—or man—in Buffalo. She gives an average of sixty clairvoyant examinations daily. This is always in a profound trance. When normal she knows nothing of what she has said or done while entranced. After her day's work with her patients is done she works at a variety of things from four to ten hours, often extending the hours to midnight, and 1 or 2 a. m. She makes unique vases of original pattern and ornamental variety, varying in size from one to four feet high, and arranged to hold flowers, or umbrellas, or any thing desired, and the ornamentation is of her own design, and no one looking at them would guess how they are made. People guess on their value from $25 to $200 each. She has sent these to many places, donated them to societies, and to friends and there is nothing else like them.

Her pharmacopia is as good as a museum to visit. All of her remedies are prepared from the vegetable kingdom, and now, for the first time in her wonderful history, she has placed them on the market as proprietary remedies, so that the millions can get them, if they wish; but she still continues to diagnose and prescribe for a throng of patients who visit her rooms daily.

Next Sunday, June 26, closes my present engagement in Buffalo, for June, 1905. I have engaged to serve them again in June, 1906. I have also engaged to speak in Pittsburg, Pa., in November, 1905.

I have but one camp engagement this year. Lake Brady, Sunday, August 6.

Mrs. Howe made a visit in Buffalo a remarkable event for her. We arrived in Fredonia Monday, June 19, just as the stunning news went out that the National Bank had been closed. This is sure to make many radical changes, and probably will bankrupt many of our best business men.

Nothing is secure in this world. All is secure in the next. Most of my bank accounts are across the line where they are secure. But I am in no hurry to present my checks. They will all keep. Yours for Spiritualism, LYMAN C. HOWE.

MRS. AMANDA COFFMAN.

Her Method of Giving Tests While Entranced.

Blank cards or paper with pencils were placed on a table near the door for those who wished to help themselves. Just before services commenced, our ushers went through the audience; passing cards, etc., to all those unsupplied and explaining the privilege they had of asking a question, thereby giving every one in the audience an equal show to investigate. After the lecture, Mrs. Coffman would announce the nature of the seance hour and ask that someone in the audience (a skeptic preferred) furnish materials for, and adjust the blinds which consisted of a pair of kid gloves folded and placed in the sockets of the eyes and then bound on with whatever was furnished by the audience, after which all were invited to examine the blindfold to make sure of its thoroughness.

She was then entranced and not until "Singing Arrow" (the controlling intelligence) requested, did the ushers gather the questions and place them written side down, in a pile on the table before her.

The questions were addressed to someone in spirit life (sometimes Mrs. Coffman's guides) and signed with a name, initial or mark by which the writer could recognize it. "Singing Arrow" first described and gave full names of the spirit or spirits who came to answer the question, gave the message or messages as the spirit directed, and then gave the address, question and signature verbatim as handed by the writer. In many cases where only an initial or mark appeared as a signature, this was first given and then the full name of the writer given in addition. Singing Arrow then asked the spirit to find the card on which was written the question he had answered, which he did by holding both hands for a few seconds, about six inches above the pile and then without further ado picking out the right paper from wherever it happened. The paper was then handed to someone (invariably a skeptic and previously invited to the platform for the purpose) to re-read aloud for the satisfaction of the audience.

In a few cases, presumably on account of the various styles of writing, the one who re-read the questions was unable to make out an occasional word. Whenever this happened, and without again touching the paper, Singing Arrow again gave the question as it was, after which the writer invariably attested to its correctness.

In the two months' time Mrs. Coffman was with us giving these tests every Sunday night and answering hundreds of questions, not one mistake was made and all work done with the Temple fully alight.

F. G. Neelin, present collector of customs at Seaforth, Ontario, and once a director of Lily Dale camp, was only one of the well-known Spiritualists besides a number of prominent men of our own city, who are noted for their skepticism, who watched Mrs. Coffman in her work, to ultimately agree this was as we have before stated "the one phase that must answer the question, if a man die, shall he live again?"

DEALING IN CHARMS.

One Who Repented of the Great Wrong He Had Done.

For the sake of money Judas betrayed Jesus; for the sake of money Simon the sorcerer wanted to buy the gifts of the holy ghost; for the sake of money ghouls rob graves and corpses, and for the sake of money some will traffic in "charms" and unblushingly trifle with the most sacred feelings in the tenderest spot of the human being, and yet will lift their brazen face in shameless audacity and defiance to the onsweeping avenging angel of retribution.

A certain Doctor, well known when in earth life as a great medium, humbly confessed to the selling of so-called "cabalistic charms" (sometimes termed love-powders, consisting of a thimbleful of corn starch; of the hocus-pocus mystery type). While controlling our medium he implored us in most touching appeals to sound a note of warning for all to be honest, and thus escape his awful doom. He said he had suffered for his evil acts ever since his passing out of his mortal body—the most agonizing ordeal from remorse and anguish of his tormenting conscience, and he had no hope of ever being able to make restitution to the many servant girls and others he had robbed in that way.

Mediums and lecturers, here is a chance for you to prove on what side of the fence you stand! By denouncing from the platform and pulpit such shameless traffic, angels will decorate you with the badge of honesty, visible to all whom your voice may reach, and thus you will not alone lift the cloud of suspicion which a few have cast over the many, but you will at once establish your identity of character and reputation for truth and veracity, something which is worth having. Should anyone be in possession of incriminating information, please forward same to me for investigation.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

Through the N. S. A. Missionary, E. W. Sprague.

While at San Diego, Cal., recently, we made two trips out of town, visiting Mt. Loma Theosophical home, and also the town of Tijuana (pronounced Te-a-wa-na), Old Mexico.

At Tijuana the Plaza de Toras where the bull fights take place, was pointed out to us; also the ruins of an ancient Catholic mission.

We visited the art stores where many beautiful and useful articles, some of them real works of art, were for sale. We saw the native Mexican in his home which is some cases was a house made of mud; they are called "adobe houses." Some modern dwellings were to be seen here and there. After what we saw in this brief visit to this Mexican town, we concluded that the country was about one hundred years behind our own United States of America.

On our return we visited National City and the great Sweetwater Dam. This dam is a wonderful piece of engineering and was built to hold the water that falls during the winter and spring, to be used for irrigating purposes in summer.

Having read the notices in the daily press and in the illustrated circulars distributed to tourists and sight-seers informing them of what is to be seen and how to see it, and finding among the many attractions mentioned the Mt. Loma Theosophical Home and School, we decided to visit it. Following the directions in the circular we secured tickets which were to take us to the grounds, boarded the naptha launch with a dozen others and crossed the bay. We were met at the landing by men with omnibuses who took our party to the entrance to the ground, about a mile distant, where a number of others were added to our party.

We saw three or four "guards" in uniforms (yellow duck suits), one of whom informed us that the admission to the grounds was 10 cents. We paid our admission and were permitted to enter the gates.

We found a "guide" waiting for us near the main building who escorted us along the road and pointed to the "Home," the conservatory of music, the home of Mr. Spaulding, who, he said, was the financial backing of the institution; the private home of Madam Tingley, and a few little cottages where, he said, little children were cared for. He also told us of a proposed "Grecian theater" that is to be built, and pointed out the site. We were permitted to look up that way, but were refused permission to go any nearer.

The "guide" then turned and pointed, not reluctantly, but with evident pride, to the great Pacific ocean and we were allowed to feast our eyes on its wonderful beauty. Dear reader, we shall always be thankful to this Theosophical society for letting us see all for the small sum of 10 cents each, and all, too, from this beautiful point of view, the middle of the road.

A lady asked the "guide" how many children were in the "Home." He said: "I do not know; there may be several hundred." We ventured the question: "How large a tract of land belongs to this home?" He said he could not tell, but thought there were some thousands of acres.

We asked for literature giving information regarding the school; the "guide" gave us no information that would help us to get it if such literature is in existence.

We were told of the cost of the main building, of the wealth of the principal donor and supporter of the school, but our "guide" gave evasive answers to some of the questions of members of our party and volunteered but little information of importance.

Our party of earnest men and women seeking information regarding this much talked of "Modern School"(?) had to leave the premises without having seen the inside of a single building or meeting a single person other than our "guide," and without learning any definite fact about the workings of this institution.

Our experience shows that this institution is truly "Esoteric" according to Webster's definition of the term, which is as follows: "Esoteric, Designed for and understood by the specially initiated alone; not communicated or not intelligible to the general body of followers; private; interior; acroatic." "Opposed to exoteric or public."

This kind of treatment was enough to cause the members of our party to declare with DeQuincy: "Enough if every age produce two or three critics of this esoteric class with here and there a reader to understand them."

The ten cents admission fee for walking in the roads for half a mile or less and looking at a couple of buildings from the outside that are not very remarkable for anything in particular, we thought was a good investment.

If it gave us no knowledge of what was transpiring within those walls, it enlightened us upon how Mt. Loma Theosophists treat honest inquirers regarding this new school of "reform"(?)

We were taken back to the dock in the omnibuses to wait the coming of our launch. We all kept our good humor and enjoyed the five-mile return trip across the bay very much, though we are still wondering what this esoteric philosophy amounts to anyway.

KANSAS SPIRITUALISTS.

Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Jaquet In the Field.

I kindly ask for permission and space in the columns of your very worthy and most welcome paper, to announce to the many readers of the same, the grand work that is being done here in our new field of labor.

On the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th of this month we held a mass meeting, and with the able and worthy assistance of Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Mrs. Isa Kayner, Virginia Bryan, and my guides, we have not only organized, but get our state charter next Wednesday, the 21st inst., and then we intend having state ordination services on next Sunday, there being four applicants for ordination. And we have now enrolled on our books twenty-four members. Now is not this doing well for four days' work? Just think of the rapid strides the spiritual world is making. After next Sunday, Mrs. Bryan and your humble servant will start out to canvass the surrounding large and small towns for membership to our new state organization, and organize local societies with the understanding of and to aid societies that all affiliate with the N. S. A. and which all seem willing to do.

Dr. Warne held the people spellbound with his well executed remarks in regard to the workers in the vast fields of our philosophy, and was greatly applauded for his firmness and standing for truth only in all phases of mediumship.

Isa Kayner gave some very remarkable tests, as did Mrs. Virginia Bryan, and also Pottawattamies, and all the guides have won the hearts of the Kansas people. We had in attendance at our mass-meeting delegates from seven towns in Kansas, and all seemed well pleased with the glorious outlook for the new organization.

Last night, in spite of a dreadful thunder, lightning and rain storm, we had a fine house and a very appreciative one. Mrs. Bryan and myself gave short talks and messages, as did also our worthy president, Mr. Cyrus Corning.

We, Mrs. Bryan and Jaquet, send greetings to all friends and societies that we have been allied with in our home city, Chicago.

Topeka, Kans. L. J. JAQUET.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

Dr. Savage's Inspirational Discourse on Mary A. Livermore—The Friction Among the New York Christian Scientists, Etc.

One of the greatest discourses that Dr. Savage has delivered for some time, was the one last Sunday on Mary A. Livermore and Modern Womanhood.

It was a beautiful June Sunday morning and the church was crowded to the doors, in fact, it is very hard to get a seat in this church unless you go very early, the same as it was in former years at Henry Ward Beecher's church, in Brooklyn.

Dr. Savage paid tribute after tribute to Mrs. Livermore, and he called her "the greatest speaker of them all" among women preachers and said he was proud to say he had given over his pulpit in Boston to her many times. He also said that Mrs. Livermore was a thorough believer in Spiritualism. He said that she had experiences which convinced her that we are surrounded by a crowd of invisible witnesses of all our struggles, who are sad when we fall, and who are glad when we win a victory, and she believed that now and then a face broke through the mist, and again a hand was outstretched to help, or a voice was heard giving courage and cheer.

He added that Harriet Beecher Stowe was also a great believer in Spiritualism, although her biographers carefully covered the fact; and that Joseph Jefferson had vigorously declared to him (in his study some months before he passed away) his belief in the other life, which was so real to him that he repeatedly expressed his willingness to go, if he had not been needed here.

Dr. Savage also paid a glowing tribute to Mrs. Livermore's works on the battlefield during the Rebellion; in fact he said she was a modern Florence Nightingale.

I myself had the great pleasure, about ten years back, of hearing Mary A. Livermore, on Decoration Day, to the members of the G. A. R., which packed the hall, and I will never forget the reception she received from those veterans. It was nearly ten minutes before she was allowed to speak, and as she related some of her experiences upon the battle fields among the wounded, not a dry eye could be seen among those veterans.

One incident I remember that she related on that occasion was, one day as she was passing abong the wounded and dead on the battle field, a young soldier who was very seriously wounded, asked her to write a letter at his dictation to his wife, and at a short distance away a wounded drummer boy wished a letter written to his mother, so the young man told Mrs. Livermore to write the boy's letter first, because it was to his mother. Mrs Livermore did as requested, and when she had completed the drummer boy's letter to his mother, she turned to the young man, but he required no letter now, for he had passed into the unseen.

Mary A. Livermore was a wonderful woman, and I feel proud to know I was personally acquainted with her; and it will be many a day, if ever, that we shall look upon her like again.

Dr. Charles G. Pease, a member of the First Church of Christ Scientist (known as Mrs. Stetson's church), has resigned, and renounces the belief as "a fabric of deceit, falsehood and dishonesty." He descants upon abuses he alleges exist in the practice of so-called healing, and brings up battery after battery against the ramparts of the system established by Mary Baker G. Eddy.

This action may be traced into a serious disagreement which the Doctor had a year ago with the authorities of the First Church. He led a band of members who were opposed to what they considered the undue influence of Mrs. Stetson, the former first reader. Some of the disaffected ones resigned. The following is a copy of the letter sent by Doctor Pease to Mrs. Eddy and the clerk of the church:

"Dangerous, wicked, cruel, unchristian teaching, acts and methods prevail within the Christian Science organization. These have the appearance of being fostered by the highest authorities in the organization, in that with full knowledge these conditions have the support and consent of silence. And, Whereas, I find that these acts and methods are the legitimate outcome of the fundamental teachings presented in Science and Health therefore, because of the conditions and the teaching which admit of the conditions, I ask that my name be stricken from the membership of the Church. I am in the service of God and men."

This only shows that a prominent member occasionally has his eyes opened to common sense.

Dr. Savage in a recent sermon on "God," spoke as follows:

"There is no longer any dead matter, all is thrilling with the one life. We no longer ask, 'Where is God?' any more than I ask, 'In what part of my body am I?'

"I am all in all, at the point of my pen when I write, in my hand when I stretch it out to help. As I am all in all parts of my body, so is God all and in all the universe.

"Never was God so near to us before, for natural forces are only His present working, and natural laws are only, so to speak, His habits, unchangeable only because He is all-wise. What higher form of being may exist we do not know. God then is in the mightiest and most distant star, and equally He is in the grain of dust the wind whirls through its tiny orbit in the streets. He is in the blade of grass, and He is in the love and pity of the human breast. And, more than all these He incloses them all in His infinite arms. He is so near that we lose him, as a little child, lost in some corner of St. Peter's might be asking for the cathedral, or as a bird, borne on swift winds might be seeking after the air."

New York. J. OSBORNE LUNT.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

AN EARNEST APPEAL TO MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS.

Every medium for physical manifestations in the United States has undoubtedly read the statement of Judge Dunn, that WINANS AND OTHERS USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY in their seances in order to make up properly the spirits who present themselves for recognition.

This charge, coming from such a prominent source, THEIR SPECIAL FRIEND, has aroused great attention in this country and throughout England, France, Spain and South America.

Is it possible, it has been asked, that Farmer Riley, Mrs. Bliss, Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. M. E. Williams, Mr. Moore, the Howlands, Mr. Keeler, Mr. Aber, Mrs. Jackman, as well as Mr. Winans and a hundred others now before the public, USE FALSE WIGS, WHISKERS, PHOSPHORESCENT GARBS, etc., to make up in proper shape or form the spirit that comes out of the cabinet?

An answer IS DUE TO THE PUBLIC from them, to the charge made by Judge Dunn, a Spiritualist of wide experience among materializing mediums.

We entreat you all to EMPHATICALLY DENY THE ASSERTION that has been made that you for years have been deceiving the public. Why not say:

"I DO NOT USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN MY SEANCES. IN ORDER TO CONVINCE YOURSELF OF THAT CUT OFF A SMALL PIECE OF THE DRAPERY THAT THE SPIRIT WEARS, EXPOSE IT TO THE LIGHT, AND IT WILL INSTANTLY DEMATERIALIZE—BE DISSIPATED LIKE A SNOWFLAKE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THE HOT SUN. AN INCH SQUARE CUT OFF FROM THE SPIRIT DRAPERY, WILL NOT INJURE ANY MEDIUM IN THE LEAST, AND IT WILL CONVINCE YOU BY ITS DEMATERIALIZATION THAT I AM HONEST IN MY PRETENSIONS. EACH SPIRIT THAT STEPS OUT FOR RECOGNITION WILL ALLOW YOU TO DO THAT, AND ESTABLISH THE FACT THAT I AM NOT, AS JUDGE DUNN CLAIMS, USING ARTIFICIAL MEANS TO DECEIVE THE PUBLIC?"

If ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY is used, is it not evidence that the deception is carried on to a still greater extent? If millions upon millions of BRAIN CELLS can be materialized, if millions upon millions of BLOOD CORPUSCLES can be manufactured for use in the cabinet, if that intricate instrument, THE EYE, can be made there in a moment's time, also the bones, muscles, nerves, nails of the hands and feet, etc., etc., why not a LIGHT GARB be made for covering the spirit body? After making a hundred and fifty pounds of solid flesh, bones, etc., a gauze-like texture WEIGHING NOT OVER ONE-HALF POUND can be materialized to cover the entire body, hence there seems to be no possible excuse for using ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY to deceive the public. Materializing mediums, ONE AND ALL, let the anxious Spiritualists hear from you.

Will you respond to this appeal? Say something—either give an AFFIRMATIVE answer, or deny or explain.

There are at least one hundred or more materializing mediums in the United States. During the last eighteen months a dozen or more of them, one after another, have been exposed, AND ALL HAD ON ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY!

WHAT CAN BE THE INFERENCE DRAWN AS TO THE REST? We leave YOU to draw the conclusion.

JUDGE DUNN AND FRAUD.

The Subject Treated From Different Points of View.

The lengthy reply of Judge Dunn is on the same line of his first article, and fails to do more than re-state his remarkable view of the question. I have no disposition to impugn his motives and honesty of purpose. He is anxious to carry his point, and his effort is masterly, as a lawyer's. He says the whole matter may be condensed in the one question:

"WAS THE MEDIUM WINANS AT THE TIME OF THE MANIFESTATION OF SO-CALLED SPIRIT POWER AT HOT SPRINGS IN POSSESSION OF HIS NORMAL FACULTIES SO AS TO BE CONSCIOUS OF THE FACT THAT HIS OWN PERSON AND THE BORROWED PLUMAGE OR ACCESSORIES WERE BEING USED, AND ALSO USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF DECEIVING THE SITTERS? IF YEA, HE IS GUILTY; IF NAY, HE IS NOT."

Taking this for granted, all the other considerations he has brought in may be discarded, for they all depend on this. It is admitted that Winans procured the masks, drapery and other toggery with which to pose as different "materialized spirits," that should there be failure to have real "materialization," then the paraphernalia were to be used. That Winans used these consciously, Boving, Hallman and Dr. Eastman say he admitted to them. Judge Dunn objects to their testimony and rules them out of court.

It is not essential to the argument to insist on their word being taken, although it would be impossible to impeach their evidence. Winans may or may not have admitted he masqueraded as "materialized spirits." We will grant he did not. We will draw our conclusions from a different case in illustration.

A man prepares himself for the committal of a crime. He purchases a mask to conceal his face, a slouch hat, and ulster to change his appearance; a revolver which he carefully loads, and goes to the place where he knows his victim will appear. On his way he strengthens his determination by taking several glasses of liquor. He commits the crime, is arrested and brought before Judge Dunn. His lawyer sets up the plea that his client was so intoxicated that he was not conscious, and that he was not therefore responsible for the crime. Would the Judge accept this reasoning as sound, and discharge the prisoner?

Would he not say that if we regard the criminal as having a double personality, and while the second personality was intoxicated, may or may not be responsible for his acts; the first personality prepared for the crime and must be held therefor.

He would not decide as he does in this case, that it is the "vital question," that the criminal was "unconscious at the time" of the committal of the crime, as he does of Winans' "use of the toggery." He would rather say that the first personality, in full and complete consciousness, prepared for the crime which he knew the second personality would commit, and therefore had no justification. I think if, unprejudiced, the Winans case should come before him, he would see it in a different light from that in which he makes his plea.

Yet I can see how the Judge escapes this conclusion. The masks, garments, etc., are taken into the cabinet with the honest purpose to help the spirits. The medium openly says there are two forms of manifestation, materialization and impersonation. Hence if there were impersonations, and the members of the circle mistook them for "materialization," it was not Winans' fault. But Winans did not tell that he was taking into cabinet the toggery to make up these impersonations! That is the "vital" point. Few would care to give a dollar, or even sit in darkness, to have him masquerade as their "dear departed."

Or he may argue that, not exactly represented by double personality, the spirits act independently and are responsible for his actions in the second state. This is not good law, for the accessory is held with the principal. As an instance, if a servant left the front door unlocked that a thief might enter, would not one be as guilty as the other? Winans prepares for the imposition, knowing that he will become unconscious, and be used to represent a materialized spirit. If he does not know what he is doing while in the seance, he knew beforehand what he would do, which makes the responsibility the same.

It strikes me that the issue raised by Judge Dunn as to the "consciousness" of Winans, and on which he makes everything depend, is not the issue at all, and is of so little consequence that I have in the preceding argument granted that he was not. But we suggest to Judge Dunn that a man who prepares for fraud and crime, is capable of its committal. And further, we remind him that all he says of Winans being an accepted medium at camps, and having been considered a wonder, is entirely irrelevant to this issue. If he employed fraudulent means in one instance, it may be presumed that he did in all, but it is only presumption, for each seance rests on its own evidential tests. He may never have "assisted" before.

That he is now giving seances, is also to be ruled out. These seances may, or may not be under test conditions.

He has the privilege of coming forward and vindicating himself. He could, if genuine, silence criticism by a single seance, and the voluminous defense by Judge Dunn would be uncalled for.

Even if, as is suggested, finding himself so weak and prostrated, he for that time, "helped the spirits," it would be overshadowed by the unequivocal manifestations. In closing I would not be understood as making this or my former reply to Judge Dunn as especially bearing on the exposure of Winans.

It was his implication that all mediums thus assisted, and his apology for the fraudulent practice and the perpetrators, that called out my responses. The defense of the Judge, if allowed to go unquestioned, would be the hardest blow ever given the cause of Spiritualism, by friend or enemy.

THE BODY IMMORTAL.

Professor A. P. Matthews of the University of Chicago, Argues That It Is Possible—Life Is Dependent on Continued Reaction—Cessation of Reaction Real Cause of Death.

Scientists will make human life immortal if the conclusions reached by Professor A. P. Matthews of the Physiology Department of the University of Chicago are correct. In an article which will appear in the July number of "The World Today," on "What Is Hope," the great physiologist declares that death does not occur with the cessation of respiration or when the heart ceases to beat.

In a scientific discussion of the causes of death Dr. Matthews asserts that life is dependent on certain chemical reactions in the cells; that these chemical reactions result in the formation of certain particles which are formed from foodstuffs, that death is a result of the discontinuance of these chemical reactions; and that under proper conditions the necessary reactions may be made perpetual and hence the life of man become immortal.

Dr. Matthews' Argument.

Professor Matthews says:

"What happens to the body at death? In the first place there is no definite moment of death. We all are gradually dying for years. The moment which is ordinarily ascribed to death is when the breathing stops, but this is purely arbitrary and the survival of an old belief that life was drawn in in the breath and the soul passed out with the breath.

"The heart may continue to beat many minutes in animals under experimental conditions after respiration has stopped; the muscles are still irritable; the nerves are still able to carry nervous impulses. But while the cessation respiration can not be called death, it is the cause of it, because the body can not live without air; the heart stops beating, and the tissues die of suffocation.

When Does a Man Die?

"We can not answer this question, When does a man die? If we mean by a man his body, he dies piecemeal, one organ after another; if we mean the man's personality, this eventually disappears when he loses consciousness and from this point of view he may be said to die when he falls into a deep slumber, certainly when he is anesthetized.

"At the basis of all the phenomena of life there is one fundamental reaction, that of breathing. Living matter as long as it is alive breathes. Anything which affects this respiration affects the cell in all its other functions. Respiration may conservatively be said to be the fundamental process of living matter. Practically all other functions, such as growth, depend upon it.

"If an alcoholic solution of benzophenone is exposed to the sunlight the alcohol is partly decomposed, water is split from it and ethylidenic particles are formed. There is some substance in living matter which breaks up like alcohol, liberating active particles like ethylidene. Whatever the nature of these particles may be it is known that they are constantly renewed by foods.

Death a Cessation of Reaction.

"Death is the result of the cessation of this reaction and is caused either by a cessation of supply of the raw materials from which the particles came or a change in the reaction in the cell from alkaline to acid. It will be seen that death involves no loss of substance; nothing in fact but a trifling change in the nature of the chemical compounds present is necessary to change living into lifeless or lifeless into living. The endeavor is now being made in many laboratories to discover what substance it is which thus acts on water and carries on the respiration in the cells.

"We may now discuss the death of the body from this point of view. It will be seen that life in the body depends upon the continuance of this reaction in all the tissues. Now, this reaction, under perfect conditions, should continue indefinitely and so render the human body immortal. Unfortunately, however, it does not continue. It is the keen desire of all to find out why it does not continue and to change conditions so that it will continue as long as possible.

Causes of the Cessation.

"The chief causes of its cessation may be divided into obviously extrinsic and apparently intrinsic causes. The obvious external causes are the ordinary causes of death. Accidents, assaults, the taking of poison and the action of disease germs—these causes of death are relatively easily removed. They will be removed for the most part in the near future.

"There will remain the apparently intrinsic causes of death. These are chiefly two: Improper feeding and incomplete excretion.

"As we are not yet familiar with the chemical processes going on in the different tissues, we do not know exactly what they need for food and in what amount. A true science of dietetics is now being formed. Until we know exactly what different tissues need we must continue to give one tissue too much, too little or not quite the right food. The result is that in the tissue the fundamental reaction ultimately stops. This incidentally ruins all the rest of the body. Death may be caused, for example, by the accumulation of too much calcium, in the walls of the blood vessels when all the rest of the tissues are intrinsically healthy.

"The second intrinsic cause of death is incomplete excretion. This defect can be remedied in part by a proper and not an exaggerated diet. It is in any case, in my opinion, not so important a cause of death as improper diet, for the reason that large accumulations of waste products are necessary to bring this reaction to a close."

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS.

A Reminiscence of Lita Barney Sayles.

It is more than ten years ago since the spirit of Lita Barney Sayles, poet, essayist and, I think, a spiritual medium (but am not sure), passed out of the body into higher fields of vision. As a worker for the advancement of women, I made her acquaintance in Boston when I was assisting Mr. Underwood in editorial work on the Free Religious Index, to which she contributed various poems and articles, and from that time to her death we were friends and correspondents. She was a yearly visitor to various Spiritualist campmeetings, and there must be many among your subscribers who still remember her charming personality and bright wit. Though she lived long enough to read my first "open confession" of my change of view from agnosticism to belief in spirit return, yet in the first years of our friendship I was still a doubter, and in many conversations with her in Boston when she called on us, and in her friendly letters to me on literary and other subjects, she often expressed her regret at my lack of faith, but prophesied that I would not die without the knowledge which finally came to me.

In destroying many old letters and documents the other day, I came across some of her letters in which she declared her own faith, and it occurred to me that it might be of interest to some of her old friends if I sent you a bit of these private lectures to me.

"My Dear, I wish you had a knowledge of the endlessness of life, but I am not going again into that question. Suffice it to say that it is a never-failing consolation, when we see our own shortcomings, and the years gliding by in which to make reparation for them—to know that there is no end, and what in our blindness and malformation we fail to accomplish here, we may hope to be able to do later on. You will be free to acknowledge the beauty and desireableness of the picture, my dear friend, but if you knew it to be true wouldn't your soul shout triumphant peans—as mine does? This is what your condition will be, and you will be so overjoyed to tell me, whether I am in or out of the body—and I shall be so glad to congratulate you on your happy disappointment."

"Don't you remember in the poem of mine you praised, 'The Voice of the Morning,' there is a line, 'And hope is the voice of the morning?' It has been the voice continually cheering me on through life, and strange as it may seem to you, looking upon my happy exterior, it has been needed. Hope is our comforter and stay here, and it is a quality belonging to the ego, and reaches over the boundaries of time and takes hold of the eternities. It is often but there that we may look for it."

"It is lovely in you to thus find pleasure in others' comfort while uncomforted yourself in non-belief. It shows what a good, broad catholic soul you have, and it is too good to be annihilated, or to be resolved into the ocean of spirit. It has its own individualization, and I have no more apprehension of its cessation of conscious existence than I have of my own. Sometime you, to your soul's satisfaction, will awake from the sleep called death, to such a delightful sense of larger life as you do not yet dream of."

"You say you should think one of the best uses my spirit friends could be put to would be to come and whisper gently in my ears the thoughts my friends were wishing to write me. Now, would you think that would be the best use I could put you to, either in or out of the body? You are my spirit friend now, as much as you ever will be. But the use I would put you to would be to tell me your own thoughts, and your love and interest in my welfare—just as you often do. I wish no different use for you now, why should I when you have passed over the river, and by dint of exertion upon your part have succeeded in impressing some medium with the fact that you are present with me. Nay, I will then say, use what time you can hold, to give me your own kind thoughts and tell me of your own happy home in the beyond, and how you have changed in your conclusions, and what a happy change, to find yourself in existence still, and with no more death to look forward to. Meantime the life that you and others of our liberal-minded friends who do hold themselves in doubt but are ready for proofs—are living, is a good preparation for the continuation of life; good foundation stones are being put in for the by-and-by erection of the eternal house."

"Ah! my friend, the 'I'—the individual is intact within these shells we throw off at death; if there were no other proof, it seems to me the simple expression of 'my body' would go very far toward establishing strong circumstantial evidence. The term declares an ownership of the body—and this again an owner—and the owner is who I am, and who you are."

"I am not ready to explain just how the various phenomena of Spiritualism are performed. We do not yet know sufficiently about these powers to properly discriminate; I do not believe in attributing to a supra-mundane power effects for which we can well account by mundane capabilities. We as Spiritualists need the analyzing habit of the philosophical Free Religionist to assist us to clear conclusions. I am half a non-immortalist, but I hardly think you will comprehend what I mean by that term, as your mind has not been turned in that direction, it is likely."

After the publication of our first article on 'Psychic Experiences' in the Arena Magazine, Mrs. Sayles, though then in poor health, wrote me a long letter of loving congratulation of which the following is a part:

"I have always had perfect confidence in the dear friendship of yourself and husband, and shall have, if no other word ever comes to me. I have wanted to write you so much since you 'found your Savior.' My heart went out to welcome you into the fold of those who have added knowledge to their possessions. * * * I am so very happy that you have the proof in your own hands that 'if a man die he shall live again.' I wish I could see you both and talk over these things. I am almost afraid the leisure time of which you speak will only come to us after we have put off the shell, but to us that is only the continuation of this life, and good to look forward to. How good to have this expectation and to know that life is eternal and that there we will take no note of time as we are forced to here. Come to us when you can, either in spirit or letter, or in person."

Shortly after this letter was written came the news of our friend's transition. Much as I once used to like to write, I find in these later days that it comes as a task, but today, when lying down to rest it suddenly came to me as a strong impression to put in form these excerpts, put aside some time ago—and I send it to The Progressive Thinker as a voice from Lita Barney Sayles, from the unseen.

"WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

Another Exposition by a Believer in Pope's Couplet.

The oft-quoted saying of Pope, "One truth is clear, whatever is, is right," cannot fail to be accepted as an absolute truth by analyzing it in its universal application.

In the evolution of worlds, countries, states or individuals, there are cataclysms of one, revolutions and wars of another, and dire experiences of the individual, necessitated to bring about higher possibilities by growth.

Worlds in their growth disregard the lives of plants, animals and men, they simply act out the force within. In their growth, giant forests have lived and died; they have fallen where they grew, and buried beneath water and mountains where they have formed our coal beds. Then later through the cooling of the earth crust and expansion from within, a burning lava flow has burned out many of such coal formations and incinerated millions of smaller animal species, which nature itself had caused to grow. Nature was destroying while it was building. Cannibals unlearned in modern ethics consumed, and do to-day consume people born and formed like themselves; cyclones and storms devastate forests, towns and villages and kill their inhabitants. They do not pass by the noblest trees because they are straight, nor the dwellings, even if the Semitic rites of bedaubing their door frames with lamb's blood is resorted to or a horseshoe placed over the door. No; the lives of men, the destruction of forests or of entire continents is not regarded in world building. After millions of tiny flowers, verdant forests and plains, stocked with hordes of animals, had made the earth seem glad, glacial epochs buried it all thousands of feet beneath this roaring mass. All for a purpose, and that purpose, world building!

Up through the slimy silurian mass, the growth of our rock strata, the births of higher animals and birds, this tiny earth ever evolved something higher, regardless of every opposition or destruction of plant or animal life. Higher species would appear with vertebrates and brain after every cataclysm, and often they would fare no better. After the life of savagery, higher species were evolved, but wars of conquest and jealousy, not yet outgrown, cost millions of lives; but still the earth was building better, greater and grander. Communities, nations and factions were formed later, but flesh-eating man had inherited barbaric traits, jealousy, aggressiveness, greed, and still later, conceit, which had to be acted out until outgrown. Jealousy and greed became the main cause of theft and other crimes, while higher moral ethics had to be taught after a state of civilization had been reached.

Let us analyze the first. Has any sane man ever felt happier after doing wrong? Has he, after voluntarily having committed a wrong act, compared the state of his feelings to when he has done a noble and heroic act, without thinking that it does not pay to do wrong? Has any man, even debased and brutal, ever felt happier after committing a wrong act? Now for the second question which is more serious, and is well worth considering by every thinking man, namely, If whatever is, is right, what object is there in right doing?"

Man's primal object in life in all ages is and has been for happiness and contentment. The man who has lent a charitable hand to a needy man or animal, or given an encouraging word to a struggling mortal, or the touch of sympathy in the house of sorrow, knows what happiness is. Hence the inborn tendency proves to be in right doing, which kind nature has instilled in every mortal man.

"But, if whatever is, is right, the world would progress without my assistance," the unthinking may say; his answer would be that the same law that builds worlds and causes man to be, prompts teachers to teach and thinkers to think, and neither would be contented or happy without following out their destiny's promptings.

In individual instances, cases of immoral and criminal acts may not seem to be termed right, but kind nature in world building has stunted trees in every forest, crippled animals, and men crippled and deformed in body and brain, halcyon days and dark and stormy nights, while there is no such a thing as an accident, literally, in nature. The whole universe seeks an equilibrium, and neither justice nor accident is known in world building. All effects have their causes, and "Whatever is, is right."

Was it right to preach an exaggerated idea about hell torments for the ones termed wicked and sinful? Yes; it scared the ignorant into moral living, who by degrees and continual abstinence from their former course might grow into right doing. Was it right to form creeds and clans? Yes, for by so doing brotherly feelings were inculcated between themselves, and many of one clan were affiliating with other clans, and said many would in consequence be fraternal to both; and in time all of these clans would work for two certain objects; first, toleration, and secondly, towards a Universal Brotherhood.

In our daily lives we often complain about unfavorable conditions. We see men wealthier and more favored than we are; we see unworthy men in power, and better men in jail. Are we right in allowing such feelings to appear? Yes, they are unavoidable as long as our aspirations are upward and jealousy not outgrown. But, remember what Napoleon and others have said, "To him where much power is given, of him much is required," and for every inch of freedom and opportunity given to man an equal quota of responsibility is attached thereto. And whenever our destiny's flat urges us onward and our position at times is menial, and the apex towards which we aimed failed to be reached, let us remember the sayings of Pope, "Honor and shame from no conditions rise; act well your part, there all honor lies."

If wandering comets should ever touch our little planet or aerolitic torrents disturb our atmosphere, would that be called accidental? If storm-tossed waves should should bear upon its billows too frail crafts to withstand the blast; if human lives should be too frail to withstand poisonous gases or injurious nutriments or blasting wind-swept malaria, would that be accident? No, these are but effects from natural causes, and in world building it is but part of its history. In earlier ages when savage man died of hunger, fearing the wild beasts about his hovel, and his escape barred to hunt for food, was said savage cursed by any of the ancient or modern gods, or was it ill luck or accident. It was neither. No, that also was part of this world's history in its evolution. Finally, if clouds seem dark and our experience becomes nearly unbearable, remember that every experience we have is to bring out our inert possibility and to test our selfhood for our own good; and every mortal will then acknowledge, by universal application, that "Whatever is, is right."

Compensation.

Compensation is a general law of Nature—a quid pro quo—a sort of arithmetical rule of three, where, given the ratio of the first terms, that of the last follows inevitably as effect follows cause.

"Straight through my heart this fact to-day
By Truth's own hand is driven:
God never takes one thing away
But something else is given.

I thought it only happened so;
But Time this truth has taught me—
No least thing from my life can go
But something else is brought me.

It is the Law, complete, sublime:
And now, with Faith unshaken.
In patience I but bide my time
When any joy is taken."

We see this law in all the works of Nature, in the structure and growth of plants, flowers, trees, and in the organization of animals. (See Paley's Natl. Theology.) So, too, in the starry heavens, of which the milky way seems to be the great balance wheel with the mighty Sirius as center.

In our own solar system we see this law in operation. It would not do to have Vulcan or Mercury as large as Jupiter. There would be discord throughout the whole system instead of harmony—"a crash of worlds."

Although Sirius is, to us, the greatest of stars, yet, in the southwestern heavens invisible to the unaided eye, there are clusters of Siriuses, so far from us that light traveling 192,000 miles in a minute, or, single beat of the pulse has been more than 30,000,000 of years in reaching our earth! This thought of the immensity of space completely overwhelms us.

O Thought! How wonderful thou art!
The world is full of thee,
Mysterious act of consciousness
We feel but cannot see.

With swiftest flight, outstripping Light,
Thou canst fly oh, so far!
From earth through realms of boundless space
To the remotest star.

This law of compensation we see in art as well as in nature, in contrast of light and shade in the contrast of colors. Music, even has two expressions, sadness and gayety. "Every dark cloud has a silver lining."

As in the physical world so in the intellectual and moral.

M. Victor Cousin, one of the most famous philosophers of France, says that we cannot do a wrong or wicked deed, utter a bad word or sentence, or cherish a vicious sentiment, but we must pay the penalty, sooner or later, here or hereafter—a law of iron and of brass. See his lecture on The True, Beautiful and Good.

Yes, we have to pay for all we get in this world. We are using, to an almost unlimited extent some of nature's most mighty and mysterious forces—take care!

Thousands are killed every year by railroad accidents and the explosion of dynamite. In thunder tones nature demands compensation, "recompense."

Even in thought and emanation this law holds good. We are sad to-day, gay to-morrow. "O, woman! thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear"—Byron says. We cannot help thinking either sorrowfully or joyously, How powerful is thought! To the surprise of psychologists and metaphysicians, Laura Bridgeman born deaf, dumb and blind, still could think. J. LACK OF CHRISTIAN CHARITY.

"Blessed Are the Merciful for They Shall Obtain Mercy."

In latter-day times, where church bells chime,
And God rains benefits down,
A person late lived, famed for her smiles,
While her kindness had won her renown.
All sought her as friend, none did pretend
She was aught but an angel in womanly gown.

But alas! for a day that once came her way—
A day she ever after deplored,
Her name once darkened, was darkened for aye,
And life was a burden, and more:
Now where were her friends? Most did contend
She should be treated as naught, evermore.

Then, oh, the despair! the awful despair
That urged her to seek a suicide's sin:
But one who was not so unfair,
Promised help the old life to re-win;
So beginning anew with effort true,
The rest of her days knew not sin.

But "alas for the rarity of Christian charity,"
Very little of it turned her way.
Grieving o'er the heartless barbarity
Of friends—Christian (?) by the way—
She sank to rest—as do some of earth's best,
Under the mantle of Christ's greater charity.

Peacefully rest—wounded one, rest—
"More sinned against than sinning";
The Merciful One knoweth the merciful,
And yet giveth His promise its inning:
More pity the good—who think they are so good—
They are forever another's one error flinging.

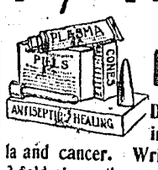
EVERY DAY.



Fill each day with gladsome works,
And lightly touch each welcome task,
As sure that in its grayness lurks
The soul of all the gifts you ask,
The angel of Content, who sings
And, smiling, tints Joy's rainbow wings
And bids him forth each sunny morn
To show the world that light is born.

A tear might weigh him down, a sigh
Might still her song till Life goes by;
A careless, sullen, vengeful clasp
Might crush the angel in your grasp.
Then lightly bear your share, my boy,
Work out this glorious life-long play,
And you shall feel the wings of Joy
And sing the song of Every Day.

A Trenchant Analysis.

Spiritualism as an Organic Movement Carefully Analyzed, Its Errors Pointed out, and Methods Given Whereby It Can Advance to a Higher plane of Spirituality and Usefulness.

If frankness is a virtue, and "The truth at all hazards" a good motto, I know the reader will pardon me if in this article I am a little more frank than usual and tell some facts that are not altogether agreeable and cheering. My theme is one that is seldom given much thought by the lay Spiritualist; and it pains me to say that from a somewhat limited experience I am of the opinion that among the officers of some Spiritualist societies there is also a woeful ignorance and lack of agreement concerning the fundamental principles of successful organization and the proper method of conducting a Spiritualist meeting.

If the conditions I see fit to call attention to are unpleasant and painful to some, I offer no apology in presenting them for your consideration. They are just as disagreeable when endured in silence as when we discuss them openly and counsel one with another. And as for laying bare the sore spots of error and inharmony that afflict Spiritualism, why, that must necessarily be done before we can apply the antiseptic and curative ointment of knowledge, and restore again to harmony and health.

Anticipating a possible objection, I wish to remark that this subject is not one that is of interest only to a narrow circle of readers, but is instead one that should appeal to every thinking Spiritualist. Now alone officers and prospective officers of societies should give attention to this topic, but the members who help place the officers in power must have a working knowledge of the question, that they may be able to select those who have the necessary talent for leadership. It is of vital moment that the question of the proper management of societies receive consideration and be correctly solved, if organized Spiritualism is to endure and prosper and remain a potent factor in the advancement of truth and right and the progress of humanity.

So saying, let me without more ado plunge at once into the heart of the subject by calling attention to some significant words in the last annual report of Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., as follows:

"In some communities public interest in Spiritualism has decreased to an alarming degree, owing to improper management of local meetings, or to the exposure of some arrant counterfeiter of mediumship * * Indifference has crept in, and it has seemed next to impossible to bring home to the hearts of our people any sense of the obligations they are under to their religion, or to organization in Spiritualism * * Indecision, self-satisfaction and kindred ills have crept into our ranks and have suddenly made themselves felt in the local and state organizations, also in regard to the movement as a whole."

Practically all these evils of which Mr. Barrett complains are "owing to improper management of local meetings," even to a large extent, the widespread and derogatory work of the frauds. The only reason that the tricksters have gained such a strong and almost impregnable position is because there has been a lack of intelligent co-operation among true advocates of the cause and especially among the officers of the different societies throughout the country. There has been a lack of discrimination between fraudulent and genuine mediumship. Often those who are in league with the tricksters are employed in preference to genuine workers, because their ways are affectedly sincere and conscientious and so many, many of those in position to foil their plans are unable to see through the thin veneer of respectability that is worn. So the fakes prosper at the expense of genuine mediums because of inharmony and lack of co-operation among societies, due to incompetency on the part of those in control.

Incompetent and worse than useless speakers and undeveloped mediums, or pretended mediums, are before the public only because the societies that hire them are poorly managed. The officers of the various societies throughout the country should endeavor to keep each other informed of the identity and movements of those who, because they are frauds, or for other reasons, do not give satisfactory service. There is a vast and growing number of speakers and so-called mediums now clinging to Spiritualism, who are a curse to the cause; the speakers because of their inane and driveling talk, the preposterous ideas, the doctrines which they attempt to inculcate that are radically opposed to every sensible and essential teaching of Spiritualism; the undeveloped and unauthentic mediums for very much the same reasons, except that their influence is ever stronger and proportionately more pernicious. Some method should be devised to get rid of these hangers on to Spiritualism, and the only way it can be done is by having a system to withstand them as perfect and effective as the one by which they have gained their present hold on the cause.

If I may be allowed to offer a suggestion it seems to me that the N. S. A. should exercise greater caution in dealing out ordination papers; there should be a more thorough investigation of the character and ability of the applicant. There are a great many individuals who are ordained ministers of Spiritualism and no more worthy of the honor nor capable of fulfilling the obligations it implies, than ——(well, you furnish the simile, I can't—or won't).

To be ordained as a Spiritualist minister should mean that, if a medium, a rigid test as to habits and genuineness; if a lecturer, a thorough investigation as to character and ability, has been passed. At present, as every observing Spiritualist knows, it means far less than this. The N. S. A. has done and is doing good work—indispensable work—and this little word of criticism is not offered in a hostile mood; I speak as a staunch friend of the National Association; but I see danger in the lack of adequate restrictions to maintain a high degree of efficiency among our workers and would urge that greater care be exercised in this respect. It is better to make but few ordinations, and be sure of a high order of excellence, than have several times as many, the greater share of whom are not competent.

There are very few Spiritualists who realize that the primary cause of incompetency and mismanagement in their local societies is their own negligence; yet that such is the case a mere superficial consideration of the question will show. Before you criticise the acts of the officials of your society consider who placed them in office. (I am now assuming that you reside within reasonable distance of a society and are a member of it; for if there is a society within half a score of miles, and you have not become a member of it, I want you to lay down this paper and read no further until your name is placed upon the roll and your shoulder to the wheel. If you claim to be a Spiritualist and yet fail to give organized Spiritualism your support, one of three things is true; either conditions beyond your control prevent you from carrying out your wishes, or you do not understand your duty, or else you are not what you pretend to be).

There are a great many citizens of this country who seldom if ever cast their vote when election day comes around, yet they spend a goodly portion of their time criticising whatever party happens to be in power. They remind me of a certain class of Spiritualists who rarely vote when they have the opportunity, yet who are continually finding fault with the way in which the meetings are managed.

And merely to vote is not enough. You need to discriminate; to weigh carefully the merits and demerits of each candidate; to be unbiased by friendships, and uninfluenced by the preferences of others; to be firm, albeit open to reason, to discard from mind every consideration but that of securing the best possible person for each place. Above all, let me emphasize the need of not letting friendship stand in the way of impartial judgment. If you think your personal friends are able, all right; but before you try to put anyone in office you should be quite certain that they possess executive ability. Don't forget that suave and agreeable ways do not always imply a good official and that executive ability should be esteemed most important.

If Spiritualists in electing the officers who are to represent them would be a little more painstaking, if they were more independent in thought and action, having opinions and not afraid to voice them fearlessly, and above all, if they would consider merit only and be unmoved by prejudice, there would be a better class of officers at the heads of our societies, with the consequence that organized Spiritualism would be in no danger of a decline, but would instead be flourishing and rapidly gaining ground.

Let it therefore be distinctly understood that any criticism I may make of the management of societies or the character of officials is primarily a criticism of those who by lack of interest or of discrimination helped place the presiding officers in power.

But the election must be conducted properly if a true expression of opinion is desired. I wish to register a protest against all those methods meant to take the place of the secret ballot. If you cast your vote by upraised hand, or if it is necessary to rise to your feet to be counted for or against a certain candidate—methods frequently practiced—you do not always feel disposed to express your inmost thoughts. The same arguments that make the secret ballot desirable at a general election prove the necessity for it at an election of officers for a Spiritualist society. Suppose, for instance, a certain close friend of yours desires a certain office. He, of course, desires your vote, yet you know he is not fitted for the place and that there are others present better qualified to give efficient service. If you had to vote openly you would not wish to offend by voting against your acquaintance. Given a chance to vote without subjecting yourself to the gaze of all those present, and you would be unembarrassed and better able to vote for the best man, without considering the claims of friendship.

I, for one, know that I can make a better selection when not influenced by the thought of what a friend will think of my opposition to him. There never will be a true expression of opinion except by secret ballot; and if those in power refuse to accede to a request for the use of this method they acknowledge that they are afraid it will result in their downfall. And if there is anything we should discourage it is election by acclamation. A diversity of opinion and a multiplicity of candidates should be encouraged as much as possible. I have in mind an instance where the election was made such a farce that it was nothing short of ludicrous. One of the members arose and said:

"Now, the present officers of this society have given satisfactory service; I see no need to make any change; and I move you that the old officers, one and all, be re-elected."

This evidently suited the old officials. The motion was seconded and put to a vote.

"Those who are in favor of the brother's motion," said the chairman, "will please rise to their feet."

Several arose.

Now those who stand opposed to it, manifest in like manner."

No one moved.

"The motion is carried."

Yet it was not a true expression of opinion. There were many present who disliked the old officers and disapproved of their policy; but there was none who desired to take the initiative. Had there been a secret vote it is doubtful if the motion would have carried; in fact, there is every indication that it would not.

The persons elected to stand at the head of a society should be men of talent, and well liked by practically all who attend. They must not exhibit any animosity toward those persons whom they dislike, no matter how deserving of censure they may be; for there is nothing that will disrupt a society quicker than lack of tact on the part of those in charge. They must, withal, be firm, and see that the wishes of a few obstreperous individuals do not prevail when the silent, undemonstrative majority stands opposed to them. Every suggestion from members or others should be kindly received and given careful attention, and the free expression of opinions should be encouraged; and the failure to give attention to such suggestions and complaints as are presented, or to make the members feel that their advice is desired and appreciated—in other words, the desire of a few selfconceited leaders to control and do as they please regardless of the wishes of the majority—is one of the principal reasons why some Spiritualist meetings are so illy supported. The election of officers who are domineering and not amenable to reason will result in the failure or disruption of any society, no matter how prosperous it may be.

If the wishes of the members are disregarded, if speakers are engaged who are distasteful to the majority, if objections are overruled, the consequent dissatisfaction may be expected to end in the withdrawal of support and possibly the starting of another society. And this, I will venture to say, is the cause of the existence of several societies in a city capable of properly supporting only half as many. It is true that two or three societies, working harmoniously together, often may do more effective work than if they were combined into one; but where one society is pitted against another and ill-feeling exists between them as is often the case, I cannot help wondering if it were not better that they lay aside petty differences, and while not amalgamating, at least work together harmoniously. One prosperous, energetic, harmonious society may do more good than several of the opposite kind.

If there is anywhere on earth a scene calculated to bring tears to the eyes of angels, it is the existence of an improperly managed, poorly attended society where under proper management there might be built a society that would be a credit to Spiritualism and a benefit to the city in which it is located.

Where those in charge make a stupendous mistake is in failing to take the members into their confidence. There should be no attempt at secrecy. Members should be kept informed concerning plans for the future. Board meetings should seldom be held behind locked doors, but generally should be open to any member who is interested; and members should be asked to take an active interest in the board meetings and make any suggestions or criticisms or complaints that they see fit. The members must be made to feel that they are not mere nonentities, but that they are integral and indispensable parts of the society, that their wishes will be respected, that their co-operation is desired, their support appreciated.

Where the officers arrogate to themselves to right to make their plans without consulting with the members we are generally furnished sooner or later with another illustration of the fact that it is only a short step from self-sufficiency to self-conceit. Attendants begin to feel that the society cares nothing for them except for the financial support they give, hold themselves aloof, and lose interest. Next in order is a wail that "there is a lack of enthusiasm" and that "Spiritualism is on the decline," where there are just as many loyal Spiritualists as ever, only they have become disgusted with the way matters are run and go where things are more congenial. If leaders would try less to please themselves, and more to please their constituents, there would be no semblance of a decline in Spiritualism.

If I were asked as to what I believed to be the greatest blunder that a society could make, I think I should answer that it is the failure to provide lecturers of high average ability, and the following of a speaker who is eloquent and logical by another who is deficient in these points. It is a great deal easier to tear down a society than it is to upbuild one. A good lecturer may work steadily and efficiently for a year or more and build up a society so that it is prospering and enjoying a large attendance. A speaker then may be hired who has little or no ability, and in one short month all the progress resulting from a year of able labor may be swept away. The attendance dwindles, the society suffers financially, and though another first-class speaker then be hired, the work of upbuilding must begin again from the bottom, and months may lengthen into years before the lost ground is regained, if ever it can be regained. The moral is clear: When you get a lecturer who gives efficient and wholly satisfactory service, do not make a change unless you cannot avoid it, or until you have someone equally able to fill the vacancy.

If you have no settled speaker, you should see that those you want to serve you are engaged at least six months or a year ahead. It is thus possible to secure high grade talent, while to delay until almost the last moment means, as a general rule, that the better class of speakers have been procured by those societies that are wide-awake and quick to take advantage of their opportunities, with the result that it is often necessary to be satisfied with those of mediocre ability. "Eternal vigilance is the price of success"—in a Spiritualist society as elsewhere.

It should also be remembered that the public meeting should be used principally for the presentation of the philosophy, that it is difficult to give genuine spirit phenomena under the conditions that usually prevail in a public hall, and that the home circle is essentially the place for the presentation of the proof that Spiritualism offers. It is perhaps well to have the phenomena in our halls, but they should not be presented to the exclusion of other work, for there should always be some philosophy presented to make clear the meaning of the mediumistic truths that are given. Those who care only for the phenomena, and do not appreciate well-presented philosophy, are never the ones who take an active interest in organized Spiritualism; and the society which caters more to the phenomena than the philosophy will never enjoy the permanent existence of the one that depends mostly on sound, well-presented philosophy to maintain its position.

Spiritualism can stand alone. There is no need to embellish its mediumistic and philosophic truths with any of the ceremonies and superstitions culled from other religions. There should be no servile imitating of churchly rites. The habiliments and vestures of priestcraft should not be dragged into Spiritualism (I have in mind instances where this is being done literally) for to do so exposes Spiritualism to ridicule and is ruinous to the society that attempts it. Ours is a modern religion that looks to the future, not the past, and what we present should not be emblematic of superstition but of enlightenment. Let Spiritualism be presented ungarnished by anything except plain common sense.

The importance of having good music needs also to be emphasized. Harsh, discordant and untrained voices singing to the accompaniment of a parody on music on a piano or organ out of tune can very easily destroy any favorable impression made by an able lecture. A meeting never seems complete and satisfactory unless there is music and of a high quality. The officers of some of our spiritual societies might with benefit consider the importance with which this part of the program is regarded in the better class of churches. Certain it is that a stronger effort should be made to have creditable music at our meetings. Care should also be taken in regard to the sentiments thus expressed. There is plenty of good music expressing the truths we advocate, and the use of orthodox hymns promulgating orthodox errors is entirely unjustifiable in a Spiritualist meeting.

GOSPEL OF GOOD CHEER.

A Sermon That Strikes a Responsive Key-Note.

"Be not anxious for your life."—Luke xii., 22.

The great Teacher does not say that we are not to be thoughtful, be provident; but he insists that no event can be provided for by anxiety, by fretting over it before it comes. Half the people on our streets look as though life was a sorry business. It is hard to find a good looking man or woman. Worry is the cause of their woe-begone appearance. Worry makes the wrinkles; worry cuts the deep, down-glancing lines on the face; worry is the worst disease of our modern times.

Care is contagious; it is hard work being cheerful at a funeral, and it is a good deal harder to keep the frown from your face when you are in the throng of the worry-worn ones. Yet, we have no right to be dispensers of gloom; no matter how heavy our loads may seem to be we have no right to throw their burden on others nor even to cast the shadow of them on other hearts.

Anxiety is instability. Fret steals away force. He who dreads tomorrow trembles today. Worry is weakness. The successful men may be always wide awake, but they never worry. Fret and fear are like fine sand thrown into life's delicate mechanism; they cause more than half the friction; they steal half the power.

Cheer is strength. Nothing is so well done as that which is done heartily, and nothing is so heartily done as that which is done happily. Be happy, is an injunction not impossible of fulfillment. Pleasure may be an accident; but happiness comes in definite ways. It is the casting out of our foolish fears that we may have room for a few of our common joys. It is the telling our worries to wait until we get through appreciating our blessings. Take a deep breath, raise your chest, lift your eyes from the ground, look up and think how many things you have for which to be grateful and you will find a smile growing where one may long have been unknown.

Take the right kind of thought—for to take no thought would be sin—but take the calm, unanxious thought of your business, your duties, your difficulties, your disappointments, and all the things that once have caused you fear and you will find yourself laughing at most of them. In some you will see but friends in disguise, and in others puny foes decked out as giants. But begin to dread them, brood over them, look at them with eyes prejudiced with fear, and the least difficulties rise like mountains. In winter some people worry themselves into malaria over the mosquitoes they may meet next summer.

Coming events cast their shadows before; they cast their sunshine, too, if we look at them aright. As a strong man rejoices to run a race, as a young man anticipates with joy the coming struggle, so does the brave heart face tomorrow, not only without fear but even with gladness.

Mistaken ideas of religion are responsible for a great many of the unnecessary wrinkles on the human face. Too many have thought it would be impossible to be happy in two worlds, and so, having selected happiness in the one which they thought would last the longest, they have no choice but to be unhappy in this one. In fact, some seem to suppose that the greater their misery here the more intense will their bliss be there. If heaven is to be bought that way certainly many are paying full price for it.

Burdens we all must bear, but they need not break us. Sorrows we all must share; but they need not unmake us. They will not if we have learned the Teacher's secret of living; he, the man of sorrows, was the man who could bequeath to his friends his joy. To him life lost its anxiety, because the chief things of life were not food or raiment, or even social standing, but manhood and unselfishness to men, and the possibilities of these were as easily realized in need and adversity as in riches and prosperity.—Chicago Tribune.

THE SOCIAL EVIL.

Natural Laws Are Divine, and Are the Power in This Physical World, That Moves and Shapes All Things.

Much has been written of late under the title, "The Social Evil," by a great number of good people moved by a sincere desire to reform their fellow men. Whilst their various articles betray fine sentiment and a desire to improve humanity, natural law seems to have been overlooked. All human law that is in conflict with natural law cannot stand. Natural laws are divine, and are the power in this physical world that moves and shapes all things.

That part of human nature indicated as the "Social Evil" is the foundation of the intellectual faculties. Your house is composed of foundation and superstructure, and the superstructure cannot stand without a foundation to rest upon. In the faculties of the mind of the noblest and most refined ethical teacher of our race will be found on examination all the organs found in the brain of the various animal creatures that stand between his being and the lowest animal organism that is animate or possesses life. The faculties are divided into three classes: The intellectual or perceptive; the sentiments or emotions, and the animal propensities. To the first of these is assigned the anterior portion of the head; the second occupies the middle and upper, while the posterior region and the cerebellum are assigned to the third and lowest division. The last division constitutes the foundation of the first and second divisions, consequently preceded them and upon this foundation they were built, and there they must rest.

Man is composed of many organs and parts which combined constitutes the whole. When all the organs and parts of the human anatomy is works in harmony, nature blesses. No part can rest, all must work, and if working out of harmony the whole system is deranged and produces misery, wreck and destruction. Among the symptoms are nervous prostration, softening of the brain, a squeaking and rasping voice, heart failure and a general breaking down of the physical powers, including loss of memory. Nature's laws are inexorable, for every disobedience she inflicts a sure penalty. Now, to reform mankind by sentiment you must eliminate the animal from the spiritual. Can you do it? H. H. A Trenchant Letter From Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Dr. H. A. Cross, Chicago, Ill.:

My Dear Brother:—You have not for a moment thought that I have forgotten you, nor have you thought that I was neglecting you, for you know me too well for that, and further, delay is not necessarily neglect. During the last two or three weeks of my stay in England I was literally burdened with calls and callers, requests to lecture in halls or in private parlors, and I did not have time even to write to my best friends, and among those that I did not write to was your noble and worthy self.

Well, I spent about three months in England, Scotland and Wales, lecturing every Sunday, and generally twice of a Sunday, and sometimes two or three times per week. If I am popular, and if my services are in great demand nowhere else, they certainly are in England and Scotland.

I dislike to speak of myself, but thirty-seven years ago I delivered the first lecture (series of lectures on Sunday) ever given in Great Britain. There was then no organization. James Burns, a young Spiritualist, secured a hall for me. I lectured every Sunday evening for three or four months and they formed a fine society, and that society still lives and has a large membership, and from this old hive there have swarmed out 22 or 23 other swarms or societies, so the seed-sowing in those early days was not lost; and yet, I felt sad as I stood before this audience in the same place where I used to speak, to see so few familiar faces and so many strange ones. Those few workers have passed on and up to their reward, and when I think of myself, I feel to compare myself to an old oak standing on a hillside torn by cyclones, twisted by winds, battered by hurricanes and hailstones, and still standing and fighting, and fighting! Well, 'tis better to wear out than rust out.

I had a delightful passage home. The waters were quite calm, but even when they are rough I am never seasick. Only think, my table waiter in the steamer, John Knox, was born in Peebles—Peebleshire on the River Tweed, where my ancestors came from almost two hundred years ago.

I met many splendid people in the Old World, such as W. T. Stead of the "Review of Reviews," Mr. Loab, an official in the London City Council; Alfred R. Wallace, the great naturalist, scientist and Spiritualist, and many other distinguished men and women. I greatly enjoyed my trip down to Wales. I saw there an old castle, one they say is 600 years old. It was nearly in ruins.

There is much more enthusiasm in England and Scotland in the Spiritualist societies than there is in this country, and they have taken on what pleased me, more of a religious trend. In fact, they conduct their services like any other religious meeting. Sometimes they have readings or clairvoyant tests after the lecture, but generally before the lecture or during the week. They prefer to have the lecture stand upon its merits and leave its influence upon an audience. I think it a good plan, because after a lecture to have a medium occupy half or three-quarters of an hour in describing spirits, which descriptions are often not recognized, creates an unrest and dissatisfaction on the part of those who never get tests, and so they complain.

I send you to-day the last copy of the Banner of Light in which you will see the beginning of my lecture in London which was rejected by the Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain, because in the last portion of it I treated especially of Spiritualism. This Philosophical Society is made up of scientific men with a large sprinkling of clergymen, and the clergy "kicked," (to use a common phrase) about the paper being read, and this was almost a godsend, because if it had been read there before their members and put in their year-book, it would have had a comparatively small circulation, but I was invited to deliver it before the British Alliance of Spiritualists to an audience of 600, and it was put into print by the editor of the London Light, who published 3,000 copies, and sold the evening of my lecture 400 copies, so it will go all over Europe. And so the plans and schemes of men are often defeated.

My health is good, and I sincerely hope this hurriedly dictated letter will find yourself and your good wife enjoying health and happiness.

Very cordially yours,

J. M. PEEBLES.

AN IMPORTANT QUERY.

Who Will Pray for the Bears as the President Preys on Them?

Like our old friend Falstaff, Brother Bradford of the Illinois Legislature, is not only "witty himself, but the cause of the wit that there is in other men. Witness, for instance, the following, uttered during a late hunting tour of the President:

Prayer for Safety of President During Hunt.

"We invoke Thy choicest blessings upon our country at large. Bless the chief executive of this great nation personally and officially, and as he is soon to reach 'the happy hunting grounds' on which he has fixed his far-away gaze, and where the wild beasts abound—whether these monsters of the mountains flee from him in fear or fly at him in fury—may he find himself protected by the shield of the Almighty, so that upon his return to his home in peace and safety, like Thy servant David, of old, he can testify to the people that 'the Lord delivered him out of the paw of the lion and out of the paw of the bear, and let all the people praise Thee.' Amen and amen."—Prayer offered by Chaplain Bradford of the Illinois House of Representatives in Springfield, Ill.

Was a funnier petition ever sent up to the "Throne of Heavenly Grace?"

A professed follower of the meek and gentle Jesus, asking the "God of love" to especially watch over and protect one of His creatures while engaged in the "sport" of shooting to death others of His creatures, is so monumentally inconsistent as to be positively mirth-provoking.

When I read Brother Bradford's invocation I said to myself. "Who now will pray for the bears, deer and mountain lions?"

Brother Bradford calls them "monsters of the mountains." I have been wondering what they would call Bro. Bradford—if they could put their opinion into speech or print!

Surely, the theological biped would not strike them as being a very beautiful creature, praying, as he is, that those who are destroying them without cause, and just for the fun of the thing, may be given Heaven's protection while about their bloody business!

The "monsters of the mountains" are not troubling Brother Bradford, or the man for whom he is praying.

It is true that they kill things sometimes, but they do it only when they are hungry.

Murder is with them a grim necessity. They never deliberately leave their dens and stalk forth to kill things just for the fun that there may be in the bloody business.

With fang and claw they cause pain to other creatures, but they do it in order that they may live, and never for mere sport.

It would do Brother Bradford no harm to make just one more prayer, and I would suggest something like the following:

"O Lord, we beseech Thee to make Thy servant, and all men, more merciful in their feeling toward every living thing.

"Cleanse our hearts, we pray Thee, of the murderous instinct—of the brutal desire to kill things.

"Open our eyes, O thou loving One, to the beautiful truth that the beasts of the field, and even the monsters of the mountains, have some rights that we human beings are bound to respect.

"Amen and amen."

—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago Examiner.

IT IS VIVIDLY PORTRAYED

The Hell of a Guilty Conscience.

"I saw on the seashore a holy man who had been torn by a tiger. For a length of time he suffered much pain and was all along offering thanks to the Most High. I asked him: 'Why are you so grateful?' he answered: 'God be praised that I was overtaken by the tiger and not by sin."—The Gulistan of Sodi.

There are a great many things in the world [as set forth by Rev. Thomas Gregory in the Chicago Examiner] that are unpleasant, a great many things that are painful, but the only thing we need really to be afraid of is wrong-doing.

Nothing really serious can happen to the man who does right.

He may be torn by wild beasts or wild men; he may be called on to endure great physical sufferings; he may be robbed of health and wealth and friends, yes, and life itself; but in wounds and pain and sickness and poverty and death there is nothing dishonorable, nothing that affects the real self of a man.

All of these misfortunes have been borne by human beings with heroic fortitude, oftentimes with a sort of rapture. The sublimest pages in all history are those that are illumined by the brave, almost glad, fashion in which men and women have met the worst possible mental and physical pain.

It is not meant that these things are pleasant, they certainly are not; nor is it meant that we should go out of our way to invite them. All that we mean to say is this: That should they overtake us they will not be able to do us any real harm, since they can at most reach only the outer man—the Will and Conscience—untouched and undisturbed.

The only thing that is really able to get at a man and harm him, in the citadel of his being is Sin—the personal, voluntary, deliberate surrender of the will to that which is wrong.

This is what grand old Epictetus meant by saying: "It is not possible that a man can be disturbed or hindered by any other thing or person than himself. Why do I trouble myself about anything that can happen if I possess greatness of soul?."

Until one harms himself nothing else can harm him; and he cannot harm himself unless he deliberately and voluntarily lends himself to the doing of that which is wrong.

Take the case of the one-time banker, whose pitiful story is now going the rounds of the newspapers.

Seven years ago, according to his own pathetic confession, this man was doing a clean business in his little bank and was happy; but one day he deliberately put his hand into the till, took the people's money that had been intrusted to his keeping and ran away.

We know nothing of the man's experiences prior to the unfortunate day on which he became a sinner, but we will suppose, for the sake of the argument, that he had known many of the "ills that flesh is heir to," such as sickness, pains and aches; the loss of loved ones by death; financial difficulties; ill-treatment at the hands of his friends, together with numerous other trials and tribulations too numerous to mention.

But what of it? Those misfortunes—if it is a fact that he was called upon to endure them—were things that did not involve the manhood of the man or jeopardize the soul's integrity and peace. He was still a man. He still possessed the self-respect which, no matter what happens, is one's sure refuge from the storms of life.

But when he went back on himself, when he surrendered his will into the hands of evil—ah, God! then—then his real trouble began!

So long as one is at peace with himself he can stand his ground, no matter how hard pressed he may be; but when the divinity of one's own soul is insulted, when one's own conscience is aroused against himself—God pity that man!

The banker of whom mention has been made, so soon as he had taken hold of the money that did not belong to him, began running madly about the earth. He went to Canada, thinking to reach Europe with his ill-gotten gains, but the money "burned a hole in his conscience," and he had to give it up.

But the fire still burned, and he roamed wildly on, going to Australia and later on to Europe, trying to hide from himself, trying to find some hole into which he could crawl away from the outraged conscience that was lashing him with the scorpion stings of remorse.

For seven years the poor fellow endured the hell of his sin; but unable to stand it any longer, he came back home, back to the people he had wronged, back to the scenes that had known him as an honest, happy man, and, giving himself up, says to the court: "Do what you like with me, I shall be satisfied."

Satisfied? Yes! Anything is preferable to the blistering consciousness of an evil life.

Never mind about the trouble that others may make for you—you can bear that all right; but watch out—watch out for the trouble you may make for yourself by violating your own high sense of right!

ONLY ONE WAY.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light:
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Though the heel of the strong oppressor
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voices of fame with one acclaim
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning
And keep this motto in sight:
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his ranks are strong, if in the wrong
The battle is not yet done;
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

A Trenchant Analysis.

Spiritualism as an Organic Movement Carefully Analyzed, Its Errors Pointed out, and Methods Given Whereby It Can Advance to a Higher plane of Spirituality and Usefulness.

If frankness is a virtue, and "The truth at all hazards" a good motto, I know the reader will pardon me if in this article I am a little more frank than usual and tell some facts that are not altogether agreeable and cheering. My theme is one that is seldom given much thought by the lay Spiritualist; and it pains me to say that from a somewhat limited experience I am of the opinion that among the officers of some Spiritualist societies there is also a woeful ignorance and lack of agreement concerning the fundamental principles of successful organization and the proper method of conducting a Spiritualist meeting.

If the conditions I see fit to call attention to are unpleasant and painful to some, I offer no apolgy in presenting them for your consideration. They are just as disagreeable when endured in silence as when we discuss them openly and counsel one with another. And as for laying bare the sore spots of error and inharmony that afflict Spiritualism, why, that must necessarily be done before we can apply the antiseptic and curative ointment of knowledge, and restore again to harmony and health.

Anticipating a possible objection, I wish to remark that this subject is not one that is of interest only to a narrow circle of readers, but is instead one that should appeal to every thinking Spiritualist. Now alone officers and prospective officers of societies should give attention to this topic, but the members who help place the officers in power must have a working knowledge of the question, that they may be able to select those who have the necessary talent for leadership. It is of vital moment that the question of the proper management of societies receive consideration and be correctly solved, if organized Spiritualism is to endure and prosper and remain a potent factor in the advancement of truth and right and the progress of humanity.

So saying, let me without more ado plunge at once into the heart of the subject by calling attention to some significant words in the last annual report of Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., as follows:

"In some communities public interest in Spiritualism has decreased to an alarming degree, owing to improper management of local meetings, or to the exposure of some arrant counterfeiter of mediumship * * Indifference has crept in, and it has seemed next to impossible to bring home to the hearts of our people any sense of the obligations they are under to their religion, or to organization in Spiritualism * * Indecision, self-satisfaction and kindred ills have crept into our ranks and have suddenly made themselves felt in the local and state organizations, also in regard to the movement as a whole."

Practically all these evils of which Mr. Barrett complains are "owing to improper management of local meetings," even to a large extent, the widespread and derogatory work of the frauds. The only reason that the tricksters have gained such a strong and almost impregnable position is because there has been a lack of intelligent co-operation among true advocates of the cause and especially among the officers of the different societies throughout the country. There has been a lack of discrimination between fraudulent and genuine mediumship. Often those who are in league with the tricksters are employed in preference to genuine workers, because their ways are affectedly sincere and conscientious and so many, many of those in position to foil their plans are unable to see through the thin veneer of respectability that is worn. So the fakes prosper at the expense of genuine mediums because of inharmony and lack of co-operation among societies, due to incompetency on the part of those in control.

Incompetent and worse than useless speakers and undeveloped mediums, or pretended mediums, are before the public only because the societies that hire them are poorly managed. The officers of the various societies throughout the country should endeavor to keep each other informed of the identity and movements of those who, because they are frauds, or for other reasons, do not give satisfactory service. There is a vast and growing number of speakers and so-called mediums now clinging to Spiritualism, who are a curse to the cause; the speakers because of their inane and driveling talk, the preposterous ideas, the doctrines which they attempt to inculcate that are radically opposed to every sensible and essential teaching of Spiritualism; the undeveloped and unauthentic mediums for very much the same reasons, except that their influence is ever stronger and proportionately more pernicious. Some method should be devised to get rid of these hangers on to Spiritualism, and the only way it can be done is by having a system to withstand them as perfect and effective as the one by which they have gained their present hold on the cause.

If I may be allowed to offer a suggestion it seems to me that the N. S. A. should exercise greater caution in dealing out ordination papers; there should be a more thorough investigation of the character and ability of the applicant. There are a great many individuals who are ordained ministers of Spiritualism and no more worthy of the honor nor capable of fulfilling the obligations it implies, than ——(well, you furnish the simile, I can't—or won't).

To be ordained as a Spiritualist minister should mean that, if a medium, a rigid test as to habits and genuineness; if a lecturer, a thorough investigation as to character and ability, has been passed. At present, as every observing Spiritualist knows, it means far less than this. The N. S. A. has done and is doing good work—indispensable work—and this little word of criticism is not offered in a hostile mood; I speak as a staunch friend of the National Association; but I see danger in the lack of adequate restrictions to maintain a high degree of efficiency among our workers and would urge that greater care be exercised in this respect. It is better to make but few ordinations, and be sure of a high order of excellence, than have several times as many, the greater share of whom are not competent.

There are very few Spiritualists who realize that the primary cause of incompetency and mismanagement in their local societies is their own negligence; yet that such is the case a mere superficial consideration of the question will show. Before you criticise the acts of the officials of your society consider who placed them in office. (I am now assuming that you reside within reasonable distance of a society and are a member of it; for if there is a society within half a score of miles, and you have not become a member of it, I want you to lay down this paper and read no further until your name is placed upon the roll and your shoulder to the wheel. If you claim to be a Spiritualist and yet fail to give organized Spiritualism your support, one of three things is true; either conditions beyond your control prevent you from carrying out your wishes, or you do not understand your duty, or else you are not what you pretend to be).

There are a great many citizens of this country who seldom if ever cast their vote when election day comes around, yet they spend a goodly portion of their time criticising whatever party happens to be in power. They remind me of a certain class of Spiritualists who rarely vote when they have the opportunity, yet who are continually finding fault with the way in which the meetings are managed.

And merely to vote is not enough. You need to discriminate; to weigh carefully the merits and demerits of each candidate; to be unbiased by friendships, and uninfluenced by the preferences of others; to be firm, albeit open to reason, to discard from mind every consideration but that of securing the best possible person for each place. Above all, let me emphasize the need of not letting friendship stand in the way of impartial judgment. If you think your personal friends are able, all right; but before you try to put anyone in office you should be quite certain that they possess executive ability, Don't forget that suave and agreeable ways do not always imply a good official and that executive ability should be esteemed most important.

If Spiritualists in electing the officers who are to represent them would be a little more painstaking, if they were more independent in thought and action, having opinions and not afraid to voice them fearlessly, and above all, if they would consider merit only and be unmoved by prejudice, there would be a better class of officers at the heads of our societies, with the consequence that organized Spiritualism would be in no danger of a decline, but would instead be flourishing and rapidly gaining ground.

Let it therefore be distinctly understood that any criticism I may make of the management of societies or the character of officials is primarily a criticism of those who by lack of interest or of discrimination helped place the presiding officers in power.

But the election must be conducted properly if a true expression of opinion is desired. I wish to register a protest against all those methods meant to take the place of the secret ballot. If you cast your vote by upraised hand, or if it is necessary to rise to your feet to be counted for or against a certain candidate—methods frequently practiced—you do not always feel disposed to express your inmost thoughts. The same arguments that make the secret ballot desirable at a general election prove the necessity for it at an election of officers for a Spiritualist society. Suppose, for instance, a certain close friend of yours desires a certain office. He, of course, desires your vote, yet you know he is not fitted for the place and that there are others present better qualified to give efficient service. If you had to vote openly you would not wish to offend by voting against your acquaintance. Given a chance to vote without subjecting yourself to the gaze of all those present, and you would be unembarrassed and better able to vote for the best man, without considering the claims of friendship.

I, for one, know that I can make a better selection when not influenced by the thought of what a friend will think of my opposition to him. There never will be a true expression of opinion except by secret ballot; and if those in power refuse to accede to a request for the use of this method they acknowledge that they are afraid it will result in their downfall. And if there is anything we should discourage it is election by acclamation. A diversity of opinion and a multiplicity of candidates should be encouraged as much as possible. I have in mind an instance where the election was made such a farce that it was nothing short of ludicrous. One of the members arose and said:

"Now, the present officers of this society have given satisfactory service; I see no need to make any change; and I move you that the old officers, one and all, be re-elected."

This evidently suited the old officials. The motion was seconded and put to a vote.

"Those who are in favor of the brother's motion," said the chairman, "will please rise to their feet."

Several arose.

Now those who stand opposed to it, manifest in like manner."

No one moved.

"The motion is carried."

Yet it was not a true expression of opinion. There were many present who disliked the old officers and disapproved of their policy; but there was none who desired to take the initiative. Had there been a secret vote it is doubtful if the motion would have carried; in fact, there is every indication that it would not.

The persons elected to stand at the head of a society should be men of talent, and well liked by practically all who attend. They must not exhibit any animosity toward those persons whom they dislike, no matter how deserving of censure they may be; for there is nothing that will disrupt a society quicker than lack of tact on the part of those in charge. They must, withal, be firm, and see that the wishes of a few obstreperous individuals do not prevail when the silent, undemonstrative majority stands opposed to them. Every suggestion from members or others should be kindly received and given careful attention, and the free expression of opinions should be encouraged; and the failure to give attention to such suggestions and complaints as are presented, or to make the members feel that their advice is desired and appreciated—in other words, the desire of a few selfconceited leaders to control and do as they please regardless of the wishes of the majority—is one of the principal reasons why some Spiritualist meetings are so illy supported. The election of officers who are domineering and not amenable to reason will result in the failure or disruption of any society, no matter how prosperous it may be.

If the wishes of the members are disregarded, if speakers are engaged who are distasteful to the majority, if objections are overruled, the consequent dissatisfaction may be expected to end in the withdrawal of support and possibly the starting of another society. And this, I will venture to say, is the cause of the existence of several societies in a city capable of properly supporting only half as many. It is true that two or three societies, working harmoniously together, often may do more effective work than if they were combined into one; but where one society is pitted against another and ill-feeling exists between them as is often the case, I cannot help wondering if it were not better that they lay aside petty differences, and while not amalgamating, at least work together harmoniously. One prosperous, energetic, harmonious society may do more good than several of the opposite kind.

If there is anywhere on earth a scene calculated to bring tears to the eyes of angels, it is the existence of an improperly managed, poorly attended society where under proper management there might be built a society that would be a credit to Spiritualism and a benefit to the city in which it is located.

Where those in charge make a stupendous mistake is in failing to take the members into their confidence. There should be no attempt at secrecy. Members should be kept informed concerning plans for the future. Board meetings should seldom be held behind locked doors, but generally should be open to any member who is interested; and members should be asked to take an active interest in the board meetings and make any suggestions or criticisms or complaints that they see fit. The members must be made to feel that they are not mere nonentities, but that they are integral and indispensable parts of the society, that their wishes will be respected, that their co-operation is desired, their support appreciated.

Where the officers arrogate to themselves to right to make their plans without consulting with the members we are generally furnished sooner or later with another illustration of the fact that it is only a short step from self-sufficiency to self-conceit. Attendants begin to feel that the society cares nothing for them except for the financial support they give, hold themselves aloof, and lose interest. Next in order is a wail that "there is a lack of enthusiasm" and that "Spiritualism is on the decline," where there are just as many loyal Spiritualists as ever, only they have become disgusted with the way matters are run and go where things are more congenial. If leaders would try less to please themselves, and more to please their constituents, there would be no semblance of a decline in Spiritualism.

If I were asked as to what I believed to be the greatest blunder that a society could make, I think I should answer that it is the failure to provide lecturers of high average ability, and the following of a speaker who is eloquent and logical by another who is deficient in these points. It is a great deal easier to tear down a society than it is to upbuild one. A good lecturer may work steadily and efficiently for a year or more and build up a society so that it is prospering and enjoying a large attendance. A speaker then may be hired who has little or no ability, and in one short month all the progress resulting from a year of able labor may be swept away. The attendance dwindles, the society suffers financially, and though another first-class speaker then be hired, the work of upbuilding must begin again from the bottom, and months may lengthen into years before the lost ground is regained, if ever it can be regained. The moral is clear: When you get a lecturer who gives efficient and wholly satisfactory service, do not make a change unless you cannot avoid it, or until you have someone equally able to fill the vacancy.

If you have no settled speaker, you should see that those you want to serve you are engaged at least six months or a year ahead. It is thus possible to secure high grade talent, while to delay until almost the last moment means, as a general rule, that the better class of speakers have been procured by those societies that are wide-awake and quick to take advantage of their opportunities, with the result that it is often necessary to be satisfied with those of mediocre ability. "Eternal vigilance is the price of success"—in a Spiritualist society as elsewhere.

It should also be remembered that the public meeting should be used principally for the presentation of the philosophy, that it is difficult to give genuine spirit phenomena under the conditions that usually prevail in a public hall, and that the home circle is essentially the place for the presentation of of the proof that Spiritualism offers. It is perhaps well to have the phenomena in our halls, but they should not be presented to the exclusion of other work, for there should always be some philosophy presented to make clear the meaning of the mediumistic truths that are given. Those who care only for the phenomena, and do not appreciate well-presented philosophy, are never the ones who take an active interest in organized Spiritualism; and the society which caters more to the phenomena than the philosophy will never enjoy the permanent existence of the one that depends mostly on sound, well-presented philosophy to maintain its position.

Spiritualism can stand alone. There is no need to embellish its mediumistic and philosophic truths with any of the ceremonies and superstitions culled from other religions. There should be no servile imitating of churchly rites. The habiliments and vestures of priestcraft should not be dragged into Spiritualism (I have in mind instances where this is being done literally) for to do so exposes Spiritualism to ridicule and is ruinous to the society that attempts it. Ours is a modern religion that looks to the future, not the past, and what we present should not be emblematic of superstition but of enlightenment. Let Spiritualism be presented ungarnished by anything except plain common sense.

The importance of having good music needs also to be emphasized. Harsh, discordant and untrained voices singing to the accompaniment of a parody on music on a piano or organ out of tune can very easily destroy any favorable impression made by an able lecture. A meeting never seems complete and satisfactory unless there is music and of a high quality. The officers of some of our spiritual societies might with benefit consider the importance with which this part of the program is regarded in the better class of churches. Certain it is that a stronger effort should be made to have creditable music at our meetings. Care should also be taken in regard to the sentiments thus expressed. There is plenty of good music expressing the truths we advocate, and the use of orthodox hymns promulgating orthodox errors is entirely unjustifiable in a Spiritualist meeting.

GOSPEL OF GOOD CHEER.

A Sermon That Strikes a Responsive Key-Note.

"Be not anxious for your life."—Luke xii., 22.

The great Teacher does not say that we are not to be thoughtful, or provident; but he insists that no event can be provided for by anxiety, by fretting over it before it comes. Half the people on our streets look as though life was a sorry business. It is hard to find a good looking man or woman. Worry is the cause of their woe-begone appearance. Worry makes the wrinkles; worry cuts the deep, down-glancing lines on the face; worry is the worst disease of our modern times.

Care is contagious; it is hard work being cheerful at a funeral, and it is a good deal harder to keep the frown from your face when you are in the throng of the worry-worn ones. Yet, we have no right to be dispensers of gloom; no matter how heavy our loads may seem to be we have no right to throw their burden on others nor even to cast the shadow of them on other hearts.

Anxiety is instability. Fret steals away force. He who dreads tomorrow trembles today. Worry is weakness. The successful men may be always wide awake, but they never worry. Fret and fear are like fine sand thrown into life's delicate mechanism; they cause more than half the friction; they steal half the power.

Cheer is strength. Nothing is so well done as that which is done heartily, and nothing is so heartily done as that which is done happily. Be happy, is an injunction not impossible of fulfillment. Pleasure may be an accident; but happiness comes in definite ways. It is the casting out of our foolish fears that we may have room for a few of our common joys. It is the telling our worries to wait until we get through appreciating our blessings. Take a deep breath, raise your chest, lift your eyes from the ground, look up and think how many things you have for which to be grateful and you will find a smile growing where one may long have been unknown.

Take the right kind of thought—for to take no thought would be sin—but take the calm, unanxious thought of your business, your duties, your difficulties, your disappointments, and all the things that once have caused you fear and you will find yourself laughing at most of them. In some you will see but friends in disguise, and in others puny foes decked out as giants. But begin to dread them, brood over them, look at them with eyes prejudiced with fear, and the least difficulties rise like mountains. In winter some people worry themselves into malaria over the mosquitoes they may meet next summer.

Coming events cast their shadows before; they cast their sunshine, too, if we look at them aright. As a strong man rejoices to run a race, as a young man anticipates with joy the coming struggle, so does the brave heart face tomorrow, not only without fear but even with gladness.

Mistaken ideas of religion are responsible for a great many of the unnecessary wrinkles on the human face. Too many have thought it would be impossible to be happy in two worlds, and so, having selected happiness in the one which they thought would last the longest, they have no choice but to be unhappy in this one. In fact, some seem to suppose that the greater their misery here the more intense will their bliss be there. If heaven is to be bought that way certainly many are paying full price for it.

Burdens we all must bear, but they need not break us. Sorrows we all must share; but they need not unmake us. They will not if we have learned the Teacher's secret of living; he, the man of sorrows, was the man who could bequeath to his friends his joy. To him life lost its anxiety, because the chief things of life were not food or raiment, or even social standing, but manhood and unselfishness to men, and the possibilities of these were as easily realized in need and adversity as in riches and prosperity.—Chicago Tribune.

THE SOCIAL EVIL.

Natural Laws Are Divine, and Are the Power in This Physical World, That Moves and Shapes All Things.

Much has been written of late under the title, "The Social Evil," by a great number of good people moved by a sincere desire to reform their fellow men. Whilst their various articles betray fine sentiment and a desire to improve humanity, natural law seems to have been overlooked. All human law that is in conflict with natural law cannot stand. Natural laws are divine, and are the power in this physical world that moves and shapes all things.

That part of human nature indicated as the "Social Evil" is the foundation of the intellectual faculties. Your house is composed of foundation and superstructure, and the superstructure cannot stand without a foundation to rest upon. In the faculties of the mind of the noblest and most refined ethical teacher of our race will be found on examination all the organs found in the brain of the various animal creatures that stand between his being and the lowest animal organism that is animate or possesses life. The faculties are divided into three classes: The intellectual or perceptive; the sentiments or emotions, and the animal propensities. To the first of these is assigned the anterior portion of the head; the second occupies the middle and upper, while the posterior region and the cerebellum are assigned to the third and lowest division. The last division constitutes the foundation of the first and second divisions, consequently preceded them and upon this foundation they were built, and there they must rest.

Man is composed of many organs and parts which combined constitutes the whole. When all the organs and parts of the human anatomy is works in harmony, nature blesses. No part can rest, all must work, and if working out of harmony the whole osystem is deranged and produces misery, wreck and destruction. Among the symptoms are nervous prostration, softening of the brain, a squeaking and rasping voice, heart failure and a general breaking down of the physical powers, including loss of memory. Natuffe's laws are inexorable, for every disobedience she inflicts a sure penalty. Now, to reform mankind by sentiment you must eliminate the animal from the spiritual. Can you do it? H. H. A Trenchant Letter From Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Dr. H. A. Cross, Chicago, Ill.:

My Dear Brother:—You have not for a moment thought that I have forgotten you, nor have you thought that I was neglecting you, for you know me too well for that, and further, delay is not necessarily neglect. During the last two or three weeks of my stay in England I was literally burdened with calls and callers, requests to lecture in halls or in private parlors, and I did not have time even to write to my best friends, and among those that I did not write to was your noble and worthy self.

Well, I spent about three months in England, Scotland and Wales, lecturing every Sunday, and generally twice of a Sunday, and sometimes two or three times per week. If I am popular, and if my services are in great demand nowhere else, they certainly are in England and Scotland.

I dislike to speak of myself, but thirty-seven years ago I delivered the first lecture (series of lectures on Sunday) ever given in Great Britain. There was then no organization. James Burns, a young Spiritualist, secured a hall for me. I lectured every Sunday evening for three or four months and they formed a fine society, and that society still lives and has a large membership, and from this old hive there have swarmed out 22 or 23 other swarms or societies, so the seed-sowing in those early days was not lost; and yet, I felt sad as I stood before this audience in the same place where I used to speak, to see so few familiar faces and so many strange ones. Those few workers have passed on and up to their reward, and when I think of myself, I feel to compare myself to an old oak standing on a hillside torn by cyclones, twisted by winds, battered by hurricanes and hailstones, and still standing and fighting, and fighting! Well, 'tis better to wear out than rust out.

I had a delightful passage home. The waters were quite calm, but even when they are rough I am never seasick. Only think, my table waiter in the steamer, John Knox, was born in Peebles—Peebleshire on the River Tweed, where my ancestors came from almost two hundred years ago.

I met many splendid people in the Old World, such as W. T. Stead of the "Review of Reviews," Mr. Loab, an official in the London City Council; Alfred R. Wallace, the great naturalist, scientist and Spiritualist, and many other distinguished men and women. I greatly enjoyed my trip down to Wales. I saw there an old castle, one they say is 600 years old. It was nearly in ruins.

There is much more enthusiasm in England and Scotland in the Spiritualist societies than there is in this country, and they have taken on what pleased me, more of a religious trend. In fact, they conduct their services like any other religious meeting. Sometimes they have readings or clairvoyant tests after the lecture, but generally before the lecture or during the week. They prefer to have the lecture stand upon its merits and leave its influence upon an audience. I think it a good plan, because after a lecture to have a medium occupy half or three-quarters of an hour in describing spirits, which descriptions are often not recognized, creates an unrest and dissatisfaction on the part of those who never get tests, and so they complain.

I send you to-day the last copy of the Banner of Light in which you will see the beginning of my lecture in London which was rejected by the Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain, because in the last portion of it I treated especially of Spiritualism. This Philosophical Society is made up of scientific men with a large sprinkling of clergymen, and the clergy "kicked," (to use a common phrase) about the paper being read, and this was almost a godsend, because if it had been read there before their members and put in their year-book, it would have had a comparatively small circulation, but I was invited to deliver it before the British Alliance of Spiritualists to an audience of 600, and it was put into print by the editor of the London Light, who published 3,000 copies, and sold the evening of my lecture 400 copies, so it will go all over Europe. And so the plans and schemes of men are often defeated.

My health is good, and I sincerely hope this hurriedly dictated letter will find yourself and your good wife enjoying health and happiness.

Very cordially yours,

J. M. PEEBLES.

AN IMPORTANT QUERY.

Who Will Pray for the Bears as the President Preys on Them?

Like our old friend Falstaff, Brother Bradford of the Illinois Legislature, is not only "witty himself, but the cause of the wit that there is in other men. Witness, for instance, the following, uttered during a late hunting tour of the President:

Prayer for Safety of President During Hunt.

"We invoke Thy choicest blessings upon our country at large. Bless the chief executive of this great nation personally and officially, and as he is soon to reach 'the happy hunting grounds' on which he has fixed his far-away gaze, and where the wild beasts abound—whether these monsters of the mountains flee from him in fear or fly at him in fury—may he find himself protected by the shield of the Almighty, so that upon his return to his home in peace and safety, like Thy servant, David, of old, he can testify to the people that 'the Lord delivered him out of the paw of the lion and out of the paw of the bear, and let all the people praise Thee.' Amen and amen."—Prayer offered by Chaplain Bradford of the Illinois House of Representatives in Springfield, Ill.

Was a funnier petition ever sent up to the "Throne of Heavenly Grace?"

A professed follower of the meek and gentle Jesus, asking the "God of love" to especially watch over and protect one of His creatures while engaged in the "sport" of shooting to death others of His creatures, is so monumentally inconsistent as to be positively mirth-provoking.

When I read Brother Bradford's invocation I said to myself, "Who now will pray for the bears, deer and mountain lions?"

Brother Bradford calls them "monsters of the mountains." I have been wondering what they would call Bro. Bradford—if they could put their opinion into speech or print!

Surely, the theological biped would not strike them as being a very beautiful creature, praying, as he is, that those who are destroying them without cause, and just for the fun of the thing, may be given Heaven's protection while about their bloody business!

The "monsters of the mountains" are not troubling Brother Bradford, or the man for whom he is praying.

It is true that they kill things sometimes, but they do it only when they are hungry.

Murder is with them a grim necessity. They never deliberately leave their dens and stalk forth to kill things just for the fun that there may be in the bloody business.

With fang and claw they cause pain to other creatures, but they do it in order that they may live, and never for mere sport.

It would do Brother Bradford no harm to make just one more prayer, and I would suggest something like the following:

"O Lord, we beseech Thee to make Thy servant, and all men, more merciful in their feeling toward every living thing.

"Cleanse our hearts, we pray Thee, of the murderous instinct—of the brutal desire to kill things.

"Open our eyes, O thou loving One, to the beautiful truth that the beasts of the field, and even the monsters of the mountains, have some rights that we human beings are bound to respect.

"Amen and amen."

—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago Examiner.

IT IS VIVIDLY PORTRAYED

The Hell of a Guilty Conscience.

"I saw on the seashore a holy man who had been torn by a tiger. For a length of time he suffered much pain and was all along offering thanks to the Most High. I asked him: 'Why are you so grateful?' he answered: 'God be praised that I was overtaken by the tiger and not by sin."—The Gulistan of Sodi.

There are a great many things in the world [as set forth by Rev. Thomas Gregory in the Chicago Examiner] that are unpleasant, a great many things that are painful, but the only thing we need really to be afraid of is wrong-doing.

Nothing really serious can happen to the man who does right.

He may be torn by wild beasts or wild men; he may be called on to endure great physical sufferings; he may be robbed of health and wealth and friends, yes, and life itself; but in wounds and pain and sickness and poverty and death there is nothing dishonorable, nothing that affects the real self of a man.

All of these misfortunes have been borne by human beings with heroic fortitude, oftentimes with a sort of rapture. The subilmest pages in all history are those that are illumined by the brave, almost glad, fashion in which men and women have met the worst possible mental and physical pain.

It is not meant that these things are pleasant, they certainly are not; nor is it meant that we should go out of our way to invite them. All that we mean to say is this: That should they overtake us they will not be able to do us any real harm, since they can at most reach only the outer man—the Will and Conscience—untouched and undisturbed.

The only thing that is really able to get at a man and harm him, in the citadel of his being is Sin—the personal, voluntary, deliberate surrender of the will to that which is wrong.

This is what grand old Epictetus meant by saying: "It is not possible that a man can be disturbed or hindered by any other thing or person than himself. Why do I trouble myself about anything that can happen if I possess greatness of soul?."

Until one harms himself nothing else can harm him; and he cannot harm himself unless he deliberately and voluntarily lends himself to the doing of that which is wrong.

Take the case of the one-time banker, whose pitiful story is now going the rounds of the newspapers.

Seven years ago, according to his own pathetic confession, this man was doing a clean business in his little bank and was happy; but one day he deliberately put his hand into the till, took the people's money that had been intrusted to his keeping and ran away.

We know nothing of the man's experiences prior to the unfortunate day on which he became a sinner, but we will suppose, for the sake of the argument, that he had known many of the "ills that flesh is heir to," such as sickness, pains and aches; the loss of loved ones by death; financial difficulties; ill-treatment at the hands of his friends, together with numerous other trials and tribulations too numerous to mention.

But what of it? Those misfortunes—if it is a fact that he was called upon to endure them—were things that did not involve the manhood of the man or jeopafdize the soul's integrity and peace. He was still a man. He still possessed the self-respect which, no matter what happens, is one's sure refuge from the storms of life.

But when he went back on himself, when he surrendered his will into the hands of evil—ah, God! then—then his real trouble began!

So long as one is at peace with himself he can stand his ground, no matter how hard pressed he may be; but when the divinity of one's own soul is insulted, when one's own conscience is aroused against himself—God pity that man!

The banker of whom mention has been made, so soon as he had taken hold of the money that did not belong to him, began running madly about the earth. He went to Canada, thinking to reach Europe with his ill-gotten gains, but the money "burned a hole in his conscience," and he had to give it up.

But the fire still burned, and he roamed wildly on, going to Australia and later on to Europe, trying to hide from himself, trying to find some hole into which he could crawl away from the outraged conscience that was lashing him with the scorpion stings of remorse.

For seven years the poor fellow endured the hell of his sin; but unable to stand it any longer, he came back home, back to the people he had wronged, back to the scenes that had known him as an honest, happy man, and, giving himself up, says to the court: "Do what you like with me, I shall be satisfied."

Satisfied? Yes! Anything is preferable to the blistering consciousness of an evil life.

Never mind about the trouble that others may make for you—you can bear that all right; but watch out—watch out for the trouble you may make for yourself by violating your own high sense of right!

ONLY ONE WAY.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light:
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Though the heel of the strong oppressor
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voices of fame with one acclaim
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning
And keep this motto in sight:
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his ranks are strong, if in the wrong
The battle is not yet done;
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

A Correction.

A late correspondent made the statement in these columns, in the course of his article, that Col. Ingersoll gave it as his opinion that "Jesus was a very good man," thus repudiating his godhead, but otherwise accepting him as a teacher. It is due the reader the facts be stated.

Col. Ingersoll started life as a Presbyterian, and of course entertained the opinions of that denomination. He bolted the damnation theory, and while resident of Peoria was an attendant of the Universalist church, indorsing its teachings, among which was repudiating the miraculous story of Jesus being a son of God, other than as all other persons are his sons.

For several years after the Colonel entered the lecture field he clung closely to the Universalist teaching, "kicking hell," repudiating the divinity of Jesus, and the magnificent Munchausens of the Bible, such as the six days of creation, a universal deluge, crossing of the Red Sea on dry land, the sun and moon standing still in obedience to Joshua's command, the fiery furnace canard, the whale story, and numberless other narrations contravening human belief.

In the Colonel's last lecture at Kansas City he mentioned Jesus as a myth. He had been directing his researches in that direction. At the time of his death Col. Ingersoll was engaged in preparing a new lecture, in which he purposed to demonstrate that Jesus was not a real character, but was the production of numerous characters blended into one, and that the pretended classic and other authorities quoted to prove there was such a character were Catholic forgeries, written at a much later period than is generally supposed.

It is just to the memory of Col. Ingersoll, and to the truth of history, that these facts be stated.

In a Rapid Decline.

Dr. S. P. Cadman, in addressing the graduating class of Hartford Theological Seminary quite recently, is reported by the press to have said:

"Millions of manual toilers have drifted from the church in their absorbing pursuit for increase in power and profit in the new social order which confronts us."

But Dr. Cadman was not alone in his utterance as to the falling away of the laboring class from the church. Rev. W. J. Dawson, in his late farewell discourse, at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, said:

"The church has been too respectable and too conventional and has got out of touch with and forgotten the laboring world."

And now the words of Don O. Shelton, following Rev. Dawson, on the same occasion:

"We are told on the most reliable authority that there are one million people in New York at present unaffiliated with any church. We are also told that one of our great metropolitan churches has received only sixteen people into membership in seven years. There are 20,000,000 of people in America unaffiliated with any church. We must find some way of getting nearer the people."

We would suggest for relief the churches place their Hebrew mythological literature on the shelves with the discarded like literature of all pagan nations, bring common sense to the front; teach science from the pulpit; harmonize all with revelations from the spirit world, then the prosperity of the church may be restored, but never by preaching of an Eden that never existed, of talking and seductive serpents, forbidden fruit on the tree of knowledge, the fall of man, total depravity, and restoration by the sacrifice on a cross of a junior God, born of woman. Laboring men in this 20th century are too intelligent to accept priestly fables from two thousand to four thousand years old as revelation from God.

Unity of Action

It might be possible if there was greater harmony or unity of action in the ranks of Spiritualism the cause would progress more rapidly, taking for granted that in union there is strength, but there never has been, and perhaps never will be perfect harmony in the ranks, neither do we expect such a miracle to occur.

In the first place there is discord in human nature, and Spiritualism is an institution the foundation principles of which cannot appeal to all alike.

Unity of action is a nice thing to talk about and think of; so is brotherly love, but even the latter is susceptible to various interpretations.

The Catholic Church is about the only institution outside of a few secret orders, where unity of action has been carried into successful effect. In the Catholic church there is an infallible head whose edict is universal law, and strict obedience is demanded under penalty of loss of soul in eternal damnation; but we have no infallibility at the head of Spiritualism; nothing but Nature's universal, immutable law, and that is so differently observed and interpreted by different independent minds, that we do not harmonize upon that point.

There is but one point observable at present writing upon which Spiritualists unite, viz: The continuity of consciousness after transition, and the possibility of spirit return and communication with friends still in the form.

But there is nothing in that but a positive fact, and naught upon which to unite or organize for action. Not all who believe in this one fundamental principle are ready to accept an Infinite Intelligence upon which to found a religion. Not all see the necessity of a religion being founded, and there is where one great diversity of opinion hinges, and it is a source of inharmony, but not the greatest.

We are not sure that it is necessary to the progress of the main cause that we all think alike or act in perfect unity.

The most valuable vibrations are often produced by discord. If the wheels of progress get out of adjustment it may be necessary to use drastic means to re-adjust.

When the elements of Nature become stagnant and impure there comes a storm. The wind blows, the thunder roars, and the lightning flashes—then there is a calm. The air is pure and invigorating to inhale, and there is such a peaceful condition over all.

Nature's drastic methods of re-adjustment are a success. To her the loss of life and destruction of individual property are naught. The adjustment must be made; not for the benefit of an Infinite Intelligence or the human family, but that the law of the universe demands change, evolution and a fitness of things.

It is not the purpose here to discuss the problems of Nature, only to lead up to the fact that whether there is or is not unity and perfect harmony in our ranks as an institution, the world has at this time a good hold upon the fundamental principles, founded by modern Spiritualism, and no failure upon our part to unite will hinder the advancement of that one principle to any alarming extent.

We cannot think alike or be alike, but we can discuss methods, ways and means, stir up and purify that which we possess as knowledge, and to a degree unite our differences and make them a part of the adjusting principle of real Spiritualism.

Who Can Explain?

The May number of Harpers' Magazine contains a brief poem, the origin of which is so out of the ordinary that editors who are not familiar with spirit phenomena do not know what to make of it. A Mrs. Warrin, a woman past middle age, who had never written a metrical line in her life, on awakening one morning, found herself speaking these lines:

"In my dim room two tapestries there are, close hanging to the wall;
On one, bright colors flame and golden gleams,
And from it, in the half-light of my days,
I think I hear the low, soft laughter of sweet love,
The merry cry of children—mine, the shouts of boys at play;
Then clash of swords, and murmurs of great crowds,
And acclamations high, and loud and strong;—
My life, that longed to be.

"The other, pale and sombre in the shadow falls;
I scarce can tell what faint design is traced upon its folds;
Dim shades there are, which slowly move
In misty waves the wall along;
So cold, so dark,—no love, no life, no sound
Save silent shivers, rent in twain by sobs—my own."

Somewhat alarmed, Mrs. Warrin awoke her husband to tell him her singular experience, but when she opened her mouth to speak, her vocal organs, to her astonishment, repeated the lines without her volition. Mr. Warrin, knowing she had no poetic ability, was as much surprised as she. Although she did not know that the lines are in iambics and the metre almost faultless, she did think the conception of the poem beautiful and the mode of expression poetical, so to preserve the curiosity she immediately put it in writing. Margaret Deland solicited a copy for publication, and Mrs. Warrin assented, although the despairing state of mind set forth in the poem does her an injustice. The gloomy closing stanza is far from expressing the feeling of Mrs. Warrin, who, instead of leading a lonely, loveless life, is a cheerful, happy wife and mother.

A SONG OF HOME.

Each day adds its holy burden,
Trust in the home.
Every eve will bring its guerden,
Rest in the home.
Toil, brave heart, though storms may beat thee;
Trust, sad heart, for joy will greet thee;;
Wait, true heart, for love will meet thee,
All in the home.

Live, creating love and sharing
Ever in the home;
Every trial nobly bearing,
All in the home.
Love is always best tuition,
May it find here free admission,
So 'twill bring its own fruition—
Heaven in the home.

A Companion World.

The planet Mars, whose orbit in our solar system is 48,000,000 miles more distant from the sun than is the earth, is near 4,500 miles in diameter. It revolves on its axis once in about 24¼ hours, and in its orbit in 730 of its days. It has water and an atmosphere like our earth. Camille Flammarion, perhaps the ablest living astronomer, and a well-known Spiritualist, was lately interviewed by the London Chronicle in regard to the probability of Mars being inhabited. He is reported to have said:

"Ah, the planet Mars! I have been studying that planet closely for thirty years, and I have prepared a regular map of it with all its canals. I think I am more interested in this than anything, for one reason, that I am certain it is inhabited and probably by people much more advanced than we are.

"A thing which is particularly interesting to us at the Juvisy observatory, which I founded, is that we can watch the snow melting at the poles in the spring, and, in fact, they nearly disappear in the summer. This, mind you, in spite of the fact that the year in Mars is twice as long as ours; that is to say, that it really consists of 730 days, so that, naturally, the winter is longer. With regard to the inhabitants, I think they are very light in weight; for instance, a man who weighs 140 pounds on the earth, if he could be suddenly transported to Mars would weigh only fifty-two pounds.

"The public at large does not really know the precision of some of our astronomical observations. Thus we know the length of the day in Mars by diurnal rotation to the hundredth part of a second, and from observations, which have now extended over 100 years, we find the length of the day on the planet is twenty-four hours, seventeen minutes, twenty-two seconds. The climate of the Martians is very mild; there are no gales, while the atmosphere is very light, with scarcely any clouds. The inhabitants enjoy fine weather, the climate being something like that of Davos Platz, dry and clear. We know the globe of Mars perfectly; in fact, far better than the earth."

According to accepted ideas by astronomers Mars is a planet older than our earth. With all the forces of nature in active operation there as here, light, heat, electricity, an atmosphere with water, animal life must be there, with time to develop into the highest and most perfect forms.

We may imagine some person rejecting the dominant religion inquiring: "Had the inhabitants of Mars a peasant girl who was betrothed in marriage to another, who bore a son for the Monarch of all worlds? And have they outraged common sense, as have some of the churches with us, by naming and worshiping her as the Queen of Heaven?" Perhaps they had no Eve, who was beguiled by a snake, who ate of forbidden fruit, and tainted all her posterity with guilt, requiring the death of a God on the cross to again get the race on praying ground!

An Ideal Church.

Benjamin Fay Mills, well known throughout the East a few years ago as an evangelist beating up for recruits to people heaven, after the order of Moody, is now serving humanity at Los Angeles, Cal. He started a movement there some months ago without an organization, money or meeting-place, and without the backing of any church. The papers report he has now more than one thousand contributing members, numerous committees leading in all sorts of praiseworthy work, cash assets of $14,000, and a magazine published in the interest of the movement. They have no creed. All are welcomed on equal terms, orthodox and heretic, Jews, Agnostics, Infidels, Christians, heathen. All are given the same handshake and welcome. The only pledge is a promise of trustful and unselfish living.

This movement seems to be a counterpart of the Church of Humanity, at Kansas City, over which Mr. Roberts presides.

The Progressive Thinker likes such organizations. They portend a glorious future. The narrow creeds of bigots, pretending to serve God, but producing hate and discord, give place to an effort to elevate, not degrade, humanity. Success to it and to all similar nonsecular movements the wide world over. Let God have a rest, and let all labor to make the entire race worthy a common Parent.

Curiosities of Sects and the Bible.

A religious sect exists in Sweden, who endeavor to imitate the example Jesus set them, by wearing only a single garment. They subsist on fruit and vegetables, sleeping out of doors. They are known as "Simple Livers."

Crossing the Baltic into Russia there is another eccentric sect whose male members, observing the instructions of the Master, first subject themselves to emasculation. See Matthew 19:12. They, practically, "take no thought of the morrow."

Is there a vagary, however wild or extravagant, which has not been adopted by some Christian sect as a fundamental feature in their creed? The "yea, yea, and nay, nay," constitute a marked feature in one sect, and this is deemed essential for the soul's salvation.

The Destructionists find abundant authority that there is no resurrection for other than the righteous. Metempsychosis, otherwise transmigration of souls, is clearly taught in both the Old and New Testament.

These facts with others constitute the curiosities of the Bible which over and over again we are told by the preachers is inerrant.

Legal Side Thrusts.

If there was no penalty for counterfeiting the coin, or forging the currency of the country, we would soon be flooded with the worthless products of knaves. If there were no prosecutions for violations of the penal code, the effect would be the same.

Scoundrelism is rampant in all Christian countries, if the weak are not protected against the aggressions of the strong, or the thoughtless against the arts of the deceiver.

The rights of the people are best conserved when villainy is quickly punished. Neglect to prosecute crime encourages the offender to continue in wrong doing.

He who is conscious of another's guilt, and attempts to conceal it, or prevent its punishment because his cult may be injured thereby, is a particeps criminis, and deserves the penalty affixed to crime. Thus the lawyer.

AN EMINENT PROFESSOR.

He Gives His Views of Buddha, Confucius and Laotsze—All the Features of the Japanese Character To-day Are the Products of the Direct or Indirect Influence of the Buddhist Doctrine.

Nothing has been of so great importance in developing in the Japanese people the spirit which has carried us to success as the religious doctrines. Confucianism was first introduced in the imperial household, according to the most reliable accounts, in the reign of the fifteenth Emperor, A. D., 284, but long before it reached the court the learning of the Celestial Empire had made its influence felt among the people of Japan through the swarms of immigrants flowing in from China.

Confucianism, pure and simple, as it came to us was nothing more or less than a collection of ethical ideas considered in their application to daily life. The great teacher never allowed himself to be considered as the expounder of religious or metaphysical ideas.

Abstract reasoning had little charm for the mind of Confucius. Filial piety was the key-note of his teachings and was thus especially congenial to the Japanese temperament, but not until the introduction of Buddhism from Korea in A. D. 552 did Confucianism take deep root in Japan. Paradoxical as it may seem, Buddhism was the influence that made the teachings of the Chinese sage the ruling factor in Japanese society.

The gospel of Buddha was accessible only in Chinese translations and the study of these necessitated a previous knowledge of the written language of the Middle Kingdom, whose literature was saturated with the teachings of Confucius.

The war-like ancestors of modern Japan in those days possessed no literature, but only legendary lore, and on their untrained eyes the elaborate Chinese system produced a great impression.

Buddhism found nothing antagonistic to itself in the teachings of Confucius, which contained in a slightly different form the five commandments of Buddha.

The first blossoming of Japanese civilization occurred in the tenth century after Christ, and then the Book of Filial Piety was a general possession all over the country.

Taoism, or more correctly Laoism, was enunciated B. C. 604. In Laotsze was to be found the perfect opposite of Confucius. The principles advocated were in many respects the same of which Count Leo Tolstoi is the powerful exponent today. He taught that the salvation of humanity was to be effected by the abandonment of artifice and a return to nature, by the surrender of the individual will and the suppression of the ego.

"Leave," he said, "the so-called saintliness and wisdom alone, abandon the so-called mercy and righteousness and the people will return to filial devotion and love."

This doctrine has very little to do with the cult of Taoism now so prevalent among the Chinese, in which the metaphorical statements of the teacher have been given interpretations never intended by him.

The resemblance between the true Laoism and the higher forms of Buddhism is very striking. Both the higher and the lower forms of Buddhism have been adopted in Japan—the philosophical form by the higher classes and the other by the great masses of the people. The doctrines have been taught by a number of sects of which the Zen sect has exercised the greatest influence on the Japanese spirit and character. Zen means abstraction, which is one of the ways of arriving at Nirvana.

It may seem strange that a system which recommends pure contemplation took such deep root in Japan, of which the spirit has always been, as it is today, one of prompt action, but in the ages when the country was torn by internicine wars a religion was needed that would teach every man and woman how to pass from glowing life into icy death with a smile, how to meet the hardest fate with stoic fortitude.

At the beginning of the seventeenth century Japan at last passed out of the period of internal disturbance and by that time the contemplative school had had ample opportunity of asserting its virtues.

What won for Buddhism its strange popularity in Japan was not its promise of Nirvana, but its power to nerve the heart to face any ordeal at a moment's notice. Another charm it possessed for the illiterate Middle Ages was its systematic neglect of book learning.

All the features of the Japanese character of today are the product of the direct or indirect influence of the Buddhist doctrine taught by the Zen priests. The Japanese love of nature and sense of purity took under the teachings of that sect a new development, showing in art a strong dislike of loudness in form and color and a preference for simplicity with a fullness of meaning behind it.—Prof. Okakura of the Imperial University of Tokio, in the Chicago Examiner.

ONLY.

Only a mother with wistful eyes,
Watching, enraptured, a baby's face,
Only a glance of divine surprise,
Only a lowly child of the race.
Ah! the gods have no joy so rare
As that of the mother! What power to lift
Has that scrap of flesh minus teeth and hair—
Only the token of love's ripe gift!

Only a prayer for a little bread,
Only a mother in anguish wild,
Only a poor little drooping head—
Only a tiny, dying child!
Only a question hard and stern,
"Where's your ring? Not got one? Go!!!
Only the fierce, despairing burn,
That only cast-out women know.

Only a narrow priest of the Lord,
Only an outraged glance of hate,
Only a bitter, damning word,
Only a warning that comes too late.
Only a glance at the sky above,
Only a cry from a mother torn;
"Why, O God, was I made to love?
Why, O God, was my baby born?"

Only a leap in the water dark,
Only a gurgle, only a rise;
Only the trees the spot to mark,
Only the witnessing, star-strewn skies,
Only the river's patient song,
Only a throbbing resting place.
Only, only a nation's wrong,
Only, only a world's disgrace.
—Victor B. Neuberg.

Strongly Stated.

We are fools for Christ's sake.—Paul, I. Cor. 4:10. We are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.—Verse 13.

Did Paul properly consider what he was writing? If so he stated the case more strongly than churchmen are willing to admit.

Above all things reverence thyself.—Pythagoras.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

A Letter to the Readers of The Progressive Thinker.

Here I am in the far west, surrounded by the beauties of the "Rose City," which is indeed rightly named, for every way one's eyes travel they constantly fall upon floral designs of indescribable beauty.

The Lewis and Clark exposition compares favorably (with the exception of size) with all the fairs of the eastern states, the natural beauties of the grounds far surpassing any of the others. It is certainly an event in the history of Oregon, and one she will ever be proud of.

After leaving Chicago June 23, I stopped at Billings, Mont., to serve the society at that place. Was hospitably entertained at the home of my good friend and co-worker, Mrs. McCormick.

Here I found Harry J. Moore and Mrs. McCoy who were serving the state association of Montana in a creditable manner, and I was glad to see their work was fully appreciated by the people of Montana. From Billings I went to Anaconda, again to meet old friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hicks, who are faithful workers in our cause, Mr. Hicks being the speaker and medium for the society in his home city, as well as working in the same capacity every other Sunday for the society at Butte.

Much enthusiasm was manifested in the work at Anaconda, and I found the same interest taken by those I met while in Butte. I was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Holmes while at the latter place, and found them dear good people, and among the leaders in our cause in their city. Mrs. Holmes is secretary of the society, Mrs. Sam Davis is president, and I believe Mrs. Coutts, another faithful worker, is one of the directors.

From Butte I went to Seattle, to find a splendid society under President W. Hall, who is "the right man in the right place." The same enthusiastic spirit greeted me here, the large hall being crowded, extra seats having been provided and even the ante rooms filled with most attentive listeners. Much demand was made for my time in all places, but I was compelled to move on in order to reach my destination and visit with loved friends and relatives in this most beautiful city of the west.

After leaving Seattle it seemed that every revolution of the car-wheels sang "Home, Sweet Home" to my anxious heart, and as morning dawned the train pulled into the station and my soul soon realized the song had not been in vain.

Seven years have passed since I last visited my home city, and I am surprised as well as greatly pleased at its wondrous growth.

W. J. Colville is doing a good work for the First Spiritual Society this month, he also speaks most every evening at the parlors of Mrs. Lucy Mallory, whose dors are ever open to welcome teachers as well as seekers after truth.

I served the Bible Association last Sunday evening. I understand this is a newly organized society, but if all the audiences are such as greeted me, the society has a grand future before it. Mrs. Ladd-Finucan, one of the Pacific coast's most favorite mediums, is the message bearer for the society, and is doing a grand work. The president, Mr. Colson, is deserving of credit for the very unselfish interest he is taking in this society, and has the assistance of his good wife in all his undertakings. I expect to leave here about July 12, by way of Denver, Colo.

Justice Brewer on Woman Suffrage.

Supreme Court Justice Brewer, in a recent interview expressed his firm belief in the desirability of woman suffrage. He said in part:

"When I was a young man I thought that female suffrage was a theory. Today, by the knowledge that years of experience have brought me, I am firmly convinced that what I regarded as theories in my youth are practical to-day. The only way to prove a theory is to test it. We are now engaged in testing the theory of female suffrage. In four states it has been tried and not found wanting.

"To be sure, there has never been any severe trial of the question up to the present time. There have been woman mayors of small cities of five and ten thousand inhabitants; and under the rule of these women mayors public affairs have been conducted in a most satisfactory manner. Just what a woman would do as mayor of a city like Chicago is a thing yet to be tested.

"I think that the chances for her administrative success would be greater than though she were a man. There is no question but what women have at least as high and probably a higher sense of honor than men. There is also no question but what their executive ability is quite as good as that of the other sex. Just how far their capacity for business goes has never yet been discovered.

"I can see no good reason why there should not be a woman President of the country. I can see a great many good reasons why there should be one. However, I question if it comes in the near future, but it is an incident that might happen at almost any time. Women have shown their capacity for handling big affairs in colleges, schools, railroads and banks. To be sure, there has always been a prejudice against women stenographers in large concerns. The idea of the sex question has handicapped the development of the twentieth century girl."

Reign of the Sword.

Think not that I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace, but a sword.—Jesus—Matthew 10:34.

He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.—Jesus—Luke 22:36.

Trace history, written with its bloody pen, of wars, of desolation and of slaughter through all the subsequent years since those words were credited with having been spoken, and it would seem the mission of this misnamed Prince of Peace has been a grand success. Is it not time the direction to Simon Peter, after he had "smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear," "Put up thy sword in its sheath"—John 18:14—be observed? Should not the muse, addressing the Genius of Science, in slightly adapted verse, sing:

"To conquest and slaughter let Christians aspire,
Whelm nations in blood, and wrap cities in fire;
Thy reign is the last and the noblest of Time,
Most fruitful thy soil, most inviting thy clime.
Let the crimes of the church ne'er encrimson thy name,
Be freedom, and virtue, and knowledge thy fame."

Truth is the foundation of all knowledge and the cement of all societies.—Blair.

Spencer's Philosophy In a Nutshell.

I do not believe that Herbert Spencer's philosophy is a finality, but it is a valuable contributor to thought on nature's methods and, as such, is worthy of careful study. The postulation of an Inscrutable Reality (Unknowable) as the ultimate basis of phenomena is, I judge, about equally objectionable to those who believe that there is nothing beyond matter and the senses and to those who believe in a personal, anthropomorphic being who made the world mechanically and governs it by will and volition.

I aim here only to give the leading ideas of Spencer's philosophy. Such a synopsis, of course, can only give the gist of the system.

Under all appearances presented to the senses, there persists an Ultimate Reality which transcends human knowledge and conception.

To us matter is a congeries of qualities, weight, resistance, extension, etc.; and these are names for different ways in which our consciousness is affected.

The fact that our sensations come and go independently of volition is evidence of the existence of something beyond consciousness that determines them. The doctrine of the relativity of knowledge necessitates the postulation of unknowable reality, which appears subjectively as thought and feeling, and objectively as matter and force.

Perception does not report what things are per se; sensations are not copies of objects; conceptions are not pictures of external realities.

Between objective existence and our thoughts and feelings—that is, between the external and the internal order—there is correspondence, there is congruity, but not likeness or resemblance. Knowledge of the effects produced by the externality cannot be knowledge of the externality itself, but only of its effects; and it can only imply the existence of the external order.

Science is classified knowledge.

Philosophy is the synthesis of all the sciences, which deal with different orders of phenomena, into a universal system.

Force is revealed to us under two opposite modes, attraction and expansion, involving, on the one hand, integration of matter and dissipation of motion, and on the other, disintegration of matter and absorption of motion. Where there is predominant disintegration of matter and absorption of motion, there is dissolution.

When the formation of an aggregate proceeds uncomplicated by secondary processes, as in the crystallization of carbon in diamond, the evolution is simple. When in the process of evolution there are secondary rearrangements of matter and sufficient retained motion to admit of redistribution among the parts of the body, as in the growth of an animal, there is exemplified, not only the integration of matter and dissipation of motion, but also an increase of complexity.

When this is accompanied with increased coherence, definiteness and mutual dependence of parts, and the subordination of the parts to the movement of the whole structure, there is progress. Thus we have, in the biological domain, evolution as a double process—a movement towards unity as well as towards diversity.

The evolution of an animal from an egg, or a tree from a seed, occurs by the integration of various elements into complex structures, in which, at the same time, go on continual differentiations and logical integration, making the whole a compact aggregate, that presents great heterogeneity in itself and at the same time wide differentiation from all other aggregates.

The field of compound evolution is among bodies of differing densities, between the gases, wherein the molecular motion is too rapid to admit of structural arrangement, and solids, in which the amount of retained motion is too small to admit of molecular re-arrangement.

Life is a peculiar manifestation of force, in which there is adaptation of organism to environment and continuous adjustment of inner to outer relations.

All living forms have been evolved; the more complex being the product of modifications wrought upon pre-existing forms. The evolution of species goes on, not in ascending lineal series, but by continual divergence and re-divergence.

The highest form of intelligence, the human, has been reached by modifications wrought by changes upon pre-existing intelligences.

The mental faculties of man, not less than his brain and nervous system, are the products of innumerable modifications in the evolution of the highest from the lowest. Experiences registered in the nervous system produce structural changes, and are accompanied by mental modifications. The aptitudes and intuitions of the human mind are the product of accumulated human experiences transmitted and organized in the race; even the "a priori forms of thought" have been slowly acquired. Whatever in the mind transcends experiences of the individual is nevertheless the product of ancestral experiences.

Not only have the highest conceptions of morality been evolved, but even the moral sense has been formed of accumulated and multiplied experiences, registered in the slowly evolving organism and transmitted as intuition.

The religious sentiment, equally with the moral sense, has been evolved through psychical conditions represented by all the stages of life below man.

The essential truth of religion is involved in the recognition of an Absolute upon which all phenomena depend.

The conceptions of systems, philosophical, ethical, and religious; language, governments, arts, science, philosophy, and industrial pursuits; all human activities and acquisitions, equally with animal and vegetable forms, planets, solar and stellar systems—have been evolved from homogeneous, indefinite, and incoherent conditions into heterogeneous, definite, and coherent states.

TRENCHANT APPEAL.

It Is Made to the City of Light Assembly.

To the President, Officers and Board of Trustees of City of Light Assembly, Greeting:—We have been informed officially by the societies of New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other places, that one of our most prominent speakers, Prof. W. M. Lockwood, has been discontinued as speaker at City of Light Assembly for this season, which we regret very much, and concur with those societies that a great injustice has been done to the cause of Spiritualism, and the good of City of Light Assembly, as he has labored very faithfully in the interests of the cause, also has had the welfare of City of Light Assembly at heart. His work has ever been formulated from the very principles of nature, which are the bed rocks or foundation of Spiritualism, which the City of City of Light Assembly are seeking to inculcate into the minds of those who meet with your Assembly. We hope that the board will re-consider its action in the matter, and comply with the wishes of those who have the cause of Spiritualism at heart, and are earnest supporters of Lily Dale, and of those who recognize in Prof. Lockwood an ability for the upbuilding of the basic principles of Spiritualism, also one who has a deep feeling for the welfare of City of Light Assembly.

The foregoing resolutions are presented by the order of officers and members of the First Spiritual Church of Buffalo, N. Y., also President Chas. Hulburt, of Harmony Circle Society, to the City of Light Assembly.

MR. A. G. ATCHESON,
MRS. J. H. R. MATTESON,
L. C. BEESING,
H. A. LUNDQUIST,
N. H. EDDY,
AUGUST EY and Others,
CHAS. HULBURT,
President Harmony Society.

Respectfully submitted to City of Light Assembly for kindly consideration, per above committee.

Prof. Lockwood occupies a niche in Spiritualism that no other speaker can fill. His lectures supply the urgent demand of advanced thinkers—those who delight to come in touch with nature's laws and subtile forces, both on the material and spiritual plane. This class of people are coming to the front constantly in greater numbers, constituting a factor that must be reckoned with in making a programme for an Assembly, such as Lily Dale aspires to be. As it has ceased to be a "Spiritualist camp-meeting," and is now a "City of Light Assembly," it must put forth its best efforts or deterioration will surely follow.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

His Engagement to Lecture at the Clinton Camp.

Having noticed, both from the camp programs and also in the different issues of The Progressive Thinker, that W. J. Bryan is to lecture for the Spiritualist camp-meeting association located at Clinton, Iowa, I deemed it advisable to remind some of the friends of liberty, of one feature of his record in Congress when he was a member of that body.

The issue before the lower house was whether public money should be appropriated for sectarian purposes, and if the pamphlet be true which was shown me during the campaign of 1896, William Jennings Bryan voted that it should!

We also, in almost the immediate past, noticed that he was a friend of the late pope.

The United States of America is a secular, and not a Christian country, the Supreme Court of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. Our nation could not be termed a pagan country, either. Now I ask, if Mr. Bryan be guilty of the herein set forth charge should men and women with patriotic blood hear such a one as he?

Every well informed person knows that the Roman church has always been an avowed enemy of the public school! Every true and loyal American citizen knows that the public school is the grandest institution that has ever graced this stage of action!

The camp at Clinton, Iowa, has an array of talent, whose every drop of blood is patriotic, and is it right or just for the management of said association to bring among the speakers and mediums of Spiritualism one whose Congressional record is so tainted with suspicion? I personally have very little use for any one who will vote to destroy the country of my birth.

Why not go back to the old way of conducting camp-meetings?

Again, I ask, how long would any church or political organization last if it would allow any and all kinds of thought presented? I may be asked the question, if I approve of the course pursued by the management of the camp at Chesterfield, Ind., last year, in employing the services of Eugene V. Debs? Will say I approve more of the course taken by the above mentioned camp this year in deciding to have none but Spiritualism presented from its platform. However, Eugene V. Debs represents a political faith that the Roman church and other organization of superstition are opposed to, so I reason Camp Chesterfield is not guilty of as great an offense against Spiritualism as is the Clinton, Iowa camp this year.

MY HOUSE.

This moving house that you call me
Is growing old; and I can see
That it is weak, and here and there
I find some things beyond repair.
You err in thinking it is me,
For I am what you cannot see.
Within, I tread the well-worn floor,
Or stand beside my prison door,
That outward swung in days of yore.
'Tis useless now, it swings no more.
Without my house, I see nor hear
Some things that once to me were dear,
And o'er my roof the chilly flow
Of winter piles its drifts of snow.
Yet all within is still aglow
With earnest life, and everything
Wears on its face the joy of spring.

"PREPARE YE THE WAY."

Spiritualism tells us that as we sow we shall reap—it matters not when or how we sow that which is wrong, that which is unhelpful to our fellow men, that which is of the selfish and carnal state, we must inevitably reap the harvest belonging to such sowing. It matters not when or how we sow good deeds, right living, pure thinking, helpfulness to our fellow men, we shall reap the harvest in beautiful flowers free from thorns—flowers of peace, of harmony and of spiritual happiness, because we have sown the seed that is true to itself and produces its kind.

Spiritualism is our religion.

Spiritualism is based upon the foundation principles of justice, truth, love, wisdom—the four cornerstones of the great temple called Spiritualism. The foundation stones of this grand structure are the facts of spiritual life which are brought to human conception from the eternal world. These facts come so clearly, so unmistakably, so intelligently that they appeal to human reason and understanding. These facts are brought in the name of Truth from that great world of spirit, by intelligent entities who not only once lived upon the mortal plane in bodies of flesh like your own, but many of them lived upon this plane in recent years, in modern times, so that they have been in touch with your own line of experience and existence, so that many of them have been of your own homes, your families, your circle of friendship; they have held fellowship with you when they were on the mortal side; they knew you in your good days, in your serious days, in your times of prosperity, in your years of adversity; they have suffered with you and rejoiced with you; they have been knit close to your souls by the tender ties of affection, of sympathy, of sweet friendship of all things that go to make up comradeship and good fellowship, therefore they understand you, they have seen you under all circumstances and in varying conditions. They are with you in thought, and they come to you from the eternal world bearing their influence of cheer, their ministration of helpfulness, their communications of instruction and affection.

Spiritualism is based upon these facts which have been presented to the world for many years in one way and another, not confining itself in expression to one particular line, but it is diversified in that which it has to give to mankind, hence it comes with a communication direct from your spirit loved ones giving the evidence of their identity; it comes through mental processes and makes its power felt; it comes through physical demonstration and gives material testimony of its verity; it comes in the healing work of those who can lay upon you the hand, or send you the thought, of help and magnetic force that lifts you from beds of pain and weariness. It comes describing to you the loving ones whom you have laid away in mortal life and shows to you that the beautiful world opening in scenes of grandeur and of light, that is in itself an inspiration and not a dream.

Spiritualism, then, based upon the four cornerstones of Truth, Love, Wisdom and Justice, and having the entire structure built upon this foundation of fact, presents a temple of beauty, of purity and of service to mankind.

A Herald of Immortality.

Spiritualism has come to humanity as a herald of immortality. It has come as one crying in the wilderness to all human hearts and minds that it can reach: "Prepare ye the way, make your paths straight; prepare ye the way for that which is to come, for that grander revelation of truth which must come in the days of human progress and of spiritualized unfoldment."

Prepare ye the way for the coming generations who are to follow in your steps and who will profit by your examples and grow stronger and better by the precepts which ye have given.

Spiritualism, we repeat, is a religion. It is that which, when fully understood, appeals to the highest, the noblest, the purest sense of humanity. It appeals to the religious nature of mankind, yea, even to the devotional, for there is that within man which is devotional, reverential; that which reveres the majestic and beautiful whether it be in art or displayed through the revealments of science, or whether it be in the proclamations of glory in this wonderful universe at large. Man reveres that which is majestic, that which is noble, that which is uplifting. He must do so since his spiritual nature comes into kinship with the noble, the lofty, and the grand, and calls out that which is beautiful from within.

A Beautiful Moral Code.

Spiritualism in its highest sense, and when well understood, appeals to these elements in humanity. It is that which gives the precepts and the code of moral ethics and the outline and scheme of right living, of doing right, of thinking right, of seeking to live according to the highest light; therefore is it a religion. It comes with a beautiful moral code of ethics which proclaims that those who do right and do by their fellow men as they would wish to be done by will find the higher light the sweeter peace, the grander consciousness of spiritual consolation and harmony, and all things that tend to make for the highest happiness.

Spiritualism tells us that we have something more to do, however, than simply to do to our fellow men as we would be done by. We are in this, seeking to do or give that which we require or ask from others; but true Spiritualism expects us to do more than this; we are to give our cup of cold water, or our meal of bread, or our helping hand, or our substantial aid to some fellow being in need, not because we expect him to give in return, not because we ask for reward, but because we know it is the thing to do, because we know that that fellow creature is suffering, needs our sympathy and aid, and that we as spiritual beings should offer what we can to assist him in his travels along life's way.

Spiritualism tells us that we are not to deal by the precept or axiom that "Honesty is the best policy" in order that we may acquire something good and helpful for ourselves, but that honesty is what we should exercise—honorable dealing is what we must have, what we must dispense if we would under any circumstances develop the spiritual nature.

Sowing and Reaping.

Spiritualism tells us that as we sow we shall reap—it matters not when or how we sow that which is wrong, that which is unhelpful to our fellow men, that which is of the selfish and carnal state, we must inevitably reap the harvest belonging to such sowing. It matters not when or how we sow good deeds, right living, pure thinking, helpfulness to our fellow men, we shall reap the harvest in beautiful flowers free from thorns—flowers of peace, of harmony and of spiritual happiness, because we have sown the seed that is true to itself and produces its kind.

Spiritualism in its code of ethics is beautiful and uplifting, but we must seek to understand it; we must realize within ourselves what this lesson is. We must prepare ourselves by clean thought, by the exercise of reason, of that which the world calls "common sense," good judgment, in order to take up these lessons and comprehend them.

Spirits, or intelligences of the other world, are returning day by day and year by year to communicate with mortals and they have a purpose in their coming. True, the sweetest thought of all with them may be that they will convince their friends of earth of their continued existence and abiding love—tell them of reunion by and by, and of the sweet home that may be found when the bodies of clay are given up to earth. But, while that is the sweetness of their message, they have still something more to reveal and that is these instructions which are concerning the life spiritual which we all may lead right here and now.

Spiritual Life and Power.

Spiritualism came in its time, came when the world was prepared for it, and could not have come to any extent earlier, because nature works along such ways as to give whatever she has to bestow at the time when preparation is made. Always in the history of mankind there have been revealments of spiritual power and presence and intelligence, to one individual and another along the ways of time; from the earliest dawn of human conception there have come gleams and glimpses of the immortal life. In the earliest forms of human thought very little could be understood of the realities of the spiritual world and of the intelligence and identity of those beings who sought to communicate, but as the centuries passed and human beings came to know more and more of these wonderful laws and of the inwardness of life and of humanity, more and more was revealed of spiritual life outside of this physical frame, and so here and there came tidings of beings apart from matter or physical body—communications and physical manifestations—whatever could call the attention of mortals to that spiritual realm peopled with living entties.

As the years rolled on startling discoveries were made by certain individuals of some wonderful power they possessed which brought them into contact with the world of spirit, and so age by age and century after century and decade after decade spiritual intelligences wrought and labored and sought to make themselves known to earth, to open wide the gateway of immortality and bring forth to mortal conceptions the glories and wonders of the spiritual world. But it remained for a later age to bring out into human thought and understanding the full communication which gave knowledge and tidings of life beyond, which could give something intelligent of the world of spirit, of how spirit entities live and how they labor in those other realms—something of their conditions and varying states of progress. These have been given time and time again within the last half century. They could not have been given to any extent before, because the world was not prepared for them.

Now Spiritualism has spread over the entire world, wherever civilization has made its mark; even more than this, Spiritualism—or communion between the two worlds—is known in many quarters and among many people that are not considered civilized by your race, but they receive and have communion, they know there is a world beyond from which loving ones come and minister unto them; and amid many savage tribes, so-called, among races called barbaric by you, who are so highly civilized, there is greater truth manifested concerning the world of causes and of activities, than many of you have ever received from Spiritualism as it is understood.

Its Mark Upon Humanity.

But it is here, it has made its way; its mark is upon humanity and it cannot be erased. Spiritualism came as a great and potent factor in the progress of humanity. It had to come. The gates of immortality were flung wide open and throngs of angels came trooping back to give their testimony of what they had found beyond death and the grave. So it came, and it is calling to you, O ye people who have received the message and have gained the light. Many of you may perhaps not have fully received as yet the communication that you are longing to hear, the tidings that you hope to get, that which you crave and ask for. Perhaps many of you are just coming into the pathway of investigation and therefore you know but little, but you are open to conviction, you are ready to receive when the light can be poured in upon you, and, if so, you are in the right attitude.

We do not ask you to take all that you hear or see without reasoning upon it, without bringing your best judgment to bear upon it, and if you find that it does not agree with your reason, if you feel that it is not true to your understanding of things, we do not ask you to accept it; we only ask you to come in the true spirit of investigation, the true attitude that will accept truth when it is revealed to you, that is willing to put aside prejudice and misconception and to take up the light and the knowledge that may open to you. We only ask you to be fair-minded, and if then Spiritualism can bring the message and the light and the truth into your souls, accept it and go ye on helping to prepare the way by living out this truth in your daily lives for those who are to follow.

A Divine Responsibility.

Prepare ye the way, Oh, ye Spiritualists, for a divine responsibility rests upon you. This truth has been brought to you by unseen hands because it was a grand thing for you, because they rejoiced in it and felt that having this priceless treasure, if they could only present it to the loved ones here and take away from them the fear of death, the sense of loneliness and sorrow and the pain of error and the misconception of life here and hereafter, they would be giving to those loved ones a jewel of rare value. And so this has been brought to you who are Spiritualists. It is waiting for those of you who have not come into the full knowledge, but who hope, who pray that it may be true, who desire the light, who ask for the truth and are willing to receive. That treasure shall in some time and in some way be yours as well as ours, and it will be to you, if you receive it in the right spirit and make of it the best you can, a prize and a blessing such as earth itself can never give.

So, dear Spiritualists and friends, we say to you, a tremendous responsibility rests upon you, that which is a greater obligation to you than all the world beside. You have something which the outside world, not having received or studied the subject, does not hold, and you have a knowledge which the material life cannot give. You are then under a responsibility and an obligation to live better lives, to grow more beautiful in thought, and in spirituality than are those who have not received the tidings and the light from the angel world.

A Religion and a Philosophy.

Spiritualism based upon these principles of which we have spoken—upon the grand foundation of these immortal facts—rears its structure in beauty and splendor and this structure is the temple of its religion. You may call it philosophy if you will, it matters not, it appeals always to the highest sense and the finer nature of mankind, to the religious aspect or right living, and therefore it is a religion, though as a philosophy it presents to your thinking minds the reason and the cause of many things in life which, without it, you could not discern. This temple of light is for the weary and for those who are happy and glad, it is for peasant and serf and for king—for all, no matter what their race or their standing.

It offers its truths to all mankind; though you may not be able to comprehend its teachings or to receive its revelations to-day, you may be to-morrow. Our doors are not closed against you, the spiritual world is as broad as the universe, it takes in all life, all pulsating energy, it is the all in all, and Spiritualism itself is as broad as the universe, and could not shut out any from its doors. The universe itself is the grand temple of this wonderful revelation, and therefore wherever human minds may be found, whether in high courts or grand places, or in hovels and plains, in templed cities or in mountain fastnesses; whether here amid your noble structures and grand civilization, or far off upon the desert where the Arab mounts his steed, or upon plains where savage tribes may roam, it matters not, the temple of spiritual revelation is there and everywhere, and therefore its gleamings and its light, its truth and its power may be felt by the humblest individual of a dusky race as strongly and as helpfully as it may be felt by any one of your psychics or mediums in this day and generation in what is called the civilized world.

This glorious structure is of truth and it opens for mankind instructions that are helpful, that will be uplifting, if he abides by them. If the human soul seeking for light, for consolation, for evidence of immortality from the great world of causes and of spiritual potentiality only does so with the desire to learn—learn of self for self; learn of humanity; learn that which will broaden out the entire nature and bring forth blossoms of beauty—then will Spiritualism be to that soul a wonderful, invigorating, uplifting power.

But if one only desires to learn of it for the mere furthering of some material advantage and simply to know whether the loved ones again form a family circle and live or not, regardless of the question of rights and privileges, it will not prove to be the instructive power and elevating, spiritualizing light that it can and should be. It depends entirely upon how we proceed to receive and comprehend this revelation of spiritual thought and intelligence, and when we go at it in the proper spirit, some day this revealment will be made and we shall bask in the light, we shall bathe in its beauty and be elevated by its power.

Boundless Truth Awaiting.

Prepare ye the way, Oh, Spiritualists! Oh friends of humanity! Make your paths straight that the grand revelations of truth yet to be poured out upon the world may have the opening and the opportunity of reaching humanity in their best and sweetest guise. You have received something of truth, some portion of light has come to mankind and within half a century has lifted millions of human hearts to a higher plane of happiness and of knowledge, but this portion of truth and knowledge is after all but slight to what is waiting in the boundless heavens for opportunity to make its way unto human conception. You can receive only as far as you can understand.

You, dear friends of the present day, can widen your understanding by reflection, by meditation, by thought, by the exchange of opinions, by the study of current events and by bringing your minds to bear upon all things that pertain to spiritual or intellectual subjects within your range of knowledge. You can thus widen your understanding and receive day by day some expansion, so that tomorrow or another year you have more knowledge, you have more wisdom, you are better fitted to cope with life and its duties; but with all that you are capable of gaining today and in your present stage of existence on earth there is still more, infinitely more of truth waiting in the universe to be poured out upon the children of men.

The universe itself is one grand truth, a truth of existence, of revelation, and you receive a part of that truth every day as you walk your streets and go about your duties and come in contact with your fellowmen and with nature at large. You comprehend more of life by thus exercising your reasoning faculties, but out of this great storehouse of truth there can come only gleams and glimpses which, illuminating as they are, are but small compared to that which is within, and as ye prepare the way by your own thought, your own deeds, your own influence, your example, your passage onward through this material life in the best and the highest sense that you know, so shall it be made more plain, more beautiful, more helpful for the coming ages. So shall the glory and the magnificence of life be more fully revealed to those who are to come after you, and you shall be the pioneers for them, breaking the way and throwing aside the rubbish that they may not be hindered and held back and cramped and confined as perhaps you have been, but may find the way better fitted for their advancement and their growth.

Beautiful to Think of.

It is beautiful to think that one can here, in daily life, go forward and help make a path straight for some brother man. It is very sweet for us to realize that we can cast away the stones and rubbish in the road and so make it easy for some of our fellowmen to travel that way and it is our duty to do this in any and every respect that we can, and it is also beautiful and sweet when we can realize that by living our best, by putting forth our utmost to make the truth plain to humanity as we behold it, by helping our fellows to gain the same illuminations and the same knowledge that have come to us, we are preparing the way for a grander revealment of knowledge from beyond, preparing the way for a more glorious manifestation of spiritual power upon the earth, upon individuals, upon communities, upon nations, for as individuals are benefited and blessed so are nations uplifted.

Wars are here and there, discord reigns, but if there was no inharmony in the individual life, if there was no disposition on the part of any individual to crowd his brother man to the wall, to ride over him rough-shod and take advantage of him in the various conditions of life and marts of trade there could be no warring of nations, there could be no clashing of arms; for it is harmony, good fellowship and kindly love and all these that make for spiritual righteousness, and if they were in every heart no one would dream of war, no one would think of going out into conflict with his fellow man.

The time must come when this planet will have sufficiently advanced in its own development, when humanity shall have reached such a stage of unfoldment in the higher spiritual graces, in the grander intellectual attainments, as to know no such thing as war. There will be no conflicts then, for harmony shall reign, justice in its truest spirit of equity will maintain, and how can there be warring of nations, when justice and equity, harmony and peace abide in the hearts of men? So shall ye prepare the way for that which is to come, if by your thought and your deeds and your living and your influence, you help to make the pathway straight. So shall ye help to prepare the way for those who shall soon follow in your footsteps.

Spiritualism's Message.

You are passing onward. Spiritualism brings its message to the world. We are here to-night to give you a part of that message and it is these words which we have spoken for the living; and the thinking, the doing and the working in all directions are those things which tell, which make their record in the spiritual life of individuals, upon the national life of communities. That which affects individuals in suffering and pain, in discord, in all these conflicting elements affects nations; accordingly we are all welded in one great chain of human existence, we are individual links in that divine chain. The chain itself is no stronger than is the weakest part, and if any link in that chain is weak and easily broken or damaged, then is the whole chain of weakness because of that particular part.

Take a golden chain such as you wear around your neck and when you find a link broken or very weak you are in haste to have it repaired and put in good condition; you know that the chain is no stronger than that weak portion and you may lose it or it will become worthless to you unless it is repaired. So with this great chain of human existence; let one link be broken and the whole chain suffers; strengthen every part and the chain will become divine, and every individual soul is a link which must be polished and rounded and made to glow beautifully in order that the whole of humanity may be grand and beautiful and free.

And thus, dear friends, it is our message from Spiritualism which we give to you to-night, when we say as did one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way." We mean that individually you must remember the responsibilities laid upon you, the obligations you bear to your own souls, to your spirit friends, to humanity at large. Prepare then yourselves to go forward, and you will prepare the way for the golden age which is to come.

The Golden Age is Future.

We need not look back over the past centuries and ages of human history and say, "Oh, the beautiful! age was then, the golden age has gone by, the world now is in conflict and sorrow and pain." Ah, no; the world has struggled up through varying conditions of suffering of sorrow, of terror, of all things that have been dreaded and feared. The world has struggled on to greater light and grander knowledge and higher truth, and the golden age lies just before. The millennium will not dawn in this century, nor in the century to come, but it is in the glowing future and will surely come and you and I—you of the mortal, we of the immortal world—have each to do a part in preparing the way for that grand oncoming of the golden age when justice will rule, when human equity shall maintain in every heart, when peace shall abide in every soul.

Thus, as we join hands and link ourselves together heart to heart and soul with soul in this grand and great mission of life to do our part well and to bring forward anything we find of error that truth may live and shine, so shall we march in unison onward and onward to the great highways of immortality, joining hands with the angels in their work for human emancipation from error and from wrong. We can be their servants, their helpers, their companions. We may do our part in spreading this beautiful light. Thus marching onward step by step, knowing that angels are with us, that God himself is on our side, we know that with him and with our own conscience we may conquer every ill.

SPIRIT AND MATTER.

Their Status in Connection With Evolutionary Processes Defined—Within Us Are the Venom of the Cobra, the Sting of the Viper, the Poison of the Rattlesnake—We Are All Parts of All There Is.

As I understand Professor Loveland, all passions and appetites must die with the earthly body, or else we must accept the theory that all animal life of whatever kind will exist in spirit life also.

Now, to my way of thinking we should not separate spirit from matter; one is essential to the other, and I cannot conceive one independent of the other. The idea of leaving the material at death, is to me very erroneous; matter is as essential to us after we pass out of this earthly tenement as it was while in it; it is only exchanging or shedding the grosser garment for one still as much of matter, but of a more advanced or refined state, in which we manifest. Now as all parts of us have manifested through all parts of nature, we of necessity must take with us a part of all manifested nature. Within us is the venom of the cobra, the sting of the viper, the poison of the rattlesnake, the bravery of the lion, the savagery of the tiger, etc.

Nature is ever forcing on the different manifestations; thus the acts of progression go on.

The procreative desire is the union of the two forces, matter and spirit, and is necessary to reproduce manifested life, and exists in all forms of matter whether human, animal, vegetable or mineral, but only in the human being is all parts of the grand whole manifested. So as we have evolved up through the whole, WE ARE PARTS OF ALL THERE IS.

Nothing goes back in manifestation, so there is a continual onward and upward tendency in all nature, forever pushing us on, but within each human being are all the tendencies of manifested life. They may be in manifestation or lying dormant, but they are there all the same until in some unlooked-for moment they will show themselves. It naturally follows, that as the human being is the highest manifestation earth can produce, it is the only manifestation that can manifest as an individual entity, after the so-called death.

Now, as thought precedes every act, and as people finding all their happiness in the gratification of the material nature, these minds become, as it were, hypnotized to those desires. At the time a man is in the habit of taking a drink of intoxicating liquor, he begins to desire it; the more his mind dwells on it the greater becomes the craving. The same with other things.

As a thing becomes a habit the person is self-hypnotized to that extent, and it grows stronger, and with each repetition the hypnotic claims are strengthened until the poor victim of habit finds them tightening about him until with hope gone he no longer struggles to be free.

All desire is governed by thought; so is anger or jealousy governed by thoughts of fear. Now if, when we leave this earthly tenement we are the same individuals as we were in it, will we not, for a time at least, have the same desires? It seems to me we would lose our individuality otherwise.

Now, I can see how a spirit might desire a porterhouse steak, as described by George W. Lewis, A. M. I will give a little of my own experience: Several years ago, a desire for meat of all kinds left me, but after I had discontinued its use for about three years, when smelling ham frying, the desire for it returned, but not wishing to return to my old habit of eating meat I did not get any until a lady came to my house for dinner, and I knew she did not think she could eat dinner without meat. So as the desire for ham still remained, I determined to get ham, and eat all I wanted. Got the ham, but when I went to the table I did not care for it, so did not eat any. I thought I will put by some of it and when I want it I will eat it, but the desire never returned. Now, I think I did not want it, but a little of the old hypnotic desire caused by long habit still remained, but was not strong enough to make me do what I did not desire to do. So the spirit through the medium was enabled to free herself from old habits and desires.

I believe spirits are often drawn to individuals who indulge in habits that the spirits found while on earth all their happiness in, until the old habits are broken through power of thought turned in a better channel.

I agree with Professor Loveland that there is no such thing as inert matter, but why not? Because spirit and matter are continually blending, causing motion, and motion is the refining process in nature. He also says: "There are no back steps in evolution. What is necessary in one phase of evolution but impossible in the next higher, can never be taken into the higher. But it is fully admitted there is nothing in the spirit world that can feed the animal appetites; therefore they can never be taken there."

Our friend forgets that nature works by slow process, and there should be no sudden changes that would, in part, at least, cause us to lose our individuality. Advanced mortals have the passions and appetites under control, and as a consequence have no desires of an earthly kind, after leaving the earthly body, to mar their progress. But not so with those who have lived only for the lust of the flesh, which draws them to those who are still living on that plane. If it were not so that our deeds do follow us, what could it matter what kind of lives we lived here?

I believe all mediums should be held responsible for whatever manifestations are given through them. I, as a medium, say: Whatever is given that is good through my mediumship, give the spirit world credit for it; but whatever is not good, blame me.

I am disgusted with mediums who try to lay their own short-comings on the spirit world, or, in other words, do not control their controls; for we should pick our company with as much care from that side, as we should here, and I do not think it necessary to associate as bosom friends, with the low and vicious of either side, even if I do desire their advancement. Our first duty is to ourselves.

Prof. Loveland also asks: "Prove that the animal appetites and passions have these root and origin in the spirit nature of man? What is the nature of evil? What its origin, or is it eternal? Has it any use? Is good possible without evil?"

We will take them as asked, first, "Prove that the animal appetites and passions have their root and origin in the spirit nature of man?" As we have evolved through all the varied stages up to our present condition through and by the so-called animal passions, would it be wise, or according to reason, to suppose that all this evolutionary process was from one side alone? Is it not rather the union of the two forces, spirit and matter, according to the plane on which it is manifesting? When the individual no longer manifests on the plane of reproduction, the desire should no longer exist, but the hypnotized condition of mind may still still remain, until overcome; when the individual is forever freed from those conditions, because the necessity for them no longer remains.

Second, "What is the nature of evil?" It is the misuse of what is in itself good. It is the manifesting of the varied natures of which we are composed, not yet harmonized each with the other. The struggle of each for supremacy, overcome eventually by the higher power within, through the action of the mind, not killing out but bringing into harmony each and every part, subject to that higher will.

The third question, "What its origin, is it eternal?" I think is already answered.

Fourth, "Has it any use?" Yes, by our mistakes, as we call them and failures, and by what we may call our sins, we learn to bring forth each hidden part of the grand whole, giving each part its proper place; rounding up our nature into symmetry and harmony, controlled by the grand spirit—reason's guiding star.

Fifth, "Is good possible without evil?"

There is no evil, only through the ignorant misuse of what is in itself good; when ignorance no longer exists there will be no evil; but what is the use of complaining because we have not yet reached that stage of progression? We might just as well sit down at the foot of a hill, and spend our strength and time in complaining, because we had not yet reached the top, instead of looking upward and planting each foot firmly, strive little by little, be the way ever so rough, to gain the desired height.

ENTITLED TO IMMORTALITY.

Animals on Many Occasions Exhibit an Intelligence That Shows a Relationship to Man—Birds Dress Wounds and Even Set Their Broken Legs—Bees, Cats and Cattle Know Secrets of Nature's Materia Medica—Saliva of the Dog Often Found to Be a Perfect Germ Destroyer.

To the Editor:—Our paper, the Baltimore News, relates an interesting occurrence:

A party of Johns Hopkins students were talking about "immunity." One of them remarked that dog's saliva has a perfect bactericidal and healing power, and suggested that perhaps it would make a good antiseptic, although it seemed that no bacteriologist had caught the hint contained in the simple process of a dog's licking a sore, a process seen every day.

The idea was discussed generally. The young man who first mentioned it took down a pile of old magazines and after a dilligent search produced a clipping from a medical journal containing a paper by George M. Gould. Here is a part of it:

"When we commence observation of the origin of medical discovery and treatment we are struck by the fact that 'our brothers the animals' were first in learning not a little of medical art. It has been noticed that birds often show a true surgical instinct. M. Tatio on several occasions has gilled woodcock that were when shot convalescing from wounds previously received, and in every instance found the old injury neatly dressed with down plucked from the stems of feathers and skillfully arranged over the wound, evidently by the beak of the birds.

"In some instances a solid plaster was thus formed and in other ligatures had been applied to wounded or broken limbs. Ten times in his experience he has found birds whose limbs had been broken by shot with the fractured ends neatly approximated and litigated together—a statement that is vouched for by no less a naturalist than Fulbert Dumonteil.

Bees Will Seek Astringents.

"Dr. James Weir says that when bees are attacked with diarrhoea they at once begin to suck astringent pieces of the dogwood, poplar, wild cherry or hickory and rapidy cure themselves. Their instinct carries them so far that in winter if they should happen to be afflicted with diarrhoea they will readily drink a decoction of wild cherry if it is placed in the hive. Moreover, they seem to know that filth is a source of disease.

"Dr. Weir further believes that many of the higher animals have discovered and use a materia medica that should be recognized by human physicians. For instance, dogs will seek out and devour the long blades of couch-grass (triticum repens) when they are constipated; horses and mules will eat clay when they have 'scours', cattle with eczema have been seen to plaster hoof and joint with mud. He speaks of seeing a cow break thin ice on a pond and treat her itching joint to a mud poultice. Cats will go miles when they are 'under the weather' for a dose of catnip.

Curative Powers of Saliva.

"The saliva of animals seems to have a distinct curative action. Dogs, cats, cattle, rodents, monkeys, all lick their wounds when they can get at them and soon effect cures. Feir also tells of a large dog-faced monkey who scratched his shoulder badly on a projecting nail in his cage. He immediately went to a corner and, seizing a handful of clean sawdust, pressed it on the bleeding scratch. In a few moments the bleeding ceased and the blood dried, leaving a coating under which the healing was prompt.

"Rev. Egerton R. Young, a missionary in northwestern Canada, shows us that the surgical instincts of the dog may become so far developed as to produce a real surgeon-doctor. One of his dogs spontaneously took up this work and became so expert that the Indians called him Muskeke Atim, the surgeon. Galls, wounds, frozen feet, etc., in the other dogs were successfully and systematically treated by 'Dr.' Rover. The wounds or sores that could not be reached by the dog's own tongue did not heal. The fact shows that, in a state of health and with pure food, the dog's saliva has a perfect bactericidal and healing power. Perhaps it would make an ideal antiseptic. No bacteriologist has caught the hint."

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

At the meeting of the Kansas Association of Spiritualists, which will be held at Winfield July 15 to 25, Dr. Pearson of Ponca City, O. T., one of the most noted believers in the creed, will give demonstrations of his healing powers, psycho-harmonial therapy and what he calls the twentieth century healing system.

A correspondent sends us an account of a Massachusetts preacher forty years old solacing his later years with a girl of thirteen, and remarks that the incident may not be worthy of mention in these columns. We don't know about that. When King David was old they brought a young virgin to lie in his bosom, and the incident was deemed important enough to be given to posterity by inspiration (See I. Kings, 1). Why, then, should the Truth Seeker disdain such improving narratives told of the men of God?—Truth Seeker.

The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission will hold its meetings during July and August at No. 22 Jackson Place, holding one meeting each Sunday at 8 p. m.

Laura B. Payne writes from Fort Worth, Texas: "I write to say that after four months of successful meetings in the Temple at this place, we close for the summer months. Last Sunday night, June 25 was our last service. I shall start on a tour through Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri about the last of this month. I will be in Oklahoma City 2nd and 9th of July, and will go from there to the camp at Winfield, Kansas. Although it is vacation season, I do not mean to rest, as July and August are crowded full of engagements. The first of September I will return to Texas for our state convention, which is to be held in Dallas during that month."

The New York Sun says: "The American law, however allows divorce in every state except South Carolina, where there are no divorce laws, and in all the other states except New York, with its divorce for adultery only, desertion at least is made an additional cause. Neglect, cruelty and habitual drunkenness are also causes in nearly all the other states. Under an impulse from Mr. Roosevelt statistics of the number of divorces and their percentage to the marriages are to gathered for the twenty years since 1886; but it is not probable that the results will be relatively much different from those obtained by the Commissioner of Labor for the period of twenty years from 1867 to 1886, in which 328,716 divorces were granted. Of these nearly two-thirds were to wives and the preponderating causes were desertion and cruelty."

Goldwin Smith says: "An eminent Canadian journal contends that what appears to be the disturbance of religious belief is in fact merely the progress of theological science, analogous to the progress of other sciences. It asks whether, when all the other sciences are advancing, we can expect the 'queen of the sciences to stand still. The term 'queen of the sciences' applied to theology is medieval, and what the queen of medieval science was the perusal of a few pages of Thomas Aquinas will show. Medieval theology assumed as postulates the very things which are now in question, and spun out from them an immense web of deductions which were taken for supreme truth. The medieval queen of the sciences is to-day as dead as alchemy."

W. D. Moore writes: "I have been a medium over fifty years. My guides have always sought my good, and helped me in many ways. I could fill a volume with my experiences of the most startling nature. I know there is no death."

John A. Toren writes: "The Society of the Psychic Forces, held at Wilcox Hall, 361 E. 43rd street, is being well attended Sunday after Sunday, and Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt is still with us giving us some grand thoughts and splendid lectures. Mrs. Isa Cleveland is entirely recovered again, and back to the hall doing good work. We wish to announce that our hall will be open all the summer, and we try to make all who attend welcome. Meetings at 3 and 8 p. m. Tests and messages at both services."

Frank T. Ripley, the well-known lecturer and test medium, is now ready to make engagements for the fall and winter. Address all letters to Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 563, until July 10; then after that date to Chesterfield, Ind. until Aug. 17. His home address is at Tipton Ind.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

On account of the rush of press work on Monday, the Fourth of July coming on Tuesday, we are compelled to go to press the preceding Saturday, hence many items will not appear which would otherwise.

The converts to Spiritualism are those who have received personal evidence of its truth. To accept and defend that truth, however unpopular it may be, is an expression of moral courage and sincerity which is as refreshing as it is commendable. No man should shrink from declaring his "evidence of things not seen," thus accentuating Paul's definition of "faith."—H. V. Sweringen.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood has been engaged to serve the society at Buffalo, N. Y., two months next year.

Will J. Erwood writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "Everything is going nicely in the Temple; no sensationalism, consequently no rows of any kind. We are having fine audiences."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Prof. Payson Longley will spend a few weeks in Boston, Mass. Mrs. Mary T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., will speak at Onset, Mass, June 20. The Benevolent Spiritualist Society has adjourned its meetings until the first Thursday in September. The Temple League met as usual at Mrs. W. Farrow's residence. After the business session, Mr. Walter P. Williams on behalf of the League, presented Mrs. M. A. Congdon with a beautiful silver mounted fountain pen. Mrs. Congdon is recording secretary for this society. She leaves for the Pacific Coast and will be succeeded by Mrs. Manchester. Mrs. W. Farrow leaves for Rhode Island, Mr. Farrow, the vice-president, will succeed her as president. Mrs. Fanny Dridee, the treasurer, will soon leave for the south. Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler and family will soon leave for their summer residence at Lily Dale, N. Y."

Robert B. Cookson writes from Bangor, Me.: "On Sundays June 18 and 25, the people of Bangor had the pleasure of listening to the inspired utterances of the eminent medium, Oscar A. Edgerly. For definite logic, and practical common sense, we do not think Mr. Edgerly's lectures can be surpassed. The Spiritualists of our city were pleased to welcome Mr. Edgerly, as he had not been with us since the early days of his mediumship. We were pleased to note the progress he has made in his ability as an exponent of our grand philosophy, and we wish him Godspeed in his return to the wider fields of labor in the west."

R. H. Ross of Sawtelle, Cal., writes of the good work being done there. Spiritualist meetings are not allowed to be held at the Soldiers' Home near there, hence the interest in the cause was removed to Sawtelle. "Five years ago it was a barley field; now it has about 1,600 people, most the old vets and their families, and five churches and three halls. But what I wish to say is, one little band called the Holy Jumpers, had a street meeting. As soon as they were through and started for their church, Sister Bryan of Los Angeles, commenced to talk Spiritualism to the crowd, and to give tests of spirit return and messages, right on the street, and then invited the crowd to the hall, which was filled. She has kept this up for six weeks every Wednesday evening, and now comes camp-meeting for four weeks. So the good work goes on. I learn that Sister Bryan has been invited into one orthodox church to preach her spiritualizing sermons."

It was recently announced that a party of South Dakota people who last fall left for South Africa in obedience to instructions alleged to have been received direct from the Lord were stranded in that far-off land and would return to South Dakota when provided with funds to cover the cost of the journey. Information has now been received at Sioux Falls, that a number of the victims of a false prophet have secured the necessary funds and already have commenced the long journey to their former homes in Dakota. They left for South Africa as the result of an alleged revelation made to a self-styled prophet named Hendrickson, who declared the Lord had informed him that if the members of the party would start for South Africa on a certain day the Lord would provide for them upon their arrival at their distant destination.

Dr. Beverly writes: "We were glad to welcome last Sunday, Mrs. Kayner, late of Texas, who gave us a fine talk and some lovely tests. She has a very sweet spirit of humility, and will do great good in her travels and public work. Mrs. Rice, our talented musician, has prepared a fine program for next Sunday afternoon. Prof. Blackman, now playing in the Woggle Bug, and Mrs. Bennett, the sweet singer, will render a duet. Our music is the finest that can be procured and our afternoon meetings draw a large crowd. We want all our friends to come and help at our annual picnic next month. Our meetings are open all Summer."

Psycho-Harmonial Therapy, the 20th century healing system, based upon the musical scale, will be taught and demonstrated to a class of students at the Winfield, Kansas, camp-meeting, from July 1 5to 25 inclusive. For particulars address Mrs. Addie McAllister, Winfield, Kansas, or the founder and originator of the system, P. Pearson, Ponca City, O. T.

An aged Spiritualist, Nathaniel Jenks, of Methuen, Mass., writes: "I am pleased to send you the subscription for another year. I may not live the year out, as I am past my 82d post mark; but I work every day. Last week I went up on a house and repaired a brick chimney."

William P. Butler is using hypnotism in his fight against cigarettes and intemperance. He is a member of St. Gabriel's Total Abstinence Benevolent Society of Hazleton, Pa. "I have had great success," said he "I have hypnotized many cigarette fiends and cured them. I have had boys come to me and solicit my aid, and often parents have come also. I have found that where the subject was willing to be cured and just needed the hypnotic that it was easy to cure him, once he submitted willingly to be hypnotized."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, July 9, 1905. S. E. 58: "The Lyceum Leads."

Gem of Thought:—

'Tis hard to hush the man who thinks—
Feels sure he knows his needs,—
Give Reason's cup, he takes, and drinks,
This way, "the Lyceum leads."

The hungering mind of aged and youth,
In kindness led soon feeds
On Love and Justice, Right and Truth,
By these, "the Lyceum leads."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

THE FOLLOWING PROGRAM constitutes the summer work of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond: Leaving their home in Rogers Park, July 2, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will be at Corry, Pa., July 3 to 14; Cuba, N. Y., July 14 to 21; Lily Dale, N. Y., 21 to 28; Lake Brady, Ohio, July 30, and Mantua, Ohio, Aug 1 to 6, inclusive; Onset, Mass., Aug. 7 to 14; Unity Camp (near Lynn, Mass.) Aug. 20 to 27; New York City and the Catskills, Sept. 1 to (about) Sept. 15. Services will commence at the Church of the Soul, in Chicago, Sunday, September 17, 1905.

HELEN STUART RICHINGS, who has been in the far Northwest for several years, is returning to the lecture platform, and desires to correspond with societies wishing the services of an inspirational lecturer, psychometrist and dramatic artist. Terms most reasonable, especially for long engagements. Address P. O. Box 115, Seattle, Wash.

W. M. SAGE WRITES FROM BERGEN, N. Y.: "WHEN I FIRST READ YOUR PREMIUM OFFER OF 12 VOLUMES FOR $3.75, I SAID TO MYSELF, HOW CAN THAT BE, FOR IT IS LESS THAN 32 CENTS PER COPY. HOWEVER, I AT ONCE SENT FOR AND RECEIVED THEM. AT THIS WRITING I HAVE ONLY FINISHED READING FOUR OF THE BOOKS, AND I HAVE BEEN RICHLY PAID ALREADY FOR THE OUTLAY, AND HAVE YET EIGHT MORE BOOKS TO READ WHICH, I SHALL FEEL, HAVE COST ME NOTHING. I THANK YOU FOR YOUR PUBLIC GENEROSITY."

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes: "The Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association will hold its annual bazaar at its grounds, Saugus Center, Mass., on July 12 to 15, inclusive. All articles usually found at fairs on sale. Spiritual meetings will be held every afternoon. Rev. Mrs. Pepper, the wonderful psychic of Brooklyn, N. Y., will be present each day. Private readings can be procured on the grounds. The fair will be open afternoons and evenings. Will mediums desiring to give readings, please notify me what days they will be present, that they may be advertised. Mrs. Pepper will also be the speaker at this camp on Sundays July 9 and 16. Cars leave Scollay Square 19 minutes past and 11 minutes of the hour."

E. A. Doty writes from Albany, N. Y.: "Our hearts have been made glad and life's pathway brightened by an all too brief visit from our dear friend, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, of San Francisco, Cal. Just twenty-four short hours with us, and the fast mail train on the New York Central, is bearing her on her way to Lake Brady, where we know a warm welcome awaits her. From Brady she goes to Chesterfield, Ind., where thousands of progressive truth-seekers will be gathered to listen to the grand inspirations and messages from our spirit friends. May loving angel friends guide and protect her always."

Seven Spiritualists send the following: "We are glad to announce that there is one more honest medium in the field, whose demonstrations cannot be denied. Mr. L. H. Wilson of Kokomo, Ind., now in his 22nd year, having developed as a trumpet medium in one of our local circles, gave his first public seance last night, which was well attended, and a decided success. He has sat under the severe test of being tied hand and foot and then to the chair and seated with a critical investigator, when the trumpet was floated to the ceiling and to every sitter in the room, giving several good messages. This medium has developed in less than four months' sitting, owing to special instructions given by our guides, which we follow implicitely and by which we are developing several others with almost equal rapidity. Signed: E. H. Manning, Clarence Shaw, Josie McCool, J. L. Brown, J. W. Pauley, F. J. Newman, M. E. Shutters."

D. G. Hill writes: "Notwithstanding the intense heat of Sunday, June 25, a good-sized audience was present at the services of the Golden Rule Spiritualist society. The speaker of the afternoon, Mrs. J. L. Fravel delivered a fine address (subject chosen from the audience), with messages by Mrs. Nora E. Hill and Mrs. M. Schumacher. For the evening, Dr. Geo. B. Warne held the close attention of all, followed by the beautiful christening services by the guide of Mrs. Nora E. Hill. The entire service was a fitting closing of the season's work. This society will hold summer meetings at O'Donnell College hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue, each Sunday evening of July and August, except July 9; on that date our grove meeting and basket picnic will be held in John A. Robb's grove, Lyons, Ill., on the bank of river near the junction of the Ogden avenue and Joliet street car line. All north and south street car lines connect with the Ogden avenue line. Come with your lunch and enjoy a pleasant outing."

Eula M. Golden writes: "The Flint Spiritual Research Society held meetings Sunday forenoon and evening with Frank T. Ripley as lecturer. His work was much appreciated not only by the members of the society, but by skeptics as well. We were much disappointed because he could not be with us longer, but hope he may come again sometime in the future."

Wm. M. Tebo writes from Butte, Montana, stating that Madame Bell is doing an excellent work there, and that Bro. Harry Moore was mistaken in his statement in reference to her.

AFTER DEATH, WHAT?

Death, thou art a mystery
Fearful to humanity.
Mystery is something strange,
Death is only subtle change.
Nature knows nothing of death,
Life is more than fleeting breath;
In Dame Nature's systems vast,
Naught but truth will always last.

Like the fleeting clouds in space,
Ever changing form and place,
So man's spirit will unfold
Through transitions manifold,
Ever seeking greater light,
Always gaining clearer sight,
Seeking an ideal goal
Is the mission of the soul.

Creedal darkness shrouds man's mind,
Superstition keeps man blind,
Ignorance, mother of fear,
Dominates frail mortals here.
Seek within the inner shrine
For the living truth divine.
Truth alone will make man free,
Man is part of Deity.

A BATTLE ROYAL.

For the Upliftment and Betterment of Humanity.

Under good spirit influence, I desire to write the truth and facts for the betterment of humanity. Any principle established in a soul that will make men and women better in our world, is what is needed at all times.

While there always has been corruption in rulers of governments and churches, there has been also a reform element contending for the right. In most cases, the minority is correct on true principles of action, but the majority is led astray by powerful influences in politics or religion. If the leaders of the people have been impure in most cases, how can we expect the masses of mankind to be pure in their actions. Then the greatest message to our fellow citizens should be education in morality, virtue, love, honesty and patriotism. Is it any wonder that progress in Christianity has been moving so slowly through the past ages, while there has been so much confusion and division among all the religious forces on this earth sphere? Who is right? is a very important question. There always has been one true spiritual church, and all other denominations are branches from it. Therefore, there has been much room in all the centuries past for counterfeits, shams and impostors, frauds and hypocrites, in all the religions of the human races.

The genuine spiritual philosophy of the tribes and nations of the world has been contaminated by popery, priests and false teachers, whose object has been to keep the people in ignorance, so they could control them in church and state.

Many of the prophets and apostles of the Bible taught the doctrines of love and mercy of the Creator for His children—that it is far greater than an earthly parent has for his offspring.

But others teach everlasting torment and banishment from God, but that all who believe on the Heavenly Father, and are baptized, will be saved literally. They also require repentance and good works, which must be right and proper.

But the important question arises: Can love and revenge, hatred and kindness come from the same fountain?

The prophets and patriarchs of all time have been inspired to write and teach as they were raised and taught by their philosophers, and the traditions of the fathers. Inspiration is the living principle of a soul born of the spirit, which expands in lofty ideals, and flows out in eloquence and power, from enlightened humane beings, through thoughts, words and sentences that produce lasting impressions on other souls. It may be spoken or written.

Men and women in all generations receive inspiration from the same source of spirit power. The ancients, then, were inspired by spiritual influence; and so are all aspiring souls of modern Spiritualism, and other religions of mankind.

Beliefs have been as numerous as the human race. Is it any wonder, then, that a mighty contention has been going on through all the periods of time, over every question that interests the people, of all nations and countries, not only for time, but for eternity?

Will some great event soon occur in the world to clear the mystery of the ages, and make plain to all nations the light and truth about God, and all of His glorious works of creation?

Is it not about time this great dispute, ever under discussion, is settled right?

Or, is it better to have the controversy continue, and the battle raging through all time?

Ever since the wonderful sermon on the Mount, by Jesus, it has been taught the many generations of men have been living under a new dispensation. Christ's glorious principles were to bring about a new order of things, for the old laws of despotism and might were to be superseded by the laws of love and forgiveness. But, has it brought a better state of affairs, than existed before the high ideals of Christ, and other great and pure prophets were uttered?

Were not the dark and middle ages, the worst period of murder, torture and religious wars in the world's history? Read what the Great Teacher taught, in St. Matthew 10:34: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace, but a sword."

That declaration has proven true in every century since it was spoken. In the nations of earth to-day the military spirit is growing stronger and a mighty navy is the policy of all powerful governments. The spirit of arbitration in settling national disputes, is ably discussed, but will it ever succeed fully and satisfactorily?

In education, the arts and sciences, together with the wonderful inventions of modern times, there has been great progress, but human natures continue the same in all generations. Man has two natures, the evil and the good, and whichever is cultivated to the greatest extent predominates.

There is ignorance, superstition, prejudice, bigotry and many evils in human nature that must be overcome by resistance and practice, before man can be pure, holy and attractive.

Under the evil environments of society, where selfishness is a ruling element, it is impossible to reach perfection. But, when the spirit is separated from the body by death, it can enter the spiritual world, freed from a fleshly nature, and pass on to the celestial clime by education and progression.

To overcome selfish nature, and evil environments of the world and society, requires a battle royal all along life's journey, until the end of earthly life is reached in this lower sphere, and the victory won in establishing a true and noble character.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

Facts Presented by Prof. J. Syphers.

Thus when people can understand the do actually govern "souls both in and out of the body, they will all be willing workers and the public in general will grasp at Spiritualism.—Exchange.

This is undoubterdly true. Now give us some pointers on how "divine laws" do actually goven "souls both in and out of the body." The public awaits the knowledge, with equanimity.—Ingersoll Memorial Beacon.

I take it from the above that the editor of the bright little monthly is a materialistic, "death-ends-all, half-way house" philosopher. I knew Bob Ingersoll when he was but a boy studying law in Peoria, and I have followed him all through his wonderful career. On the immortality question, he was far from being a half-way-houser. He always said that life after death was no more unlikely nor mysterious than life before death. He said the idea of the everlasting continuance of the beautiful phenomena of human life under a system of ever progressing conditions, was one of the most purifying and lovely ideas that ever could dwell in the human mind. He said that his strongest objection to the Spiritualistic philosophy and religion used to be, that it was too good to be true. But he said: "I have about got over that idea now." He now believed that nothing could be too good for man. He said that some of the happiest days of his life was when he visited the spiritual campmeetings. He said that everybody there had nothing but love and smiles for him. There he heard nothing but kind words that added so much to his happiness and the pleasures of an earthly existence. He said the good Spiritualists would never let up till they had him on their platform to speak to the people. "They almost worshiped me as a god." But, says Bob, "Think of the difference when I happened to stop once at an orthodox Methodist camp-meeting. When they found out that I was on the grounds, all the preachers and many of the church-members were so stirred up about me, almost as much as they would be if their great old mythical devil had suddenly appeared in their midst.."

He said the Methodist women always looked the blackest at him. They came around him by hundreds, and gazed at him with great big round, wide open, and astonished eyes. Then they would turn away and fairly gnash their teeth with rage, although he tried his level best to show them some of the sweetest smiles that ever played on his human face divine. He tried hard to say some of the nicest things that he was capable of. But not on the subject of religion at all, for there were thousands of nice subjects that he could talk about, without hinting at the vexed subject of religion. Some of the women wondered what brought the devil's imps there anyhow? But the preachers who seemed to be at least half-civilized were delighted to engage with him in conversation, during the course of which they indulged in many smiles and occasionally in a good hearty laugh. They said as long as I did not come there to agitate the subject of religion, they were pleased to meet me at their camp. But they were very shy of asking me onto their platform to speak to them, although if they had I would not have touched upon the subject of religion, for the world."

But I sat down for the purpose of penning a few thoughts on some of the sentiments contained in the clipping above from the Ingersoll Memorial Beacon, that a writer in some one of the spiritual papers put forth, that when the people come to understand the divine laws governing souls and spirits both in the body and out of the body, they would grasp at Spiritualism. The editor of the Beacon says, "Yes, that is true." But then he immediately demands, "Now give us a few pointers on how divine laws do actually govern souls or spirits both in the body and out of it."

But now, see here, Mr. Smart, you admit that what the Spiritualist said is true. Now, we demand of you to give us a few of the pointers that enabled you to say, "Yes, that is true." If you fail to do so, then we will have to place you with that class of philosophers who will say "Yes, that is true," without any evidence! You say that the people are anxiously awaiting that kind of knowledge. We answer, Yes, the immortality question is now having the right of way in the human mind as it never had before. Especially is this the case since in these modern times there has a large class of "pointers" or new proofs come into the world.

If your school of short-sighted, "half-way-house" philosophers try to prove that death ends all, we can give you "facts" and "pointers" of such a nature that they will put you down in the hole so deep that if you ever do scratch out it will be along with the next return of the 17-year locusts.

The world is now full of clear, plain, and demonstrated facts. I am able to make this strong declaration to you and to the whole world, that if I have not seen, heard (in long conversations) and handled many of my people after death, then I never saw or conversed with them before death. I have hundreds of these stubborn kinds of facts, seen and heard by dozens of witnesses, lawyers, preachers, college professors and some of the smartest kind of American ladies. I can give very minute and circumstantial detail of my manifestations, and am ready for the severest cross-examination. Now, Mr. Editor Beacon, these kinds of proofs and pointers knock all your blind "half-way house" philosophy into a cocked hat. And if you can't explain nor confute my facts on any other hypothesis than the one which I give them, then they prove forever the falsity of your short-sighted, purblind, materialistic philosophy. I should like to some day write up just one of my proofs of a continued life after death and have some one of the self-conceited Smart Alecs, try their hand at a cross examination and see if they can make it plain at just what point or points I am mistaken. And now just for the fun of the thing, come on, any of you materialistic infidels, even dear old Charley Moore, of Blue-Grass Blade fame. Dear old Charley—how I love the dear old boy. I regard him as one of the sharpest and most unsophisticated, honest old chaps now living in this country. As far as Alexander Campbell, the great founder, author and finisher of the Campbellite sect, is concerned, Charley and I are in about the same fix. Only on the hereafter business, Charley is not quite sure—and I am sure, based upon hundreds of infallible proofs.

HIS MEDIUMSHIP.

And the Instrument He Uses in Giving Readings.

I had to wait nearly five years before I was able to receive anything tangible from my spirit guides; but to my great joy at last it came, and while yet in business I convinced many of the truth of spirit return.

While I was developing, my great prayer and desire to my guides was for them to give me something in the physical by which I could demonstrate in public.

Almost from the start I received many raps in my room, day and night, and also materialization occurred several times at night. I have also received a message between two slates, under my pillow, written by unseen hands.

So far the best of all the manifestations came last January. I met a gentleman who had been sitting for development of mediumship. He had two small telegraphic instruments. While talking to him, my spirit guide, a lady, told me that she would operate one of them for me. The instruments up to this time had been of no use to the owner. I obtained one of them, bought a dry battery, and started to work. At first the influence came a little slow, but soon when putting my hand on the instrument it would tick away at a great rate. Since then I have always been able to get the manifestations on the ticker. It is used in giving my readings, as it demonstrated to the sitter plainly the presence of unseen forces operating the same.

To my mind and to people who think and study along these lines, this is the only instrument that can be operated in the light and in public successfully. I would suggest that more of our new mediums give this a thought, and try to sit for it. I have had grand success with this little ticker so far, and my guides tell me there is more to follow.

I do not claim this as a new phase of mediumship. I know at least one, the medium I started to develop with years ago, who also had it, and I have been told others have it also. I use this instrument daily in giving my readings. I am prepared to go to anyone's home to hold circles in or near the city. Until further notice, I will be located at 214 E. Thirty-first street, Room 24. HENRY ELLIS.

No Pretense of Jugglery.

Before I attended the seance of the upholsterer, Fuss, a report of which I made for The Progressive Thinker, and which appeared in the issue of June 17, he declared that at a previous seance the twenty-one persons present expressed their conviction by a rising vote that the phenomena they had witnessed were spiritual. Mr. Fuss is a psychic. He used to give voluntary tests to his customers, but the result was a loss of trade, and now he talks of obtaining a license, but not as a medium. That would cost $25 a year. As a conjurer he would have to pay $5 for every performance. But he did not claim to be a conjurer. At the close of the performance of May 14, he was asked how the things were done. His answer was, "That is for you to find out." The fact is that no conjurer can do what he does.

SEANCE MANIFESTATIONS.

Giving Convincing Proofs of Spirit Return.

Every Friday evening there is a circle at 736 North Ashland avenue, led by the gifted psychic psychic, Mrs. B. Musida, where we have most clear independent spirit speaking and grand, convincing proofs of spirit return.

The spirits manifesting themselves often explain to us in a most beautiful way the truths and phenomena of Spiritualism, and teach us how to live, what to avoid, and also about the life and spheres beyond. Often a spirit relates to us his experiences from the hour he left his mortal body till his present state, and how long it took him to get light.

These spirits are often most excellent and intelligent teachers, as some of them are able to illustrate their words of kind admonition with most convincing facts. One night the spirit of former Police Inspector Shaack came pleading we should not condemn him because he persecuted and prosecuted mediums while yet in the flesh, but send him our best thoughts, as it would lessen his suffering and help him in his present condition.

Also the spirit of a well known Lutheran clergyman advised one of the members in the circle, who was also a Lutheran clergyman formerly, how to preach and teach the truths of spiritual philosophy, whenever opportunity offers it. He also said: "If only my former clerical brothers would believe these truths, what a blessing would they be to their congregations in freeing them of their errors."

Another spirit came in a sad, pleading way, asking a member of the circle one night for forgiveness for a serious wrong he had done him while yet in earth life, and send good thoughts, and in time literature of this new light to his family.

Another spirit gave a sketch of the work our mediums had done in Joliet and how the truth was gaining ground in that city. He also expressed his gratitude for having received this light while in the body, and implored our medium to go to Joliet again for a few weeks, as many longing souls would find light through her teaching.

Many more interesting facts I could relate, but this may be sufficient for this time. Only this I would like to say, that when a medium endeavors to live right and seances are kept right, they are a blessing in giving light and strength to the soul.

HIMALYA

(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER —AND— ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clasen, 158 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanborville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 16th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Sunday-school Attendant: Q. As I do not know how much a cubit is, I beg to ask you. This has reference to the size of the ark which in the Bible is stated in that measure.

A. The cubit was the length of the fore-arm from the elbow to the end of the thumb or middle finger. It sometimes, as illustrated in the builders of the pyramids, was this length with the width of the hand added. Of course this was an uncertain quantity and has been estimated by various authorities at from 19 to 26 inches. The Hebrew cubit is even more uncertain, but has been fixed at about 22 inches (19.888).

The Bible says the ark was 300 cubits long, 50 wide and 30 deep. If this measure be taken the ark in round numbers was 550 feet long, 90 feet wide and 55 feet high. It was a fine old tub, built in defiance of all rules of marine construction. It was a three-decker, and had a floor space on each deck of 49,500 square feet. Perhaps with careful storage, a pair of all the animals and creeping things might be shipped on this craft, but the preparation for the baggage presents greater difficulties. To have fed the carnivorous animals would have required all the ark could have carried, and then the hay, grain, etc., which must have been taken aboard. The ark had one door for entrance which when all were inside, Noah must have engaged some of the sinners on the outside to have closed and battened. The only ventilation or aperture was a hole in the deck a cubit square! It was exciting times, no doubt, yet the heterogeneous cargo had to breathe, and that cubit square airhole was all the ventilation God planned for the ark. Having made the blunder, he must have sustained the inmates by direct and continuous miracle. At the end of this yachting tour the ark stranded on the top of Mount Ararat, and rested there for seven months waiting for the earth to dry. Ararat rises to the height of 17,212 feet above the level of the sea, or from 3,000 to 5,000 feet above the line of perpetual snow. On its intensely cold summit the winds never cease their wintry blasts. The inmates of the ark must have had a pleasant seven months in the blizzard winds of the mountain top.

R. Blanchard: Q. If the spiritual world surrounds the planets in belts or zones following the motion and held in place by the attraction of the planets, what will be the effect upon the spiritual belts or zones when the planets cease to exist?

A. All that can be known of the spirit spheres must be derived from the communications of its inhabitants. In "Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World" is the following in reference thereto, and its understanding is essential to the solution of this question. "If there is a heaven—a home for the spirit—it must be orginated and sustained by natural laws."

"Matter is subject to eternal progress, from the granite rock which juts to the sky in the craggy mountain peaks, to the atoms of blood coursing through the veins of man. Matter arises from the crude angular to the refined spherical. Still further is the process carried in spirit, which is sublimated matter. From all worlds the latter ascends as it is freed by the processes of life. We can see it escaping from the rock within which chemical forces are at work; from the growing or decaying plant, set free by light; and from the dying animal like vapor."

The first zone or sphere, "is constantly increased by additions of new material brought from the earth by ascending currents. Substance—a word we use to designate spiritual matter—arises to the level where its attractive and repulsive tendencies are equal, which is the position of the first sphere. There its ascent is arrested and it enters at once into this formation. Still subject to planetary laws it rotates around the earth as a center. The zone rotates, and hence its plane of rotation must coincide with that of the earth."

In the spheres the same refining process goes on as in the rudimental or earth-sphere. Matter—as substance—even there, is far from its ultimate. These spheres extend in a similar manner around the earth, the most external lying beyond the moon, that luminary revolving between the second and third sphere." * * * "Each inhabited planet has spheres in size, rotation and number as diversified as their satellites—and the whole solar system, as one, joins to throw around itself, as a whole, spiritual zones held in common, as they encircle the solar system. And, carrying the analogy farther, this entire world continent, the vast galaxy, or what is usually called the universe—throws around itself, by emanations from all its component solar and stellar systems, a series of ascending zones. These zones unite and blend the universe into one whole, permeable through out its extent for the most refined spiritual beings."

Another brief quotation I cannot refrain from making, as it throws a flood of light on some vexed questions.

"If such as the home of pure and noble spirits, where is that of the vile and debased? On earth—[the rudimental sphere]. You have a world of spirits, constantly around you. You see them not; you neither hear nor feel them; yet they are with you, dwelling by your side. Such spirits are chained to earth by attraction, and cannot rise to the second sphere until taey have cast off the taint of earth. These are the spirits who, in their communications, tell you that animals exist in the spiritual world. To them they really do. Spirits cannot discern physical matter more than man with natural vision can see spiritual substance. When they look at an animal they cannot see its gross form; they only see its spirit; they cannot see the external plant; they see the internal plant; it is not the external but the internal world which meets their perception. Earth being their sphere, they consider the spirit world as not only inhabited by human spirits, but of animals also; and they also say truly that the latter are necessary for their existence."

From the foregoing it will be seen that evolution of the spiritual universe is through the ascending changes of the physical. As the spirit of man is individualized by the process of evolution, is the home prepared for that spirit.

We may speculate on the final of the process, following two distinct lines. We may suppose the time will come when all physical matter shall have passed into spiritual substance, or that then will remain an unresolvable residuum, which would, indeed be dead worlds, but rotating in their present orbits, modified by size, density and attraction.

Or the yet more startling theory be accepted that these residual suns and planets, having exhausted their energies, will fall back to the central sun of universe, and be again dispersed in the fire-mists nebular state, to re-enact the incomprehensible world—evolution.

Whatever theory or speculation we indulge in, has no bearing on the existence and stability of the spirit-zones. Having established motions, by cosmic laws, superior to those of the physical, they swing in the abyss of space independent.

As a speculation, but one apparently dependent on this scheme of evolution and sublimation of physical matter into spiritual substance, it would seem that the destiny of the material worlds is to pass into the spiritual zones, whose established revolutions and relations would be maintained by the laws which now control them.

Death of a Prominent Spiritualist

Passed to spirit life, at Dallas Texas, at 12:30 p. m., June 21, Mrs. C. W. Watkins, "Aunt Shug," wife of Capt. J. C. Watkins.

To mediums and speakers throughout this broad land who have visited and worked in Texas, this announcement will bring sadness and regret. For over twenty years Watkins' Hotel, on Swiss avenue, this city, has been the Mecca for Spiritualists, and for nearly or quite as long, Mrs. Watkins has been the central figure around which Spiritualistic work moved. For almost two-thirds of a century this good woman has lived "faithful unto the end"—her hand outstretched to the poor and needy, her arms open to the weak and helpless. What grateful souls, what thankful hearts we should have, we who have learned this truth, that death is death no more; this birth into a sweeter, purer life, is just as natural as birth into the physical life. When family and friends rejoice at the advent of a babe into this mortal life, they seldom realize that greater joy and gladness welcomes the birth of a soul into immortal life. Always ready with heart and hand "Aunt Shug" has found many to greet her in that fairer life, to whom she has given the kindly word, the unselfish deed, and noble charity, which made life here a little sweeter and a little better to them. Honest and true herself, she looked for—expected, truth and honesty from others. Sometimes deceived, it grieved her tender heart to find such an one less noble than she deemed. We have been taught for ages, that when the "last enemy, Death," is destroyed, then the millennium will come. Such a life here, and the joyous greeting of loved and loving ones in her newer life, tells us that Death is indeed conquered, and that the light of the millennial dawn is breaking on this world.

"Oh, death, where is thy sting!
Oh, grave, where is thy victory!"

Mrs. Watkins made all arrangements for her funeral, naming speakers, songs to be sung, and arranged all details. Services were conducted jointly by Mrs. Mary Arnold Wilson, Mrs. Laura B. Payne and Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, all of Fort Worth, in accordance with her request. The services were impressive and beautiful, and the great concourse of friends, the many lovely floral offerings testified to the love of those who knew her. While we shall miss her bodily presence here, we yet know she lives and loves as before. And so, with hearts full of love, we bid our friend God-speed.

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE.
Dallas, Texas.

THE MOTHER.

She was so tired of toil, of everything,
Save loving those who needed all her love!
Her heart was like the golden heart of spring
When white clouds sail above.

Autumn of life and tears were hers, and yet
She sang and loved and gladdened us the while;
Nor storms, nor snow could make her once forget
Young April's radiant smile.

She was so weary; but we never guessed
How weary, till she smiled at set of sun,
And whispered, as she drifted into rest—
My loving work is done."

"Tired of all save loving." Let this be
The epitaph inscribed where now she lies.
Time shall not hide the words, nor memory
The love-look of her eyes.

An Important Message.

THE OTHER SIDE OF LIFE.

Communication From President William McKinley, Through the Mediumship of Ella F. Porter, 206 Lenox Road, Brooklyn, N. Y.

To My Beloved Friend, Judge A. Munson:—Your letter reached me through the organism of this psychic, whom I impressed to read it aloud, when sitting in the silence, the evening it came. I was deeply interested in its contents, and pleased with the earnest tone, and the depth of feeling and sincerity which pervaded the whole.

I am with you, my friend, heart and soul, in this cause of Eternal Justice, and the divine uplifting of all humanity.

You ask for my views, from a spiritual standpoint, as I view the outlook from my spirit home in this world of causes.

Are you aware, my good friend, that oftimes I come to your side and impress you with many of my ideas and views of the world's present struggle? When you feel the magnetic thrill pervade your whole being, when your thoughts are directed toward me, then you may be assured, without doubt, that my soul responds to yours, and that we commune in spirit, though yet separated by this veil of flesh, which prevents you from seeing me clearly, though you oft sense my presence.

Your friendship is very dear to me, Judge Munson, and I treasure it as one of my most sacred, priceless possessions.

Ah! with what different eyes, and glorious, far-seeing vision, does one view life, who has passed through the gateway of death! These realms of ever increasing joys, this spirit land of glorious and grand possibilities, this true home of the soul over here, can be but faintly pictured to mortals on the earth plane, whose limited vision, cramped by environments, renders them incapable of true comprehension.

Mankind, sometimes through ignorance, yet oftener through selfish greed, and desires of personal pleasure, and the accumulation of great riches, oppress the weak, and cruelly inflict suffering upon the down-trodden and oppressed.

When I lived in my form upon earth, how often, oh! how often, did my heart ache and bleed for the many sad and pitiful cases which I oft beheld. The law, sometimes so powerful, yet again so weak, to assist in restoring the rights of individuals, to rescue the fallen, and to save the erring from committing far greater crimes.

As in individual cases, so is witnessed the same in great nations, the cruel injustice of the strong and powerful daily witnessed in the affairs of men and nations, the effects of the money-eyed few to control and to crush the weaker ones, and the poorer side of humanity—the heartlessness and greed of those who are in power, and the treachery and deceit often shown towards those who loved and trusted too well—the lack of honor and principle displayed among those high in authority, ofttimes made me shudder when upon earth, and my heart turned sick and faint within me at the sight.

Had it not been then, for the unswerving love and trust which was mine, in the goodness of the creator of all things, I could not have borne with outward equanimity and patience, much that I was forced to witness, and which came to my immediate notice. Often would I cogitate, and say to myself, "What can one man do, or even a small handful of men, compared with the millions of beings which inhabit the earth, to stem the tide towards evil, and lead the majority into the path of rectitude?"

Ah! well, I thought then, here is a remedy, and a good one! the masses must be educated. Universal, free education for everyone, in the higher branches as well as lower. Give every one a chance to develop the gifts God gave them. There should be more "Cooper Unions," more free colleges, more philanthropists, more multi-millionaires possessed of good, generous hearts, who are willing to spend their last dollar for the free education of the masses. Individuals must be developed and educated, and develop a better, nobler race of men, before we can expect nations to become more humane and enlightened.

And now from my spirit home above, and from my clearer, far-seeing vision do I view the present status of affairs upon earth, and will say, I hold these same views of education for the betterment of humanity; only with the added impetus of my increased knowledge and broader view, I now tell you, my good friend, Judge Munson, that in the right education of an individual for the purification of nations, does religion play a most important part. My eyes have been widely opened upon this subject, since I became a denizen of the spirit land, and I assure you that could I live my life over again on earth and reside in the form once more, with my present knowledge of life on both sides of the river, I would oppose, with all the intensity of my nature, all the narrow, sectarian views of religion. I would annihilate priestcraft if it was within my power I would show to the world the hypocrisy and cunning of the old, established church, with its forms and ceremonies, the sanctimonious priests, and the devout worshipers at the man-made shrine.

Oh! now much I have learned since I came to this side, my friend! My eyes, that once were blinded, are now fully opened to the enormity of the crimes committed under the name of the church. The present terrible evil upon earth, this horrible, merciless war now between Japan and Russia, witnessed by millions of pitying angels in the higher realms, this needless bloodshed now going on upon your planet, is the result of powerful causes for ages past.

The prophecy from the spirit world, is the final triumph of Truth and Justice, for Japan will be victorious, and Russia will see the beginning of her downfall. The spirit powers above are determined to give Russia a much-needed lesson, and though it may take some time, that lesson must be fully learned before she can ever rise triumphant and purified from the errors of the past. She will yet be crushed to earth, and from a mighty nation, powerful and dominant as she is to-day, she will sink and fall into ages of obscurity, and her star will have apparently set on the earth's horizon, its luster dim and faded for many, many years.

But the day will finally come, when, on the ruins of her past, she will rebuild, and grow strong and powerful, far superior in every way to the old Russia, so full of intolerable oppression, power and bloodshed. She will then become a Republic, no more serfs or slaves of any kind, but everywhere Freedom, Justice and Right will prevail. I can make this prophecy with a fearless utterance, because of aknowledge I have recently gained from my attendance at the "National Spiritual Convention," where the affairs of earth are ably discussed by the enlightened minds of the higher spheres.

Everything that happens on the earth plane is well known here, and why? Remember, this is the world of cause, your world is a plane of effects. Whatever happens upon earth, you may rest assured is known to the spirit world, as the effect of some powerful cause directed by the higher spirits. Your earth is now upon the eve of a long and terrible struggle. It cannot, in fact, it is impossible to be avoided. There is great danger of a world-wide war extending all over your fair land. It is the outcome of long ages of oppression and depression. It is a volcanic eruption of the smouldering fires which have long been hidden from general gaze. But though this war which is now raging in Europe, may, after awhile, reach this side of the water, and the fair land of America may be somewhat involved in the struggle, I can safely assure you it will be of short duration. For, by the time it reaches this side of the Atlantic, the force of the war will be well-night spent, and the fires of anarchy will have burned themselves out. The fever which has been so long raging in the veins of nations, will have exploded its force by the time it reaches America, and the cool, clear head of reason will then take the helm, and many of the bitter, puzzling questions will then be settled by arbitration. Then, my friend, will come days of peace for your planet earth—then will begin in earnest, the millennium, which has so long been prophesied by great and good men from time immemorial. Then will come a better, nobler race of men, more spiritual and peaceful, who will commune with the angel world as easily as they now do with each other.

This convulsion of all the elements, this final throe in Nature's realms, is but a natural outcome of the preceding ages of wrong doing, and is but a natural effort to throw off the incubus, and the heavy weight of long accumulated woe, to enable the world to rouse from its spiritual lethargy, and emerge into a higher realm of life and to live near the spiritual center of all goodness and truth.

As I told you before, my friend, of the new earth, with new and better laws, and a nobler race of men, so do I now repeat the dawn of a new spiritual dispensation is near at hand, and the final outcome of this mighty struggle on earth will be the redemption and purification of all humanity. Could your eyes only perceive, as mine now do, the advancing of the mighty hosts of purified souls, bringing light and power and glory with them, as they come near, and ever nearer the earth plane, from the supernal realms above and the mighty work they are ever accomplishing, in the furtherance of their mission to spiritualize the earth, you would have unbounded faith, my friend, in the fulfillment of my prophecy.

I must cease my pleasant chat with you now, as time is precious, and I wish to introduce to you two noble spirits who accompanied me here and wish to add a few words to my message. The "Trio" whom you mentioned in your letter are all here to-night, and send you a loving greeting, and their spirit blessings for your untiring devotion to the cause of Truth and Justice. President James A. Garfield and Abraham Lincoln will both address you now.

Hoping that my spirit message will give you some comfort and in certain measure of enlightenment, I will bid you good evening for this time, but will promise to return some future day, and give you all the light I can, from my spirit standpoint.

Always your devoted friend through all eternity, WM. M'KINLEY.

A QUESTION FROM A MEDIUM.

What Is the Matter With Spiritualists?

When I took up a certain issue of The Progressive Thinker, the first thing I saw was this question, in large letters:

"What is the matter with Spiritualists?"

And it is a question I, too, have often wished to ask. Why are people not honest with themselves and the world? If they have sought for truth and found it, why not say so? Why not help others who are in the dark? Some one has said:

"Who learns and learns and acts not what he knows, is like a man who plows and plows but never sows."

I think it applies very well to people who are Spiritualists at heart, yet keep their knowledge to themselves and join an orthodox church.

Some time ago I attended a Congregational church and after the service I met a lady who was a member, but whom I knew had been a Spiritualist and a good medium. After greeting her I said: "Don't you believe in Spiritualism now?"

She answered: "Oh, yes; I know Spiritualism is true, but you know you can't be a Spiritualist in this little place."

I wish we could know how many in this broad land of freedom are in that same position. They know Spiritualism is true but are afraid to say so. Are we less courageous than the great scientists of history, who when they had discovered a great truth gave it to the world regardless of torture or death?

But what is there to fear?

There is no physical torture to endure, no rack or pillory in these blessed twentieth century days! Then what is it? Ah! some one whispers: "It isn't popular, you know." Well, but it would be popular if all would come out boldly and say they are Spiritualists and join the ranks and march hand in hand with Truth and Progression.

Now, I feel very proud to be a Spiritualist, for that means a great deal with me. It means that I have searched for truth; it means that I have reached out for knowledge, culture and growth; it means that I have gone as far into the spiritual life as I could go, and that I know this life is but the beginning of a glorious existence, and the better we live this life the happier we shall be in the next.

Truth is marching on and I am hopeful. I think the time will come when all doubt will be swept away. Spiritualism, like evolution, is also come to stay, and in a few years it will be as unpopular to not believe in Spiritualism as it is now to not believe in evolution, for it will be but a proof of ignorance to deny either of these great truths.

A certain minister has said that few, if any, of the alleged mediums were genuine."

Well, he can count me as one of the few who are genuine, for I have no money-making schemes, no fraudulent accomplices with me—nothing but a pure desire for knowledge and truth. I am longing for the time to come when everyone will throw aside fear, pride and prejudice and join this great work of demonstrating immorfality, for it is a great work and there is none greater.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Morris Pratt Institute Association Constitution and By-Laws.

Although no special report has been made of the doings of the convention, June 3, 1905, some most important legislation was transacted. Parts of the original constitution were amended, and a complete set of by-laws adopted. This matter has been purposely postponed until there should be a membership large enough to be considered representative of the people whose voice shall regulate and carry on the school.

The most important amendment to the constitution relates to the date of the annual convention. It has convened on the first Saturday in June. Last year that was found to be unsatisfactory for many reasons; first, the work could not be done and members return to their homes before Sunday; and this also prevents speakers and workers attending the meeting, thus losing to the convention the very valuable assistance they might give. Secondly, it is too late for the students, as many must return to their homes earlier in the season, who would gladly remain if it came near the time of closing the school. It will now be held the third Tuesday in May, and the closing exercise of the school will follow in the same week on the finishing of the Association work. First year exercises will probably be on Wednesday, and the graduating class on Thursday. This makes it possible for those interested in the school to attend both the convention and closing of the school at the same time, and still return home for Sunday.

The laws adopted are as follows:

Article 1.—Order of business.—1. Reading of minutes of the last meeting.
2. Reading of communications.
3. Reports of officers.
4. Report of executive committee.
5. Report of other committees.
6. Business.
7. Election to fill vacancies of directors whose term expires.

Article 2.—The board of directors shall consist of the president of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States of America, the president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, and seven directors. The directors shall be elected annually after the passage of this law as follows, viz., three for three years; two for two years, and two for one year, and every year thereafter the vacancies caused by the outgoing directors shall be filled by electing the same number for three years.

Article 3.—It shall be the duty of the officers to report at each annual meeting, as set forth in the following sections:

Sec. 1. The president shall report the condition of the affairs of the Association, make suggestions for such improvements as he thinks are needed, and appoint an auditing committee which shall perform the duties usually devolving upon such a committee.

Sec. 2. The secretary shall make a full and itemized report of all moneys received, and from whom, and when received; also shall make a full report of all indebtedness, of the financial standing of the Association and the number of members thereof.

Sec. 3. The treasurer shall make a full report of all funds received, disbursed, and remaining in the treasury.

Sec. 4. The financial agent, or any one receiving money for the association shall make a full report to the secretary every quarter, or when requested by the president, giving a complete and itemized account of all money received together with names of the donors.

Article 4.—The secretary shall send notice of the anual meeting to each voting member at least thirty days before the time of meeting.

Article 5.—Quorum—Seven members at least must be present in order that a meeting may transact business.

Article 6.—These by-laws may be amended at any regular meeting by a majority vote.

All the old directors immediately tendered their resignation from office, on the adoption of these by-laws, and the election of the present board was in conformity with the foregoing constitution. The present board consists of President H. D. Barrett of the N. S. A., President W. J. Erwood of the Wisconsin S. S. A., for three years, Moses Hull, John C. Bump, John D. Vail, for two years, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, C. L. Stewart, and for one year A. J. Weaver, Wm. Rogers.

This gives two new directors next year, and the following year two more, in three years the old board will give way to new officers, and so each year will install for a term of three years in pursuance of the by-laws.

Officers.—The officers are the same as last year: President, Moses Hull; vice president, J. C. Bump; secretary, C. L. Stewart; treasurer, A. J. Weaver.

There is little change in the duties of the officers; the only one noticeable being that our work has been outlined by the association, and personally I have been relieved of some of the care and responsibility that has been assigned me since the opening of the school. In addition to the work connected with the secretary's office, I have acted as financial agent in the field and had the care and oversight of the affairs of the house, which alone requires the attention of one person. My repeated resignation to that part of the work has at last been accepted, and I shall in the future, confine myself to the financial interests of the association. With the opening of the camp season I shall start eastward and where we have been assigned a day I will endeavor to represent the work. Where no day has been given us I shall hope to be met with sympathy and co-operation in this good work.

Catalogues will soon be ready for distribution. A delay in printing has caused us to be slow about sending them out. All persons wishing one will be furnished with it if they will send us their names. Constitution and by-laws will soon be issued and can be had on application to either Moses Hull or myself.

Spiritualists, this is your school; its officers are your servants; will you assist us in doing the work? I am ready now to go into the field for the year's work. And by a special vote of the board of directors, Mr. Hull has been released from some of the duties as teacher and has been granted permission to answer calls and engagements which, in his judgment, will be beneficial to the Morris Pratt Institute. Make an opening for us, and let this be the most successful year since the opening of the school.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 150 families (in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

How Prayer Is Answered.

"He Prayeth Best Who Loveth Best All Things, Both Great and Small."

Love rules the universe of matter and spirit. God is love. God's love and the Divine attributes finding their full expression in nature and humanity give the fullest assurance that all prayer will receive abundant answer. Prayer is exaltation of spirit, and earnest desire for good; it is asking, seeking, working for good. Our prayer for personal good should include the same good for our neighbor, according as we see and feel the necessity of the particular thing for which we pray.

To whom should we pray? We should of course address all our prayers primarily to God, as the supreme author of all good. But there is so far as reason can determine no personal God, who can and does give particular hearing and consideration to each particular prayer. That seems impossible and unnecessary in a universe governed by immutable laws.

All prayer, if answered at all, must be answered in accordance with natural law. There can be no miraculous response to any prayer addressed to the Deity, because a miracle is something done through temporary suspension of a natural law, which is neither possible nor necessary in the Divine order and government. God rules the universe by immutable law, and answers prayer through the instrumentalities, the agencies established by natural law. By the law of affinity, the beneficent instruments of God's providence are brought to the aid of His needy, seeking and asking children. Spirits excarnate and incarnate are attracted to each other according to their aspirations, culture, necessities and affinities.

As prayer must be answered in accordance with natural law, no one should ask for things that can not be granted by the operations of such laws; or, in other words, we should not pray for what is impossible. All the prayers of the entire nation could not save the life of President McKinley, because the nature of his injury was such that under the operation of the laws governing physical life he could not continue to live in his physical body.

All spirits under the law of affinity and adaptation are ministering angels to humanity. The higher and purer, the more loving and unselfish the motives prompting prayer for any blessing, the higher and more powerful the spirits that will respond. They will so illuminate the mind and heart of the one offering the prayer, so impress him how to act and so direct his action as to secure needed blessing. Our modern spiritual revelations show clearly that persons who are highly susceptible to spiritual influences will be personally directed, or other philanthropic persons will be moved by sympathizing spirits to come to the aid of the needy, bringing the assistance prayed for. I know personally, and probably many of you also know of instances of this kind. A worthy person is sorely in need of some temporal good; is earnestly longing for it and praying for relief. A sympathizing spirit attends the call and through some gifted medium or by direct impression makes known the case to some one able to respond willingly and at once, and thus the prayer for relief is granted. Innumerable cases of this kind are occurring daily.

But not alone is individual action thus directed and controlled in answer to the prayers of many loving and unselfish persons; benevolent organizations are formed for the relief of human misery and the promotion of the happiness of mankind. The expression is is very familiar with us in regard to good deeds done to men, "God put it into their minds to do so." Yes, truly, God, through his ministering angels drawn by their harmonious affinity with good desires, did so impress the minds and direct the acts of men that great good was accomplished. It makes little difference whether our prayers are directed to God or his ministering angels acting under His laws and fulfilling decrees of His laws.

Our spirit friends know human perplexities, sorrows and wants, and can best minister to and console suffering humanity. We do not hesitate in time of need to ask our friends while here on earth to assist us, then why should we hesitate to ask their assistance after they have gone to the spirit world, when they have even more ability to discern what we need, and more power to furnish the required relief and consolation?

Modern Spiritualism has cleared our understanding and has dissipated all misty sepulchral ideas and uncanny notions concerning the so-called dead. We now have certain knowledge of the happy intermingling and intercommunication of the two spheres of existence. We know now that loving affection and sympathetic interest in our welfare have not ceased because our friends have ascended to a higher stage of existence; rather have they been strengthened and intensified, and their power to aid is largely increased. I know some very estimable young ladies who belong to the Catholic Church, and they say that they always find relief by praying to the Virgin Mary, in time of suffering and trouble. I do not doubt it; but the relief comes to them not from the Virgin Mary, but from some sympathizing spirit friend drawn to them through the law of affinity. Spiritualists can lend no support to the dogmatic decrees of the church concerning the Immaculate Conception, the canonization of saints, nor any form of hero or ancestry worship, nor the pagan conception which made gods out of natural elements and forces and deified human qualities and powers. The intelligence of this age has outgrown and discarded these erroneous and misleading ideas, as well as the obsolete rites and ceremonies which perpetuated them. Spiritualists will never attempt to restore and give new life to the dead and buried superstitions of the past. Spiritual knowledge is displacing ignorant superstitions.

In all ages and in all tribes and nations some religious forms and ceremonies have been used by mortals as forms of prayer. And decarnate spirits for a time after their release from the bonds of flesh have been governed and influenced by these same rites. In the jungles of Asia, on the scorching sands of Africa and amidst the forests of America, savage and barbarous tribes have been wrought up to a wild frenzy of religious excitement while practicing their religious rites through the influences exercised upon them by returning spirit friends.

The scenes at camp-meetings and religious revivals in the churches are familiar to many. Frequent, eloquent, sympathetic appeals to the audience arousing their fears, quickening their consciences, pointing out the way for relief, heartfelt repentance, earnest pless for mercy, thousands of human voices harmoniously blended singing invitations to sinners and the glories of redemption. Then throngs of kindred and congenial spirits still rejoicing in the beliefs and ceremonies which comforted them on earth, their souls aglow with intense sympathetic love for the repentant sinner, drawn by the law of affinity, like a live coal from off the altar, they touch the hearts of their kindred, responsive souls feel the spirit touch and with a flash-light of glory the communion of the spirit fills the heart with ecstatic, irrepressible joy.

It is true spiritual communion, a true spiritual seance, ascended loving friends come to their relief in answer to earnest prayer. But too often these experiences were evanescent and fitful because not founded upon a knowledge of their nature and source. Clairvoyants who have witnessed these revival scenes assure us that they are genuine spiritual manifestations. But with the growth of the race in spiritual knowledge, a great change is taking place even in revival meetings. They are becoming almost as calm and sedate as Quaker meetings, all due to the unobserved influence of true spirituality modifying the methods of grace.

While the power of God is shown in the lightning and thunder, the earthquake's shock, the ocean storm and all the mighty forces of nature, yet it is the still small voice of the spirit speaking directly to the soul that enlarges the understanding, quickens our sympathies and affections, and imparts true spiritual wisdom, which is the only basis for true spiritual unfoldment and progression. There is a joy of the spirit which surpasses all other delights, the memory and exercises of unselfish thoughts and deeds which prove our kinship to the all benevolent Oversoul, and are as perennial springs whence flow never-failing streams of purest joy and deepest ever-abiding peace.

A thing of beauty is a joy forever, and the most beautiful things on earth are kind thoughts, loving words and beneficent acts. In what sorry plight are our orthodox friends who attribute modern spiritual manifestations to the instigation of the devil, when advanced spiritual knowledge shows that their revival meetings are real true spiritual manifestations. When the Pharisees condemned Christ, saying, "He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the prince of devils," He replied, "by whom, then, do your sons cast them out."

If modern spiritual manifestations are from the devil, from whom are spiritual manifestations of the revival meetings in the orthodox churches, which are known to be from the same source?

Prayer is an earnest, faithful or confident expectation, and the gratification of desire waits upon it. Prayer expressed in words clearly defines what we want and arouses our own power to action and brings to our aid spiritual assistance. Prayer must be in harmony with natural law. Work is an effective form of prayer. The natural order is a realized want of something, a desire to procure it, and then work, efforts to obtain it. But all work to be successful must be in harmony with natural law. All evils in the world are produced by men through ignorance working against natural law. The disasters and failures which overtake them are meant to teach them to change their course of action into harmony with natural law, and thus taught by dire experience individuals and the race are learning to do right and produce good results.

Through intercourse with our spiritual friends, we know certainly that their human sympathies and interest in the welfare of their friends on earth and their desire to promote progress in the world remain unabated. From their vantage of superior knowledge and broader observations of the true relation of the two states of existence, they are able and willing to assist humanity when the proper conditions are furnished. All the new and startling inventions bearing upon practical life, all the grand and sublime works of poetry, music, painting and sculpture, all advances in civilization securing more liberal education of the people and better opportunities for the enjoyment of life, have their origin in the spirit world, and being impressed upon mind prepared to receive them are wrought out in real blessings of the world.

The aspirations, meditations and earnest thought of cultured minds, the hopes of the philanthropist, the dreams of statesmen, the agonizing cries of oppressed people ascend as prayer to the spirit world. By the law of affinity and adaptation, the more advanced spirits are enabled to respond, and all the higher ideals of practical and spiritual life in regard to useful inventions, social and industrial systems are impressed upon the minds prepared to receive and in the fullness of time become the real blessings enjoyed by humanity. From the spirit world floods of light are poured into the earthly realms and the illumination of men's minds become general and they are prepared to fight valiantly and to die heroically for some grand ideal of freedom and progress. The psychic atmosphere fills all space, interpenetrates our earthly atmosphere; the brains of cultured minds are both receivers and transmitters of thoughts impinging upon this atmosphere.

And when some mighty revolution is impending it is through this agency that masses of men are simultaneously aroused to perform great works and devise measures for some important advancement in human affairs. Did time permit we might pursue this line of thought and point out where in the history of the race these things stand out prominently.

But here the query arises, if all these things originate in the spirit world, what credit can belong to the human race for their introduction and adoption? Are we not mere puppets at the mercy of an irresistible fate? By no means; a certain preparation of mind and spirit on our part is necessary for the reception and practical use of these ideals. And our mental education and moral culture, our industry and perseverance are as necessary to the fulfillment of life's true purpose as are ideals impressed upon us. Ardent devotion to science, philosophy and philanthropy, long continued study, exhausting labor and vigilance are necessary to make men and women the fit mediums through which these ideals can be presented to the world and made to promote the welfare and secure the happiness of humanity.

All properly directed work is a prayer and never fails to get the right answer. The farmer preparing the ground and planting the seed is praying for the harvest; the mechanic by his sturdy blows is demanding from matter some useful article, and the answer comes in the shape of the thousand articles that minister to our happiness and advancement. The statesman is seeking the applause or execration of his fellowmen by the advice he gives and the laws he enacts. All men in all stations and conditions of life are continually praying and seeking in all their acts and thoughts for some real or imaginary good. If selfishness and greed govern them, their prayers are answered with the starvation of the spirit and barrenness of life; if kind, unselfish, loving feeling for humanity are put into beneficent activity and earnest work for their fellow men, their prayers are answered by "that calm delight, that sweet repose, which none but he who feels it knows," and by never-halting, unending growth in his spiritual nature and the unfoldment of those qualities which unite us forever to the divine source of all things.

All men are foreordained and predestined to eternal progression, and the human will is free to retard or assist this progression. God's will is that each one has his own will and takes the consequences. If the human will responding to the strongest motive or incentive is in accordance with the demands of natural law, the resulting action promotes the highest welfare in accordance with the law of progression. But if the human will responding to the demands of present gratification, through recklessness or ignorance decides against the requirements of natural law, the resultant activity in the end leads to misery, until through dire experiences, the will is changed and conduct altered to conform with the demands of natural law. On this plane of thought there is no longer any conflict between Calvinism and Arminianism. Foreordination of man's destiny and the freedom of his will within the bounds of possibility are both true. Men may by the perversity of will even reach that bed-rock of depravity, then ministering angels fulfill their holiest mission by seeking out the suffering sinner and by inspiring hope in the despairing breast, produce sincere repentance, leading in time to reformation and upward advancement.

Some years ago the agnostics in England challenged the Christian world to a test of the efficacy of prayer. They proposed to establish two hospitals, one to be conducted by educated physicians and surgeons according to the best scientific knowledge of medicine and surgery; and the other to depend entirely upon prayer for the relief and cure of disease. This proposition, as it seems to me, was properly declined by the Christian church.

The contest and antagonism are not between prayer alone and scientific practice. It is between a cold, unsympathetic materialism which entirely ignores all the finer and more subtle forces of nature, and the warm, sympathetic, loving, humane spirituality which, while eager and willing to use all the best medical and surgical appliances, knowledge and practice, would invoke the aid of spiritual friends, accept and utilize the restoratives and healing forces of nature as shown in mesmerism and sun baths; utilizing the knowledge to be gained by clairvoyance and the acceptance of the spiritual origin and destiny of the human race. Let two hospitals be erected exactly alike with all the latest appliances for securing proper sanitary conditions, let both be equipped alike with all the necessary appliances for the successful practice of medicine and surgery. Let one be conducted by cold-blooded physicians, surgeons and nurses, who are materialists, without belief in the efficacy of prayer or a future life. Let the other be under the entire and uninterrupted control and direction of warm-hearted physicians and nurses, with a clear knowledge of the future state of existence, those who will ask and accept the ability and assistance of advanced intelligences from the spirit world in curing the sick and relieving human misery. A contest under these circumstances would be perfectly fair and impartial, and whichever way it might be decided, a valuable and certain addition to human knowledge would be gained. Most certainly no agnostic should object to this, and all enlightened Spiritualists and Christians would consent to such a trial, which would tend to alleviate and prevent human pain and suffering.

Running through all history, there appears a divine purpose for the spiritual growth and unfoldment of the race. And may we not rightly conclude that standing on the very latest point of time and development, this nation has its own special mission to fulfill. Let us invoke the assistance and direction of those mighty spirits, who in years past played such a heroic and successful part in our history, and who, now ascended to a higher sphere of spiritual existence, have committed to them under God's immutable laws, the spiritual care and gaurdianship of the nation.

May the enlightened spirits of Washington and Franklin, Jefferson and Adams, Otis and Henry, uniting with those of our later distinguished statesmen and soldiers, Webster and Calhoun, Lincoln and Davis, Phillips and Yancey, Grant and Lee and the innumerable hosts of heroes ascended from all sections, with all the bitterness of covol war, all sense of personal bereavement and sectional animosity displaced by a common love of our whole country, all Americans in this world and the spiritual world reconciled, united and standing together on the broad platform of lofty aspiration and true patriotism, elevate our people, purify and enlighten our statesmen. Then with an assured confidence in our sublime mission and destiny, we will move triumphantly forward, leading the world's advance in progressive civilization and spiritual enlightenment, performing our whole duty as citizens to our country and the world. Then the "Star-Spangled-Banner," the hope of the world and the emblem of civil, political and religious liberty, forever shall wave over the home of the brave, enlightened people ready at all times to maintain the right and defend the truth.

The United States seems destined to assist in the liberation and pacification of the world. It commands respect by its physical power, its moral influence and the spiritual elevation of its people. It brings blessings to the world by its inventive and constructive genius, making it easier for all mankind to provide the subsistence and conveniences of life, thus giving them more time for culture and recreation.

It can and will assist in maintaining the peace of the world, through sincere and unselfish alliances with the most powerful nations, whereby an overwhelming physical force guided by intelligence and justice can prevent warfare, assist all nations in cultivating peace and friendship, and adjust all differences through an international court of arbitration.

Thus through the agonizing cries and burning tears of humanity during all the ages; through the battle strokes and shocks of oppressed people, their victories and their defeats; through the triumphant deaths of truth's martyrs and liberty's heroes; through the physical force, the moral and spiritual power of enlightened nations, their victories in peace and war; through the sanctified aspirations born of blasted hopes and contrite hearts; through ecstatic inspirations imparted to men and women on earth from glorified human spirits, will eventually come the triumph of right and truth, liberty and justice for all mankind, the final and perfect answer to the fervent prayer ever renewed, "May Thy kingdom come, may Thy will be done," in the manifest, assured, eternal, onward and upward progress of the whole human race.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 15, 1905. NO. 816

VOICE OF A FOREIGN WOMAN.

A Life Devoted to This Work Between the Spirit Forces, God and Man.

Before starting to write my inspirational work, I will attempt to give you a description of my spiritual experience.

Being ignorant of, or rather as innocent as the child in the cradle, of the truths of spiritual truth, I did not know that there was such a religion existing among the people as Spiritualism. Being raised from my youth in what is termed the Roman Catholic belief, all that I knew was to be true to my church and faith.

My very first experience with the spirit was to fall in a very deep trance, and after awakening, I could not realize what had happened or through what I had passed. I knew that I was not sleeping, and to convince myself, I placed a chair, seated myself, and awaited the return of the same condition; and sure enough, to my happy surprise, it came. I felt as though someone was working over my brain and body. Whilst in the normal condition, I heard a remarkable cracking in my room. Within a short time a new light begun to break through the old lines and enlighten my dark mind, and this light was so strong, so powerful, that it almost blinded me. I seemed to be in a pitiful condition, was broken down physically and spiritually. Had not a soul on whom to rely for an explanation of this grand and beautiful scene; no one of whom I could ask any advice, or to give me any instructions.

My own native people were, in the majority, not advanced in any new thought, and could not understand and receive this light which precedes the truth, and as yet, I had never seen any paper or book which treated on this subject, to satisfy my longing, craving, intense desire to find out more of this truth, as before stated. This light was too intense for me.

My school education had not fitted me for the exploration of this beautiful light, so the spirit began to teach me, and the very first clear explanation which they gave me was of God in the Trinity. Before this scene, I was taught in the church that God in the Trinity was a secret, belonging to God himself. Then in the fear that the devil was giving me the secret of God, I went to the church to confess this all to the priest, but it seemed to me the more I tried to purify myself, the stronger the forces were around me. I prayed fervently to be nearer and nearer to God, and He seemed to hear my prayer, for my spirit seems to have had new privileges granted, for now I visit Him and see all the wonders of His home.

Yet I, in the meantime, kept thinking that the devil had possession of me. In one of the trances I told him to leave me, to take all what he gave me, and let me alone, so that I would be again the child of God. Yes, I remember the spirit gave me one more look into His place or home and had complete control over me. But, thinking that this second one was a God himself, so strong were my convictions that I prayed him fervently; I put my whole confidence in him, and felt very happy in that condition.

One morning I was impressed to look at the sun. I had never done this before; yet, by so doing, I fell in a trance in this standing position. My room was filled with the most beautiful light. I felt a holy feeling, and was surrounded with such a light that the natural eye was not able to behold. I heard a voice saying, "Try to understand the Bible," and when I awoke I clasped my hands together as in the attitude of prayer, and since that time tho most beautiful visions and inspirations came to me.

These I am receiving under the influence of the sun, and to me this seems strange, for it seems to come under an astrological influence with astronomical meaning. I have no knowledge of these sciences, but I wish to give you what I received, and probably some one who is versed in this line of work will take up this line of truth and study with me of these heavenly truths.

Had I the preliminary education in the English language, I would like to write a book, but owing to the difficult way I have of expressing my ideas received, I consider this impossible, but will endeavor from time to time to give you in my humble way the visions and inspirations as received by me.

For a long time I did not understand the condition in which I was placed, and not until I came to Toledo. For upon one beautiful Sunday morning, as I was walking down the street, my eyes were greeted with a sign announcing a Spiritualist meeting. I went in, and to my great surprise I heard there for the first time the teachings of the truth which were my heart's greatest desire, and which were already trying to get out of me; and for the past year I have belonged to the Order of Love, Light and Truth, and thanks to the spirit world for bringing me in touch with that Grand Order, for now I am enabled to understand the phenomena with me, and the conditions upon which I am a sojourner of this earth plane, and with the good thoughts of my sisters and brothers of the spirit world, I may be enabled to give something useful and good for the benefit of humanity.

My first work will be entitled "The Old and the New Testament."

The past morning, whilst sitting upon the veranda of my home, a book in my hand, and enjoying the beautiful thoughts as penned by the author, suddenly there came over me the wish to lay aside the book. I did so; I gazed up into the sky, the beautiful home of the stars, and thought, "There is the great book of nature, of wisdom, which is giving unto me more of the truth to read and study than all the books that could be printed." Then turning my eyes to the sun, and sending out these thoughts, "O Sun, by thy great and beautiful light, oh, let me see and read out of this great and universal book of nature"; and from this, something new came to my vision. I cannot describe the true feelings which overcame me, but surely it was of heaven, for I heard a voice saying unto me, "You are reading now the living Bible, which contains the Old and the New Testaments. The Old Testament which was, from the beginning, is firmament or the heaven, and the New Testament of yourself. The Old Testament was established upon the creation of the world as seen by Moses, and the Ten Commandments as given by him, as coming from God for the foundation of his laws. Now, to us is given a Ten Commandments, but not those which Moses wrote, for they govern or control only the Hebrew, and part of the Christian people. But there are Ten Commandments which the supreme force or power, or, as we would say, God, in His divine wisdom had caused to be created and placed safely in the firmament, a positive testimony of the supremacy of His force and power, not only of a chosen people, but of all the people which have existed, that do now exist, or that will ever exist upon this sphere of action; in other words, these Ten Commandments under the Old Testament are the ruling, controlling or guiding influence of the New Testament, or man, ever since his existence upon the earth. The names of these Commandments are, 1, Sun; 2, Mercury; 3, Venus; 4, Earth; 5, Mars; 6, Jupiter; 7, Saturn; 8, Uranus; 9, Neptune; 10, Moon."

Under the rule or governing power of these Ten Commandments belong every living being. They each have a meaning, and in some future writing I will disclose to you this meaning as given to me, so that you can understand and obey their rules, and wishing you to remember that the Old Testament was established upon these Ten Commandments, which are God's rule or law, and His power is exhibited through them, and are the guiding and leading forces for the New Testament, which is mankind. As all the pages in the book called the New Testament are full of the teachings and thoughts emanating and coming from one Jesus called the Son of God, so are the ages of the New Testament filled with all that has come to mankind throughout the past and have been fulfilled by all the children of God; and every page of this book reiterates the intense desire of a salvation; and so every age of mankind has that desire for the true knowledge of self, and that inward craving to know something more of that higher power and force, which is God. And now, when these truths as contained in this Old Testament are made plain to the world through the agency of the light made manifest through the New Testament, which is man, then will we be the better enabled to explain the Ten Commandments which are now ruling the whole world, and have always ruled it from the beginning of time.

And all this we read from the great book of nature, which is both the Old and the New Testament; and under the influence and control of each of these Ten Commandments dwell each and every living soul. Each Commandment has its meaning, force and power, and in a future paper I will give you this meaning as revealed to me, and then you will be enabled to know, understand and obey these rules of nature.

We must remember, however, that the establishment of these Ten Commandments under the Old Testament dispensation, creating them the rule or law of nature or God, and making them the guides or directors of us, who are the New Testament or mankind, and that not only the one Son of God is working for this salvation as the book of the so-called New Testament would have us believe, but that in every age, all the children of God worked in harmony and love for the universal salvation and the fulfillment of this great truth. And now, when this Old and the New Testament will be fully explained to the world in a true light, then will we, who are the New Testament, be enabled to testify of the Old Testament; and the great book of nature, of wisdom, of God, will be opened wide, will be finished. For unto us, as directed and led by these Ten Commandments, are revealed the light and truth of nature, with its fundamental principle of love.

And now, there comes over me a change; my condition being broken by the rumbling of a heavy wagon passing my door. I will in the future give you more of this good work as received by me from the spirit world.

THE NEW BIBLE, OAHSPE.

The True Remedy for Religious Doubt.

In the letter you published recently from Mr. Goldwin Smith, that eminent gentleman says he is but "one of many who in these days of perplexity and doubt are trying to find some secure foundation for belief in the moral government of the universe," etc.

Allow me to most respectfully suggest that that "secure foundation" has been laid in the book "Oahspe," now to be found in the city libraries of the United States, and awaits perusal. This book is the solver of all doubt, the placer of the affairs of men and angels on a sensible, comprehensive basis. It abolishes lords, gods, and saviors, kings, priests and preachers. It tells how the four great religions of the world were established in the heavens of the earth and on the earth, namely, Looeamong, Kriste, Christ, Kabalactes, Buddha, Ennochissa, Brahma, the trinunes, the founders of the trinity, and of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and Thoth, Gabriel, founder of Mohammedanism. These religions have professed peace and practiced war from the beginning, and have not saved from sin and poverty any nation or city on the earth, hence are "false" religions.

All things are intelligently accounted for in "Oahspe." It is a most rational book, laid on the earth for its delight in this the Kosmon era, the beginning of this era of Spiritualism. This book is the greatest manifestation of spiritual light in the world to-day.

The "false" gods have thus far built on the earth for the glory of their own kingdoms; have persuaded mortals that the only good and necessary knowledge was contained in their own sacred books; they have desired to prevent mortals from knowing there are other heavens than their own, and other gods than themselves; a thousand years ago the grades of their heavenly subjects were from thirty to fifty; now they are fallen to fifteen. Brief extract from "Oahspe":

"But thou shalt look to the mortals, whom thou shalt take over to inhabit the western continent; and thou shalt raise up, by birth, mortals, who shall ignore the doctrine of enforced worship for any God or Lord or Savior; for the people of that land (America) shall be free, not only in body but in spirit also; and when the dawn of the arc of Kosmon cometh, behold, I will open up My heaven unto mortals, and prepare the foundation of My kingdom on earth; and at Hydesville, in Guatoma, on the earth, the angels opened the door in Jehovih's name, to be not closed again forever." CONSOLATION.

(Inscribed to Mrs. Ida Chase.)

'Tis such a little way—so little we cannot find
How we may reach, or see, or hear, or bind
Unto ourselves the forms that come so near;
That e'en our faintest whisper they can hear.

Ah! no; we cannot see with eyes so dim,
How very thin the veil twixt thee and him;
How close the soul, that made his face so fair,
Can come—love-bidden—thro' thy wordless prayer.

We may not hear with ears made deaf with pain,
The voice of love that calls and calls again;
Too dense the cloud that sorrow wraps around—
Our souls untouched by that prophetic sound.

And yet again the call, and in the silence heard,
Some sweet magnetic thrill thy soul hath stirred;
And thro' thy sense of loss, and doubt, and pain,
Undimmed the light of peace will shine again.

Our sorrowing souls cry out, but could our dim eyes see,
Beyond the little space that vails eternity,
How vain our doubts would seem, how short the span
That holds in earthly leash the soul of man.

The night falls down and darkness shrouds the earth,
We do not see the rose that morn had given birth;
But to our sense is borne a waft of fragrance rare,
And tho' we cannot see, we know our rose is there.

So, when the silence falls his soul to thine can speak—
In answer to thy call he brings the light you seek;
Nor time nor space divides, but one eternal chain
Of life unites us all to all we love, again.

TWO BIBLES CONTRASTED.

The Hindoo and the Mosaic Account of the Origin of Man.

To the Editor:—Reading in "The Bible in India," and then referring to the (so-called) "Holy Bible," the thought came to mind that the later book was simply compiled from the former or older one though in a very much garbled condition.

In its account of the creation of man and woman the Hindoo Bible says: "The earth was covered with flowers, the trees bent under their fruit, thousands of animals sported over the plains and birds in the air, and Brahma perceived that the time had come for the creation of man (and woman) to inhabit this dwelling place.

"He drew from the Great Soul, from the pure essence, a germ of life, with which he animated the two persons whom he made male and female, that is, proper for reproduction, and he gave them conscience and speech which rendered them superior to all he had yet created, but inferior to the angels and to God.

"He distinguished the man by strength, shape and majesty, and named him Adima, or the first man.

"The woman received grace, gentleness and beauty, and he named her Heva, or what completes life.

"Therefore in giving Adima a companion, the Lord perfected the life bestowed on him, and in thus establishing the conditions under which humanity was about to be born, he proclaimed in earth and in heaven the equality of the man and the woman."

Let us turn to our Bible. Genesis 1st chapter, 27th verse: "So God (Brahma) created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them, and God blessed them, and said unto them, 'Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."

Hindoo Bible: "The Lord then gave to Adima and to his wife Heva, the island of Ceylon for a residence, well fitted, from its climate, its products, and its splendid vegetation, to be the cradle of the human race.

"Go, said he, unite, and produce beings who shall be your living image upon the earth for ages and ages after you have returned to me." (Note this affirmation and pledge of a future life, 'After you have returned to me.') "I Lord of all that exists, have created you to worship me throughout all your life, and those who shall have faith in me shall share my happiness after the end of all things."

Our Bible: "And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb-bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. And God saw everything that he had made (including this first pair, 27th v.) and behold it was very good.

Was the second chapter of Genesis compiled by the same writer who wrote the first chapter? Evidently not. For he ignores the Hindoo Bible and the first chapter of his own book.

He here introduced the "Lord God." (Elohim, plural) and it should read, "And the gods formed a man out of the ground." Now dust has no adherent quality, and must have moisture before it will adhere, or can be moulded into shape. Therefore, those gods had to use water, converting dust into mud before they could form a man.

They had "planted a garden eastward in Eden," (a locality which no one has ever been able to discover, and they wanted a gardener to "dress it, and to keep it." They knew that the first created pair whom God blessed, and to whom he gave "dominion over all the earth," would not do it, so they "took the man (the dirt-man) and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it." Took him, and put him, i. e., forced him to work in the garden with no pay only his food; but of the best fruit he must not eat, "for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

How long the poor man remained in confinement alone, days, weeks or months the record does not say; but when they saw "that it was not good that the man should be alone," one said, "I will make an helpmeet for him, and the rib which he had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man, and A-dam called his wife's name Eve because she was the mother of all living"—

Of bird and beast, of fish and worm,
She mother was of each in turn;
Tho' all were born before her birth,
She mother was of all on earth.
Of creeping thing, of insect rare,
Of all that's found within the air;
Within the water and of man,
She mothered Cain, and poor A-dam.

The serpent, who then could walk and talk, persuaded this remarkable bone woman, and said, "Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as (these) gods, knowing good and evil. And she took of the fruit and did eat, and gave unto her husband, and he did eat," and they found that the serpent told the truth, for their eyes were opened and they knew that they had no clothes, and without pins, needles or thread, "they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves aprons." "Unto Adam also, and to his wife, did the Lord God make coats of skins and clothed them."

"Unto the woman he said, 'I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee.

"And to the man he said, 'cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Returning to the Hindoo Bible we read, "Thus instruct your children that they forget me not, for I shall be with them while they continue to call upon my name."

He forbid them to quit the island, and said, "Your mission is confined to peopling this island * * and to implant my worship in the minds of those to be born. * * *

"The night had come. The birds were silent in the trees. The Lord was satisfied, for the birth of love had preceded the union of the sexes."

"Adima and Heva lived for some time in perfect happiness * * but one day a vague disquietude began to creep upon them. * * * Let us wander through the island, said Adima, and see if we may not find some place even more beautiful than this. Heva followed her husband; * * * but as they advanced she was seized with strange fears; 'Adima,' she said, 'let us go no farther; it seems to me we are disobeying the Lord.'

"Fear not," said Adima. And they journeyed on.

Arriving at the extremity of the island they beheld a smooth and narrow arm of the sea. * * * The two wanderers stood amazed. Behold, what beautiful things, cried Adima * * let us go and taste them. Heva, trembling, besought Adima to do nothing that might irritate the Lord against them. Are we not well here? Wherefore seek other things?

"True, replied Adima, but we will come back," and approaching the rocks, Heva followed.

"Then placing his wife upon his shoulders, he proceeded to cross the space that divided him from the object of his desires.

"No sooner did they touch the shore than trees, flowers, birds, all that they had seen from the opposite shore, vanished in an instant; the rocks by which they had crossed sunk beneath the waters.

"Adima threw himself, weeping, upon the sands, but Heva came to him, saying, Do not despair; let us rather pray to the Author of all things, to pardon us," and as she thus spoke there came a voice from the clouds, saying:

"Woman, thou hast only sinned from love to thy husband, whom I commanded thee to love, and thou hast hoped in me. I pardon thee, and him also for thy sake!"

Which will we accept as the "Word of God," this beautiful version of the Hindoos, or the garbled, untruthful version accredited to Moses in our Bible, where not one word can be found which promises immortality or continuous life to man.

Which the most worthy to worship, the Lord God, with his mouth full of curses, cursing the woman and the man and the ground from which he was taken, or the Being who says, "I pardon thee, and him also for thy sake."

Modern civilization rests upon physical science; take away her gifts to our country, and our position among the leading nations of the world is gone tomorrow; for it is physical science that makes intelligence and moral energy stronger than brute force.—Huxley.

RELIGION.

A Lay Sermonette by B. F. Underwood.

Religion is an element of man's nature. It is manifested in various forms among the different races and in the different stages of mental and moral development. In its highest manifestation it is defined by Matthew Arnold as "morality touched with emotion." Be this a correct or incorrect definition it is certain that without knowledge and moral instruction, the natural religious sentiment is insufficient to guide man in the path of duty. Mere belief without intellectual enlightenment and ethical culture, while it may lead to worship, is not enough to insure moral character and a moral life.

In Pagan Rome the thief prayed for success in his crime and made an offering of the first fruits of his plunder; a youth entreated Hercules to expedite the death of a rich uncle; the adultress implored Venus for the favor of her paramour. "A wager," says Mommsen, "might be laid that the more lax any woman was the more piously she worshipped Isis." These are illustrations of sincerity of belief in the popular religion of that day without the moral disposition and the spirituality which are found in those who combine with religious faith the higher qualities of head and heart.

Dr. Schaff, writing in 1879, of negroes in the South, remarked: "The negroes are very religious by nature, and infidelity is scarcely known among them; but their moral sense of honesty and chastity is very weak."

We often see men and women who revel in the excitement of a revival and yet whose moral deficiency is so marked as to make them unreliable and more of an injury than a benefit to the church which tries to help them. In such cases sometimes the spirit may be willing, but the flesh is so weak and in many "the world, the flesh and the devil" make the moral and spiritual situation almost hopeless.

"Sins of the flesh" are so common because the animal nature dominates. But worse than these are the vices of the mind whose victims Dante pictures suffering the worst agonies in hell. For instance greed may be so strong, strengthened by the habit of amassing wealth through a lifetime, that it devours all the minor vices as Aaron's rod, turned into a serpent, swallowed the magician's serpents. A Rockefeller may be circumspect in his ordinary life, free from the vices of the drunkard, the sensualist, the glutton; for the overmastering desire to pile up millions upon millions has become the dominant passion of his life and absorb all others.

One may outwardly be a "Christian gentleman," yet in his greed for money ever ready to take advantage of a rival, to wreck and ruin him, regardless of the moral aspect of the subject or of the consequences, involving distress to many. He may not be lacking in religious belief—the devils believe and tremble—but the spirit of "pure religion and undefiled," as defined in James' epistle is absent. That is the only spirit which will save us from the predatory class that has the power largely to form the conventional standards of social respectability, so as to include under it themselves, when they belong really to the robber class. The "respectable" sinners to-day are the worst enemies of religion and morality, even though they are professed friends of both. For they cannot serve God and mammon. They pay the "tithe of mint, anise and cummin and have omitted the weightier matters of law." They "make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess."

DIFFICULTIES AND TRIALS.

Necessary Means to Endless Spiritual Progress.

There is no land of pure and unalloyed happiness, such as the hymns of some of the religious sects would have one believe. The soul would soon get tired of such a condition and would yearn for a variety of sensations, which really make existence worth possessing, either on earth or in the higher existence. The soul must have its periods of sadness, it must taste the cup of sorrow occasionally, in order to appreciate conditions of happiness when they come. Eternal sorrow would be indeed sad, but eternal bliss would be much more sad. The soul was never made for perpetual sunshine no more than for perpetual cloud.

The soul of man on earth cannot find continual happiness if it were sought. Excellence and individualization are approximated by meeting and overcoming adverse circumstances which abound on all hands. No strong soul was ever developed in pleasure and idleness and never will be. No thoughtful soul would accept in life a period spent on "flowery beds of ease" were such a thing possible. A period of heroic struggles is allotted to every incarnate spirit. In this manner and in this manner only can the soul become fit for the life beyond.

Can you think for one moment, that the wise purposes of a struggle on earth will be abandoned when the spirit enters upon real life on the other side of the grave? It would be an unjust God who would prepare the spirit for a career of activity in the glorious realms of spirituality, and then surround it with conditions which must cause it to degenerate if not decay. No, the means of spiritual growth and advancement are far more effective after the fitful fever of human life has been forever passed.

Difficulties and trials will always attend the spirit in its course of onward progress. Overcoming such difficulties and successfully meeting those trials will build up the spirit and fit it for higher and greater efforts.

The pathway of spiritual progress, so far as I have traveled it, has been one of laborious effort. The soul is not so unhappy, as I fear it would be if the conditions were those of pleasure and idle rest. But it is in its normal condition when it is active and aggressive, and not indolent and contented.

What a grand condition it is for a brave and manly soul to hope for and aspire to, where there will be room for the full and free exercise of all the vast possibilities of the soul. Where all of the vast problems of the universe may be solved by intelligent and persistent effort. Where the earthly hindrances to the soul's progress shall be unknown and the spirit shall enter upon the after life free from the clumsy earthly fetters, and where the opportunities for rapid and permanent advancement for it will be countless.

Life is activity; and especially no real, spiritual life can exist without persistent action.

Heaven must be a condition of great and continued activity, where the soul if it is wise, will make the most of the great opportunities afforded it to reach up higher and still higher in its endless march of spiritual progress.

In heaven as on earth there are souls that do not care to advance, that are content to exist without effort. Such souls never built railroads or tunneled mountains on earth, and they enter heaven as they left mother earth.

The part of wisdom on earth is to willingly meet the obstacles which stand in the way of progress and advance along the line of spiritual knowledge and development, just as fast as such progress can be made safe and abiding.

TWILIGHT.

The day dies slowly westward, its radiant dying smile
The hovering clouds reflecting, as shadows grow, the while;
The tree-tops rustle softly, there's a drone of homing bees,
And the fragrance of the clover is heavy on the breeze.
The lullaby of nestlings, the cricket's note of cheer,
And the firefly's fitful candle, all tell that night is near.
The blossoms, incense-laden, quaff deep the grateful dew,
Then softly fold their petals, and dream the darkness through.
All Nature greets her guerdon, and fearless sinks to rest;
Sounds there no echoed promise within the human breast?

WHATEVER IS IS BEST."

So-Called Evil Is Declared to Be a Blessing in Disguise—Great Disasters Held to Be Warnings to Humanity—Observance of Law Will Bring Harmony.

If there is any universal plan, [as set forth in the Record-Herald] any creator, any law of design and evolution, then certainly "whatever is is best." If things exist which are not best, then God, or Nature, or the All Force, is mocked. If I build an air ship through long years of study and toil, certainly each of my models is best—at the time it was made. My model of to-day is best, but it may not be the best to-morrow. To say that "whatever is is best" does not mean that there is no progression, no advance, no striving for something beyond.

The Iroquois fire horror was "best," for it was necessary—necessary to the progress of the future—necessary to save thousands of lives in coming generations. Now theaters are safe. Before that holocaust they were fire traps. The same can be said of the Slocum disaster; but no one wants that disaster repeated. All so-called evils, as the social evil, thievery, murder, etc., are lessons for humanity; there would be no improvement without them; hence they are "best." They follow because laws are broken; laws are broken because mankind is densely ignorant.

Every so-called "evil" is a blessing in disguise. I touch a hot stove and "evil" follows. All evil is caused in the same way—the only difference is in quantity and quality. There is no difference in the basic cause. A pile of rubbish and a conflagration are caused by the same force—both are the same "evil." When man learns how to handle fire there will be no more conflagrations. Conflagrations are very useful, even when they burn up our friends and relatives.

When all law is obeyed there will be no more "evil"; evil, per se, does not exist; it is only the operation of law which gives us discomfort. If the operation of the law gives comfort, it is good; if discomfort, it is "evil."

Hence there is no such thing as "good" or "evil." What is your "good" is my "evil." What is "good" to-day is "evil" a thousand years from now. What is "evil" in America is good in Japan.

I write these lines so that some readers who are students of human action will have a clear understanding of the nature of "good" and "evil." When it is clearly understood that law rules supreme; that all events are the result of law, then it will be understood that "Whatever is is best."

Let us hasten the day when ignorance and superstition will vanish and when outraged nature will no longer have cause to bring upon us visitations which are unpleasant, and hence "evil."

Nature, God, law, omnipotence, is beneficent and ever ready to shower unnumbered blessings on mankind—when mankind is ready. These blessings will follow when violations of law cease.

"Let us walk in the light."

Let us do something.

Let us remember that nothing "happens."

Let us remember that the only "evil" is "ignorance."

Let us remember that nature is not malignant and that "evil" is not an entity.

Let us remember that nature is no respecter of persons; the rain falls on your farm as well as on the farm of that wicked neighbor.

Let us remember that man alone of all created things is the only discord in the universe.

Let us remember if man were out of the way that this old earth would smile in everlasting and perpetual happiness, and that heaven would be at hand.

Let us remember this question: Am I helping to make earth a heaven or a hell? If I and all like me were out of the way what kind of a place would this earth be as a residence?

E. E. CAREY.

Do Women Influence Men More than Men Influence Women?

This topic has been discussed in the New York Evening Journal, and much light has been thrown on the subject pro and con. In a superficial way it would seen that men wielded the greater influence, as women will exert themselves and put themselves out more to please men than men will to please women.

But delving beneath the seeming to the real, is it not true that a man can be judged by the kind of women that have come into his life? If he has had a good home during the formative years of his life, if blessed with a tender mother and loving sisters, do his actions not show the result of these influences? On the other hand if deprived of these blessings are not the results equally manifest?

It rests with the mothers of our land to determine what the future generations will be, but women must be politically free in order to best wield their influence. Some people assert that the home is woman's sphere, and it is true that here her power is potent, but she may guard her sons and daughters ever so faithfully in the home, but the moment they enter the street she has no influence whatever in saying what may befall them there. She is taxed, yet has no right to say that the streets shall be safe for her children to enter. Temptations are on every hand, and she is powerless to change affairs.

Throughout all nature the feminine principle is the attracting one; the masculine gives, the feminine receives. Only as brute force and man-made laws which make women the inferior and politically and financially dependent on them prevail, has this intuitive law been reversed. Now that intellect is holding sway over this brute force, and women are asserting their God-given powers are we returning to the natural and discarding the superficial.

If women would train up their sons in the thought that war was brutal and that the killing of their fellow-men was a stain upon their souls to be atoned for in the future life, how long do you suppose wars would last? Not a day. Peace conventions would be unnecessary, huge armies and navies would be disbanded, warships would be converted into merchantmen, and guns and swords rust from disuse. It is the foolish women in every land who urge their fathers, husbands and sons on to the battlefield, who are responsible in a large measure for our bloody wars.

A mistaken sense of honor, and the sound of the tramping feet, the glimmer of the trappings and the sound of the bugle urges women on to part with their loved ones. Right pre-natal culture and education of boys in the arts of peace rather than war, will change all this as time rolls on. Arbitration will then prevail. The use of liquor and tobacco could be abolished in like manner.

But women do not realize their power; they seek approval of men and cater to their ideas, little realizing that if they but knew it, they could set the pace and men would gladly follow. It must be done by winning and attracting, not by scolding and nagging.

Friendship must be something else than a society for mutual improvement—indeed, it must only be that by the way, and to some extent unconsciously.—Stevenson.

AGITATION OF THOUGHT.

Various Passing Matters of Interest Mentioned.

After a careful reading of The Progressive Thinker of May 20, my thoughts were so stirred that I must give some of them expression. The issue is full of truths and facts, as is every other. The unpleasant agitation of the fraud question was shown me many years ago, as my friends here can testify. My spirit guides stated that the inside of all that is impure will be turned out to public view. It will create a stench but will clear away and leave the atmosphere clear and pure. It is here now, and I sincerely hope the clearing up will soon take place, and rest from these turbulent conditions and their unpleasant effects, be realized.

In Mr. Tefft's clear-cut article on "The Power of Thought," many truths are expressed. We know the power of pure thought for good and impure for evil results. Our plea, therefore, is that all persons may think pure thoughts, that better things may be realized.

It is pleasing to note that all truly spiritually minded men and women do recognize the power of God in directing humanity's destiny, supplying wisdom, truth and strength for all necessary services, from the universal stores. Mrs. Waisbrooker's assumed task of placing the world on the right track is strength spent unnecessarily, but the good sister has a perfect right to her own opinions. I feel certain that the world is running its course all right, in accordance with the rules of progression; but a large portion of the people whose moral refractions keep them in the rear and enmeshed in dense conditions, thus in discord and discomfort, is what gives the world its dark shades.

It is useless to worry whether Jesus the Christ or any other mighty spirit is the ruler of the connected world system of this eternity. Truth is mighty and prevaileth in God's own time, and these especial truths will have their scientific demonstrations in due time. Preparations for the same are in progress even now, but when it will be cannot be stated, as it depends on the fuller knowledge of the electric currents by those engaged in that science, for a union of the active magneto-electric forces from the earth and the elements is necessary that these substances from above and below may be brought into conjunction for said demonstrations which in time will work in as natural a process as wireless telegraphy and all that is accomplished on those lines and what is worked at by many students, which I see in the world's mind realm on its specific lines of thought output and supply.

This sister says, "Spiritualists are a result of an existing system which rests largely upon the obsessing power of the Christian idea." It is amusing to what extremes this obsessing idea is strained. It is a fact that I think all mediums at least, understand viz., that our sensing truths and seeing things spiritually, depends on each one's own development and acquired consciousness of what is about them in the spiritual and material realms of associated life. Our quests for pure truth are satisfied in accordance with our sincere, unselfish efforts to find and to realize it as truth when it is given or beheld. From different viewpoints the same things are seen differently by the studious observers. From my point of view, Spiritualism is not belittled by claiming it to be the foundation of Christianity. It is so in truth, but if Christianity has not builded properly on its foundation and the present continuation of the work then begun is carried forward as the order of true progress demands, then the credit and victory are realized where they are earned.

Works, not words of inharmony, avail in the present conflict between truth and error. To be a Spiritualist by merely believing in the return of and communication with our departed friends counts for nothing in these trials through which the world and her people are passing even now. Spirituality is needed to win out.

In the excellent lecture by Mr. J. Clegg Wright, I find much corresponding with what I am taught by my spirit teachers. It is clothed in a little different language, but in substance is about the same.

I feel a happiness come over me as the earth conditions are removed from my senses and I am in the superior state seeing an army of bright angels coming earthward, scattering truth and blessings all the way, and I feel to say: Oh, the riches of wisdom that are brought to earth through human minds by inspiration! The very mysteries of creation are revealed and man learns himself and his true place as a factor in all the mighty universal operations.

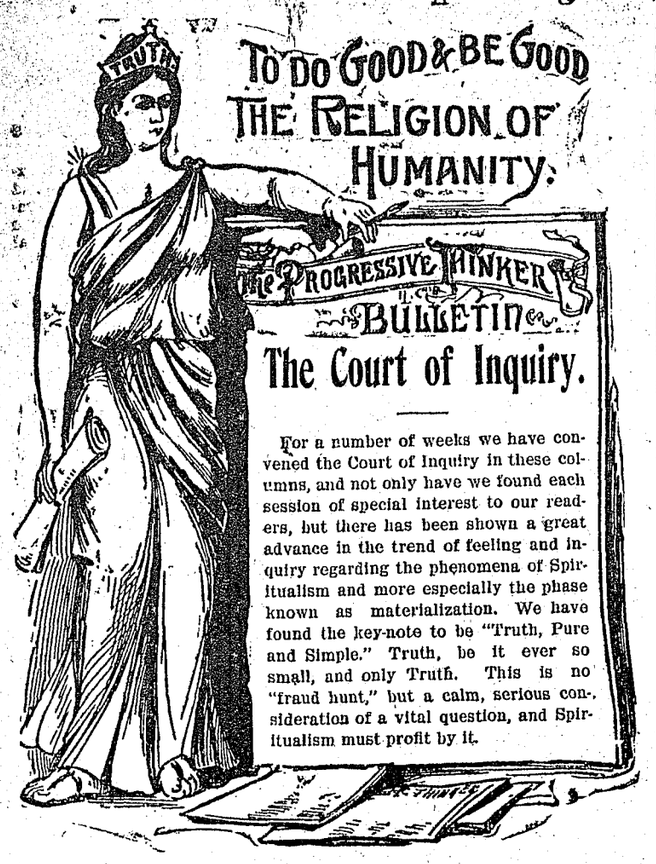
IMPROMPTU.

'Twere vain to wish thee, lady fair,
A life of cloudless bliss—
For night will surely follow day
In every clime like this;
Our brightest sun goes down 'mid clouds,
Our smiles give place to tears,
And oft amid our sunniest hopes
We cherish idle fears.



May every blessing heaven affords
Descend upon thy brow,
And all thy pathway ever be
As flowery as now;
And sometimes, when in holy dreams
All nature seems to be,
And heavenward thou hast fixed thy thoughts,
I pray remember me.

Court of Inquiry.

The Court of Inquiry.

For a number of weeks we have convened the Court of Inquiry in these columns, and not only have we found each session of special interest to our readers, but there has been shown a great advance in the trend of feeling and inquiry regarding the phenomena of Spiritualism and more especially the phase known as materialization. We have found the key-note to be "Truth, Pure and Simple." Truth, be it ever so small, and only Truth. This is no "fraud hunt," but a calm, serious consideration of a vital question, and Spiritualism must profit by it.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

Mr. Boving's Brief Reply to Judge Dunn.

To the Editor:—Judge Dunn, I see, presents another long-winded, well-written but nonsensical article full of "hot air," but no argument except the one and only one presented by him in his first letter: Was Winans conscious or not when he paraded his seance room clothed in cheap, dirty garments of his own design and manufacture? This is the point on which hinges Dunn's entire argument, and this point has been discussed pro and con, by many of our most worthy Spiritualists, and I am sorry the Judge could not have advanced some new thoughts for discussion in this second epistle, as this subject has been devoured and thoroughly digested to the satisfaction of all, I believe, except possibly the Judge himself. Winans is the only individual who will ever positively know the correct answer to this query, and his own statements on the subject do not seem to satisfy this champion of his cause.

I repeat what I have prevously stated that Winans acknowledged to Eastman, Hallman and myself, when asked how often he had made use of the paraphernalia previous to the night at my house, his answer was, "About a dozen times." What better proof do you want, Brother Dunn? Will you not take your client's own word for this? When he acknowledges he has used this paraphernalia about a dozen times, he must have been conscious on some occasions, even if not on this one, and isn't he just as guilty for having used them consciously to swindle others at other times and places? Please do not rehash this point any more, Mr. Dunn, but read and re-read what I write on the subject, and then if you are not satisfied, put it down in your book that you never will be.

Mr. Dunn thinks it strange that my claim of Winans having confessed to Eastman, Hallman and myself the use of the paraphernalia, that Dr. Eastman did not mention the fact in his first letter. For Mr. Dunn's enlightenment I will state that the confession took place about a week after the article signed by Eastman and myself was written, also that the week following the publication of my letter mentioning this confession, appeared a letter from Dr. Hallman testifying to the truth of the statements made by me. It seems that Judge Dunn requires a statement to be repeated and rehashed many times before he is satisfied, just as the only argument advanced in his first article is again advanced and is his only argument in his second. He wishes this subject gone over and more time and space devoted to it. I think, Judge, you had better strike a new note or quit the race, for you have been defeated on all points and I believe the public are of the same opinion, as I have failed to see one expression supporting you or your argument.

Winans is a rank fake and has been for twenty years or more, so say people from various parts of the country who have so written me; one of these letters I enclose to be published in connection with this article. Dunn himself refers in his first epistle to an exposure made of Winans in St. Paul some years ago.

If we hear from you again, Brother Dunn, please give us some new idea and thought for discussion, as the Winans case is worn threadbare, and Winans, the fake medium, has literally been eaten up and should be scratched from the list for ever. F. C. BOVING.

MORE DAMAGING EVIDENCE.

A Statement From a Prominent Spiritualist of Hayesville, Iowa.

F. C. Boving,

Hot Springs, Ark.

My Dear Brother:—I feel like I want to say to you, "Stand by your guns" in the C. E. Winans controversy. I know by my own personal experiences with him that you know what you are talking about. But you must not flatter yourself that you have succeeded in exposing him. It can't be done by any one person or community. My wife and I tried it nearly twenty years ago through the spiritual papers, giving detailed descriptions of his fraudulent methods and practices, together with the absolute proof of fraud throughout the whole of his work. The editor of New Thought (Moses Hull) added his testimony with that of other prominent Spiritualists, but it was "no go." Winans bobbed up serenely within a week, with plenty of friends to denounce us with all the epithets in their vocabulary.

We took him into our home and kept him a month free of charge, and finally the evidences of fraud were forced on us until, credulous as we were, we had to admit it all a bungling fraud. We did not attempt to expose him until the proof was positive that the whole thing was wilful trickery. And I could go into the cabinet and reproduce the whole show as well as he could, including all his test conditions.

You have free permission to use my name in any future discussion of the matter, or if you wish, I will explain how he does it.

Yours for truth,
JOEL RICHARDSON.

A HINT TO HANG AN ACTION ON.

I'm not a Quaker—and thanks for that—
For I've found this thing is a fact:
There are some affairs you'll be stopping at,
That can't be managed by tact.
There are certain creatures—we call them men—
That trouble this world below,
You'll forgive them seven times seventy. Then
You'll have to convince with a blow.

I have never believed in a constant row,
Or a pesky, aggressive chip,
But if one stepped over the limit now,
I'd probably hit 'im a clip
(In a brotherly way) for I've found that plan
Can make a man of a clown,
And it's easy enough to forgive a man
When you've up and knocked him down.

Yes, fighting is wrong, as a general rule,
But there's good sound logic in this,
One swift hard blow to an utter fool
Persuades him more than a kiss.
And if Old Clootie's claws you'd slip,
Remember to face him right,
For the devil got never a man on the hip,
If that man stood up to fight!

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS OFFERED

D. Edson Smith, a Prominent Spiritualist of Santa Ana, Cal., Offers Elsie Reynolds $500 to Demonstrate That in Her Presence a Spirit Can Materialize.

To the Editor:—Some people are so constituted that they must have personal evidence before they will believe some things.

There are some people of great intellect, and the highest integrity, who cannot be convinced but that Elsie Reynolds has been a genuine materializing medium. But I wish to say that I KNOW she practices trickery and deception; and I have offered her five hundred dollars to come to my house and obtain materializations while sitting under the test conditions which the medium France cheerfully submitted to.

When she submits to these tests, I will write you the results for publication. But should these tests prove her to have psychic materializing powers, still I will never again sit in one of her circles unless she sits under absolutely test conditions; for I can never again trust her after detecting her so completely in her deceptive acts in my own house, and pretending that she was clothed in the livery of heaven.

My suggestion on this fraud question is, that every medium aspiring to public recognition should first submit to an exhaustive examination by a committee whose integrity and ability is acknowledged by the mass of Spiritualists in the state where they live. This committee giving a medium who stands the examination a diploma, or certificate; the same as any other professional person is required to have a paper signed by competent examiners certifying the ability of the person desiring to serve the public with their powers.

If at any time in the future the honesty or ability of such a medium should be challenged by positive proof, then said medium should sit under any reasonable test conditions imposed by the sitters, ever after.

A Mysterious Occult Occurrence

One that Has Not as yet Been Solved, and Which Seems to Illustrate the Exercise of Some Occult Power Outside of the Material Plane of Existence. A Narrative that Reads Like Witchcraft Stories of Ancient Times.

Ab Fender and Miss Millie Goings will be married at Whitesburg, Ky., next Wednesday if—

Following that "if" [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] is a strange, weird story, and a mystery which has puzzled Whitesburg and most of the hill people of Letcher county for the last fifteen months.

Somebody, or some organization, or—the superstitious people declare—some evil spirit does not want Millie Goings to marry Ab Fender and is striving by means of the queerest plan ever conceived to keep them apart. Five times in the last fifteen months the young couple has planned to be married, five times the date has been set, five times the guests have assembled, and five times, on the eve of the wedding, once within ten minutes before the ceremony was to have begun, Ab Fender has suddenly disappeared. Each time, after two days, he has returned to Whitesburg, a little disheveled, a great deal angry, and wild for revenge. Each one of the five times he has been seized upon by an unknown person or persons, and carried away into the Blue Ridge fastnesses to the east of Whitesburg, along the Virginia border. Yet not once has Fender had even a glimpse of his assailant or assailants, nor has he heard a voice speak. Most of the time he has been only half conscious, and each time but one he has come to his full senses in some out of the way gorge or in some deserted cabin and found himself alone.

Puzzled to Know Cause of Kidnaping.

The strange part of it all is that, in the country of feudists and bitter enmities and sudden quarrel, Ab Fender is not known to have even one enemy, his genial good nature and his sunny disposition; his willingness to help, his kindness and generosity, as well as his good looks, having made him friends in all parts of the county and with all factions. But stranger than that is the fact that, except Ab, Millie Goings has no suitor, no acknowledged lover; although she has admirers by the score. She is one of the prettiest girls in all Letcher county, and, as a girl, the boys from both sides of the Blue ridge were her admirers. Callers flocked to the home of Arthur Goings, her father, three miles across the valley from Whitesburg, when she came into full bloom of womanhood, but none of them ever had a chance, as Ab Fender was recognized as her favorite.

Ab, jolly, kindly, handsome, is one of the "best fixed" young men in all the Blue Ridge region, and his timber lands—since he got an opening to the railways across the mountains in Virginia—have made him a wealthy man—for that district.

Apparently everyone was pleased, and certainly every one in the district rushed to offer congratulations, when, last July, it was announced that Ab and Millie Goings would be married. The date of the wedding was set for Feb. 15—on a Wednesday, because Millie's mother had been married on Feb. 15—also a Wednesday—and Millie planned to be married in the same saffron silk gown and old lace veil that her mother and her mother's mother, back in Petersburg, Va., had worn when they were married.

First of His Queer Experiences.

All the plans for the wedding were laid. Ab traveled over the mountains to Manchester to buy his wedding finery and it was planned that they would take a wedding trip to Richmond and to Petersburg. The day of the wedding arrived. It was to be an evening wedding, and the young couple was to spend the night at Goings' home and start the next morning over the mountains on horseback to Glamorgan, Va., to catch the train. Ab and Millie were together during the morning—but the women were busy and told him not to be fussing around the house and sent him away. He kissed Millie tenderly and declared he would take himself out of the way until supper time. Then he rode into Whitesburg, treated the crowd of men who gathered to congratulate him, and went up to his sawmill. He returned to his home in Whitesburg before 5 o'clock, ate supper with Vance Mullenix, who was to be his best man, and went up stairs to attire himself for the wedding, which was to take place at 8 o'clock.

At 7 o'clock Vance, who was dressed and waiting, got uneasy, fearing they would be late after a three mile drive to the scene of the festivities, and, going to Ab's room, knocked at the door. There was no response and he pushed the door open and entered. Not a trace of the bridegroom was to be found. The alarm was hastily raised. A score of persons were let into the secret of the disappearance. A messenger was dispatched to the Goings homestead to notify the bride of the disappearance of Ab.

Millie was prostrated. Her family and her friends thought Ab had deliberately run away to avoid marrying her, but her faith in her lover remained firm, although she was frantic with fear that harm had befallen him.

Disappeared While He Was Dressing.

The friends of the missing man scoured the country for some trace of him. An examination of his room showed that he had almost finished dressing and was ready to put on his coat and waistcoat when he stopped. Vance Mullenix vowed that Ab could not have left the room or the house without his knowing it, as he was waiting in a room at the bottom of the stairs. An investigation in the garden showed footprints, as if someone had jumped from the low porch on which Ab's room faced.

The entire community was ready to upbraid (or worse) the recreant lover, and there were a dozen young men ready to comfort Millie, but she would not listen to them. She declared something had happened to Ab and that he would return and explain.

Two days later, at dark, Ab reappeared. His wedding finery was sadly soiled and torn and he was suffering from great excitement and intense feeling. He rushed straight to Millie's house, but the family refused to permit him to see her.

His story was a strange one. "I was just finishing dressing," he said, "when suddenly I thought I heard a noise on the roof of the porch. I stepped to the window and looked out. I saw nothing and leaned out further to look into the yard. Then it seemed as if I was being strangled and I lost consciousness.

"I waked up late this afternoon. I was in a deserted nigger cabin on the banks of Oven Fork."

The mystery of the disappearance and reappearance of Ab was the wonder of the district. Millie's angry relatives tried to keep them apart, but she saw him and was convinced of the truth of his story. Together they discussed the strange case and decided that some unknown enemy had plotted the kidnaping, hoping that his disappearance would cause Millie to throw him over.

Lured by his Sweetheart's Voice.

The wedding date was next set for April 4. Ab purchased another wedding outfit, and, in the busy preparations for the ceremony, they almost forgot the kidnaping, although Millie begged Ab to be careful, fearing that some injury might be done him. He promised. Again they planned an evening wedding and again Vance Mullenix was chosen as best man. This time Vance staid in the room with Ab until he was attired, and together and on horseback they started to ride to the Goings home, where the minister and guests were waiting.

Two miles out of Whitesburg they stopped to give their horses a drink in Distillery run, which flowed down through a wild gorge. They had been riding side by side and both were armed. Dusk had fallen and the shadows were getting deeper in the woods. Suddenly from up the gorge came a wild scream: "Help, O, Ab, help!"

"My God, it's Millie's voice," said Ab, grabbing his revolver, leaping from his horse, and starting toward the spot, running through the shallow water. "Come on, Vance, they're stealing her," he called back.

Vance was after him in a minute. They went crashing forward up the creek, following the sound of the screams.

Suddenly Vance ceased to hear any sounds. The noise of Ab tearing through the underbrush along the creek had stopped and so had the screams. Wild with fear, Vance ran forward. In vain he searched and called for Ab. There was no sound. After fifteen minutes' frantic hunt he retreated to the road and galloped rapidly to the Goings household and raised the alarm. All the guests set out to find Ab and rescue him. Not a trace was to be found. His footsteps ended suddenly in a piece of soft ground along the creek.

Superstitious Blame Evil Spirits.

All that night and the next day the guests and neighbors searched, but there was no clew. The superstitious whites and the ignorant blacks began to think that evil spirits were conspiring to prevent the wedding.

Friday night Ab, almost crazed by anger, chagrin and shame at the notoriety he had brought upon the girl he loved, reappeared. His clothing was torn, his flesh cut and bruised, his hands scarred and he showed evidence of fierce resistance.

This time the family of Miss Goings was determined that the match should be broken off. "That's just what they want," declared Millie. "If I refuse to wed Ab it will be just what they want. I love him and am going to marry him in spite of them—whoever they may be."

Ab's experiences were worse than his first. "I went tearing along, under the bushes, my revolver in my hand," he said, "when suddenly I ducked my head to go under the lower branches of a tree. Instantly I was caught by a rope or something and jerked into the air. The rope was partly around my neck, but I fought as hard as I could. I was dragged up into the tree, out of breath and choked. I remember hearing Vance running around on the ground, yelling and whistling, and then I partially lost consciousness. I remember being lifted through the tree and on to the bluff. I heard no one speak nor did I feel any hands on me. When I recovered this morning I was on the banks of Lents creek, twelve miles down."

A family conference was held and everybody concerned discussed the matter. There was not a breath of suspicion attached to any one. The entire affair was a puzzle. There was a hint that Vance Mullinex might be interested, as he had once asked Millie to marry him and been refused, but both Ab and Millie declined to consider that supposition. It was even hinted that one of the bridesmaids might have inspired the attacks through love for Ab—but Ab blushingly denied that such a thing was possible.

Secret Ceremony is Interrupted.

Nevertheless, it was decided that the young couple should be married in secret on the next Wednesday morning. No one except Ab's mother, Millie's immediate family, and the minister was told. It was planned that the wedding should be arranged so that no one would suspect such a thing. The minister was to call at the house during the morning. Ab was to go to his sawmill, cross Copperas mountain, and come to the Goings homestead by the mountain path, arriving at the house at 11 o'clock, and the marriage was to be solemnized before noon. To further deceive his enemies Ab was to wear ordinary working clothes and change to better garments after arriving at the bride's home.

The program was carried out exactly. Ab went to the room to change his clothes—and disappeared again. He was simply gone, and there was not a trace left of him. Friday morning he reappeared again, sick, suffering from hunger and exposure. He said that, while dressing, he simply fell asleep. He remembered smelling some pungent odor just before he lost consciousness. He had waked up on the other side of Old Horny mountain, on the Virginia side, the morning after he disappeared, and had been over a day getting back to Whitesburg.

The only theory possible was that he had been chloroformed, carried out upon the roof, and thence over the "leanto" kitchen to the back of the house and up the mountain side. That this could have been accomplished without attracting the attention of somebody in the house full of guests seemed impossible.

Refused to Yield to Enemy.

The third disappearance and third postponement of the wedding caused a great sensation among the ignorant people, both whites and blacks, who declared evil spirits were banded together against the young couple. Ab was so affected that, in his desperation, he offered to renounce Millie, fearing that he would bring some calamity down upon her, but the girl bravely refused to listen and declared they must fight their enemies together.

It was planned then to delay the wedding until fall and watch and wait for the enemy to expose himself. Nothing happened and the young people began to think that the enemy had forgotten them. On Sept 9, without saying a word to anyone the two decided they would ride into Whitesburg, go to the minister's house, and have the ceremony performed. They reached the minister's house safely and asked him to marry them at once. He declared two witnesses were necessary. He offered to go for them. The young people remained together in the parlor waiting for his return.

When the minister returned with the two witnesses he found Millie alone, sleeping, evidently under the influence of some powerful anaesthetic. Ab had disappeared, Millie did not know when or how. Two days later he returned again.

"I was sitting talking to Millie," he said, "and suddenly I caught a whiff of the odor I noticed the last time I disappeared. I turned my head suddenly and saw a shadow fall on the porch. I started to step to the window and look out. I remember reeling. The next thing I knew I was up by Baxter's mill, in the mountains."

Everybody concerned realized finally that they were dealing with some powerful enemy. They decided that the only way was to guard both the bride and groom carefully, surround them at all times with friends, and keep guard on them.

Accompanied by Armed Guard.

The date of the wedding was set for Christmas night. Again Millie got out her veil and her grandmother's saffron silk, and again Ab garbed himself in the splendor of a groom.

The company assembled Christmas afternoon, the men drinking the health of the bride and groom several times. Every time Ab moved one or two of his friends accompanied him. Every man in the party was armed.

At 7:30 that evening Mrs. Clint Rowe, who had been helping dress the bride, called down the stairway: "Oh, Ab, come up and see how pretty she looks."

With a bound Ab started up the stairway. Now, at the landing where the stairway turns, is a long window, flush with the floor of the landing. Ab turned this corner and stopped seeing his bride standing, beautiful in the saffron silk and the old lace veil, at the head of the stairs. An instant later there was a shriek from the bride.

"Ab's fallen out of the window," she screamed.

The women stood motionless. The men below were slow to catch the alarm, but when they did they grasped their revolvers, sprang out the door, and ran around the house. Scarcely a minute had elapsed from the time that Ab fell out of the window, certainly not more than two minutes, but he had disappeared utterly. Dick Goings, a brother of the bride, and Sam White declared they heard the sound of horses' hoofs beating on the clay road, but whether they did or not, no one knows. It was discovered that Ab's body had been carried over the picket fence that separated the yard from the road, but the trail was lost there.

Found in His Bed After Two Days.

The scare that time came near breaking off the match entirely. For an entire day and two nights the search continued, then Ab was found asleep in his own bed in Whitesburg. Whether he was carried there, or came there in a daze, or how long he had been there, he nor any one else knew.

The bride was prostrated from fear and the shock of the fifth destruction of their plans, and Ab was sick for weeks. He had suffered two broken ribs and a fractured arm.

"I was caught by the coat from behind and dragged through the window," he said. "I was not falling, but was swung out of the window. I distinctly heard some one slip down the steep roof of the little porch. I was knocked senseless when I hit the ground and remembered nothing more."

After Ab recovered he and Millie talked it all over. They agreed to get married, despite all opposition, and they firmly believe that, once wedded, the opposition will cease.

The date for the wedding has been set for next Wednesday. Guards will surround the house and Ab and Millie will be watched constantly until the ceremony is over. The fact that no violence, beyond what was necessary to effect the capture, has been used in any one of the five kidnapings, assures both Ab and Millie that whoever is behind the act means them no harm beyond separating them.

But they will breathe easier when the "I wills" are said.

ANOTHER STRANGE CASE.

The Spirits and Money.

I was reading to-day in The Progressive Thinker the article from Mrs. Reynolds of Puyallup, Wash., giving an account of going to a Mr. Kintons' and while there the spirits taking a $10 gold piece and hiding it under the carpet, to prove their power of return. I think some of my experience in that direction will make good reading. I have a ranch at Alpine, some thirty miles from San Diego. I have my office and rooms in San Diego as a magnetic healer. Mrs. Bailey, my wife, has been sorely afflicted for some time. She felt she ought to go to the ranch for a season, leaving me at San Diego. About the first of April she sent for me (she is a strong psychic also), was feeling much worse, so I went. I had in my purse $30 in bills—$20 and $10. I changed my clothes for a rough suit to work in. For three days I never thought of my money which I left in my pants in the wardrobe, till I wished to use it. Then I found it gone—nowhere to be found. We laid the occurrence to some spirit joker, as such tricks through my wife's mediumship, had been done before.

A few days afterward I went back to San Diego, as I found I had to break up business there, and go to the ranch to care for her. So I went down to close up, sell some goods and take others home with me. There was at the ranch a wash stand, a match for our bed-room set at San Diego; so she sent it down to me. While I was varnishing and cleaning up the set, I pulled out one of the lower drawers of the washstand, and I saw a newspaper behind them. I took it out; there dropped therefrom the $10 and $20 bills. A day or so after I was showing a friend who had called in to see me, how I had found my money. He said, "What's that in the lower drawer?" I looked and there was a $5 gold piece lying right in the center of the drawer. Now I have not had a gold piece for months in my possession. That stand was brought down in a farm wagon lying on its back, so the gold piece was not likely to stay in the drawer very long.

This shows what power over matter the spirits have, when the proper magnetic elements are in their favor.

THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE.

Abstract of Lecture by Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Before the Worcester Association of Spiritualists.

Man has speculated in the past, and there are many speculations today as to what will be the church of the future. My friends, let us suggest a foundation tonight for the church of the future. The churches in the past have been built for God; let the church of the future be built for man. God needs no church, for he has the boundless universe as his temple, the wonderful symphony of stars and planets, as pipe organ and choir, and all that has been revealed through counless ages as revelations.

When we seek to define this overruling Power, this Divine Principle of this Universe, we seek to define something that is incomprehensible. And yet there are many individuals in this world today who claim to know all about God, what he has been doing through countless ages, and how he will operate in the future.

The Principle of Life, this Law of the Universe which has existed through all time, and will continue to exist through all Eternity, how can we define it? The quarrels and dissensions which occur in the churches, and the division among Spiritualists at the present time, are all brought about as soon as we seek to define, confine, or limit this Principle of Life.

How much blood has been shed, tempers lost, the friendship of years broken, by a discussion of the God question. John Calvin could stand in the arrogance and dignity of his supposed superiority of culture and position, and calmly witness the burning of Servetus at the stake, simply because Servetus claimed "Christ was the living son of God," and Calvin proclaimed, "Christ was the son of the living God."

And when in 1848, Modern Spiritualism was born, in answer to the question which came rolling down through the ages, "If man die, shall he live again?" all who claimed to talk with angels were denounced as witches, and yet the truth lives on.

Let us then build the church of the future for man to use as he may desire; if he wishes to go there to pray, he may do so. If he wishes to come together and discuss the ethical and spiritual problems of the hour, it shall be his privilege, and with the God of Lyman Abbott, the demonstration of Immortality through Spiritualism, and the Brotherhood of Socialism lived, we are laying the foundation of the church of the future and the religion of the future, for all humanity.

When we consider the birth of Lyman Abbott, and his subsequent education and environment; his social prestige and position, after reaching the age of seventy years, to evolve a moral backbone large enough to say to the world, "I no longer believe in a personal God, but a Principle of the Universe," in our opinion he stands out as a sacred lily in our midst today. Thomas Paine ascended the mount, and descending gave to humanity all that he had received. When asked, "Where do you find God?" he answered, "I see God in the mountain, the river, the trees and flowers, and in the face of my brother man." And again, "Where do you see the wisdom of God?" he replied, "In the worlding of this mighty universe;" and "Where do you see his mercy and munificence?" again the answer came, "He maketh the sun to shine and the rain to fall alike upon the just and the unjust." And yet the world today has not grown to a concept of the God defined by Thomas Paine, after one hundred and twenty years.

Thomas Paine and all other noble souls who have lived and labored for humanity lived alone, deprived of all that was near and dear; persecuted, maligned, he lived his life alone, and passed into spirit life alone, and yet the results of his labors are here, and he who so loved his brother man will continue to labor for the good of humanity The year that Modern Spiritualism was born also marks the birth of the Woman's Suffrage movement. The gentlemen of cloth denounced it on all sides, declaring "when woman enters public life she will be unsexed, the sacred gift of motherhood will be trailed in the dust," but the great feminine element of humanity was awakened and such women as Susan B. Anthony, Julia Ward Howe, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Mary A. Livermore and hosts of colleagues were not daunted by the denunciation from the pulpit, but resolved to continue their work and await the result. And the female element, which is the mother of all life, has entered every avenue in public life today, and the result is, we have the best mothers, wives, and sweethearts standpoint, all are co-equal.

We recognize no sex in the spirit world, from an intellectual or spiritual standpoint, all are co-eual.

And now, my friends, we have laid the foundation for the church of the future, the religion of the future, and when that time shall come the brotherhood that exists in spirit life shall be lived here on the earth. But there is still one more problem to be adjusted, and that is the industrial problem. America stands today the leading nation of the world, the stars and stripes the most beautiful flag that floats, the emblem of liberty. You claim to be a Christian nation, you claim to be Spiritualists, you boast of your educational institutions, of your million dollar libraries, and yet in every city in your land to-day, we find squalor, ignorance, and degradation, hungry stomachs, uneducated brains, and we ask, who is responsible for these conditions? There is hardly a strike in your land today, but another follows, the trial and execution of one criminal is hardly at an end before another murderer occupies his cell. You will continue to enlarge your navy, and reach out for territorial aggrandizement until this industrial problem is adjusted and justice and equal rights prevail. But when we fully realize that "all men are created equal, and we live that brotherhood taught by the Nazarene of old, the slums shall disappear, school-houses shall take the places of prisons,—out from those prison doors shall come men and women not deformed, but reformed, and all humanity will then fully realize the true meaning of the words, "Peace on earth, good will to man."

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

Were You Born Under a Lucky Star?

A complete exposition of the science of Astrology, adapted from the Four Books of Ptolemy, the Astronomer on the art of Reading the Stars, with many illustrations. By A. ALPHEUS, Secretary of the Astrological Society of England and America. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, with beautiful designs stamped on side and back. Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,

With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Development of the Spirit After Transition. By the late M. Faraday. The origin of religions, and their influence upon the mental development of the human race. Price, 50 cents.

A Trenchant Analysis.

Spiritualism as an Organic Movement Carefully Analyzed, Its Errors Pointed out, and Methods Given Whereby It Can Advance to a Higher plane of Spirituality and Usefulness.

The location of the hall is important. It should be easy of access, so that strangers can find it without trouble; well lighted and ventilated, and presenting an attractive appearance. There should be cheerful surroundings, and new attendants should be made to feel that they are welcome and that their presence is desirable. It is important, too, that there be harmonious and elevating spiritual influences pervading the place, so that the lecturers and mediums may be enabled to do their best. Where the hall is used at times for other purposes not soul-elevating, but sordid and earthly and diametrically opposed to spiritual things, these subtle, miasmal emanations are sure to linger and exert an undesirable influence over any spiritual meeting that may be held therein, and while only a few sensitives may be conscious of its existence, it affects the whole audience harmfully, rendering them discontented and unappreciative of the truths presented. Verily, it is no wonder some societies fail.

The meetings should be advertised as much as possible, so that people who are not directly connected with the society may be made to realize that it is active and progressive, that good talent is provided, that they are welcome, for the neglect of this results in small attendance and weak societies. Advertising is necessary for the acquisition of new members, without which the society will sooner or later pass into decay and pass out of existence.

If by any possibility the society can pay expenses without charging admission fee at the door this should, if practiced, be abolished without delay. For while it requires money to support a meeting, those who do not have it should not be made to feel that unless they pay a certain sum of money into the coffers of the society their absence is more desirable than their presence.

Spiritualism and its benignant influence should be free, and the society which places a ten-cent barrier at the door denies admission to those who stand most in need of its comforting and cheering message. A Spiritualist society should exist for the truths it may teach and the good it may do; not for the purpose of seeing how much money it can put into its treasury. The society which would bar out the poverty-stricken unfortunate by making obligatory the payment of a definite admission fee is lax in its duty and not putting in practice as it should, the beneficent teachings of Spiritualism.

There is scarcely another denomination that would resort to this practice, and I fail to see the reason it should be the rule among Spiritualists. The helpful influence of Spiritualism is priceless, therefore let it be spread abroad without price, for as well as other churches are supported by voluntary contributions I believe that the people who attend Spiritualist meetings are liberal enough so that they will pay their way without compulsion. Generally a collection will be found sufficient to defray all expenses. If not, then a subscription list should be passed around; and if its purpose is explained there should be no trouble in interesting able Spiritualists to make up the deficiency. Then socials and other entertainments could also be held and would do much toward creating an interest in the work and providing additional funds. Even though the abolition of the compulsory fee entail hardship at first, the society that persistently endeavors to have free meetings? will in the end become more prosperous than the one that clings to the pay-your-money-or-stay-away system; for in the free meeting the size of the audiences will gradually increase until in the course of years the larger attendance, all giving according to their means, will provide a larger collection than if a certain sum was demanded of each, thus checking the accretion of new members and keeping the audience down to the minimum in size. The very fact that there are several Spiritual societies throughout the country which do not charge an admission fee, and yet hire good talent, and are prosperous, proves that the practice is unnecessary.

It must not be expected that any immediate benefit will be derived from having free admission and introducing other reforms; it has taken years for the compulsory charge and other sins of omission and commission to exert their baneful influence as evidenced by the pitifully small audiences sometimes found at our meetings, and it will take years of patient effort to bring diminished audiences and weakened societies up again to their proper size and influence.

I am somewhat surprised that any medium worthy of the name will attempt to hold seances at hours that conflict with the services of the local societies. The medium who holds and the Spiritualists who attend a private circle during the same hours that the society is accustomed to meet must be extremely selfish and have but little regard for organized Spiritualism. In those places where there are societies it should be made the rule to neither hold nor attend circles on Sunday. The public meetings need all the support it is possible to give; and it does not look right to neglect them entirely unnecessarily.

I could not consider this article complete were I to omit reference to the good work that can be accomplished by means of the often despised and seldom appreciated conference meetings. Properly managed, it becomes one of the most entertaining and instructive of meetings; and is of great value as a means whereby each individual can give expression to his views. The discussions that ensue are often more thought-provoking than a lengthy lecture from one point of view would be; in the conference you hear both sides of the question presented and must use your reason to determine which is right; when a lecture is given, many do not stop to question the correctness of the speaker's position, and erroneous ideas are thus inculcated.

A spirited conference meeting generally makes clear the truth and exposes the error. It is a sound argument indeed in which a dozen or more critical minds can pick no flaws. The conference also teaches us to be tolerant of each other's views; and the person who cannot listen good humoredly while his sentiments are being analyzed and criticised and opinions expounded contrary to his own has no place in a conference meeting—nor, for that matter, anywhere else in Spiritualism.

In Grand Rapids there is held each Sunday afternoon a conference meeting under the efficient management of our good friends and co-workers George and Emma Gibbs whose earnest efforts along this line have done much to show to me that the conference meeting can accomplish a great amount of good, that it is not of secondary importance and that it should receive attention commensurate with that accorded the more popular message and lecture work. I do not exaggerate when I say that at this little meeting, in the course of an afternoon I have heard more sound philosophy, more true Spiritualism and more convincing eloquence, than is found in many of the lectures delivered by speakers who are among the best, and whose work is widely heralded. The nucleus of a good society has here been built with conferences as the principal attraction.

In many small towns, and fair sized cities, too, there are no Spiritualist services being held, merely because there are only a few active Spiritualists in the place, and they are unable to employ and support a medium or speaker. Here, then, the conference becomes doubly important; in fact it becomes absolutely indispensable; the largest and most prosperous societies have had small beginnings; and through and by means of the conference, wherever there are a dozen or even a less number who are interested in the philosophy of Spiritualism, there may be awakened an increasing interest in the work, until eventually a society would exist, strong enough, and prosperous enough, to engage good speakers and properly support them.

Where satisfactory speakers cannot be engaged it is far better to hold a conference than it is to dispense with the meetings or make the irreparable blunder of engaging an inefficient speaker.

The conference meeting is as essential as the home circle. It results in bringing new workers into the field, as it offers a chance for development, just as the home circle stimulates the development of mediumship.

Good management is most important in the conference; harmony must be kept; the widest possible range of discussion must be allowed; no favoritism must be shown; those who show a tendency to become abusive must be restrained; and those who are reticent must be encouraged to express their opinions. In the meeting I have mentioned it is customary to limit the talks to ten minutes each. It has also been found desirable to introduce another rule whereby each person is supposed to wait until called on before expressing his thoughts. This holds in check the impetuous, loquacious person who perforce must "shoot off his mouth" merely because he is more agile and can get to his feet quicker than his more unobtrusive neighbor. The meetings thus move along smoothly; there is no hesitation; and all have an equal chance.

Another practice in force which might be copied by other societies with profit is that of selecting a subject for discussion and announcing it a week or more in advance. This leaves those who are interested a chance to become informed and get their arguments into presentable shape. Where there is no subject, or where it is not given out in advance, it is necessary to talk at random and in an unstudied manner, with the result that the discussions are not so profoundly thoughtful, so entertaining and instructive, as would otherwise be the case. The audience should be requested to name any subjects they would like to hear discussed; and where two or more subjects are presented a vote of the audience should determine which is to be first given consideration. It is also customary to allow the one who gives the topic to make the opening remarks.

One thing more I wish to consider before closing. There is a habit quite general among societies of not holding any meetings during the summer months. That is, for six months a great effort is made to get people into the habit of attending the meetings; then the meetings are closed for six months so that they may again get into the habit of remaining away. Then comes a wail that "people don't take any interest in the meetings." There is some talk that the camp-meetings make warm-weather Spiritualists. Perhaps they do; but this intermittent method of holding local meetings is creating a lot of cold-weather Spiritualists who are more numerous and more reprehensible than the former class.

I am well aware that for various reasons it is difficult to have large audiences at all seasons of the year. On a hot summer's day only those who are deeply interested need be expected to attend; there is no truer test of whether or not anyone is a Spiritualist in more than name than the willingness to patiently endure the discomforts of a stuffy, inadequately ventilated hall (such as is altogether too often used by unprogressive Spiritual societies), for the purpose of listening to the truths of Spiritualism. When a proper hall is provided this difficulty is much lessened.

In spite of the impediments in the way, it is best to have a meeting every month in the year. It keeps alive an interest in the work. If it is found inconvenient to have a meeting every week then hold a service every alternate one, or else once a month. If during part of the year a speaker can't be supported, hold a conference instead.

Never make the mistake of employing a second-class speaker because the size of the audience will not permit the securing of a first-class one. Harmful as it is to cease holding meetings during part of the year, it is far better than to hold a service with an apology for a speaker on the rostrum.

Every thinking Spiritualist believes the day will sometime come when Spiritualism shall find universal acceptance. Then, necessarily, the Spiritualist society must supplant the churches of other denominations. As we strive now to master the details of organization and make a creditable showing we should keep this well in mind, so that when we gain the position and power possessed by some of the other churches we may not repeat the mistakes they are making, of seeking splendor more than usefulness, of being conservative instead of progressive, of being intolerant instead of broad-minded, of prizing most highly allegiance to doctrines rather than practice of teachings.

A faint conception of what the Spiritualist society of the future is to be is given in an admirable article by "A Minister's Wife," in the December Cosmopolitan, under the title, "Some Churches and Their Problems":

"In the church of to-morrow will be found centered the various forms of the social life of the community. Club rooms * * and halls for various purposes will no longer be required. In a small city of from twenty to thirty thousand people, the duplication of churches and other buildings for public use, where the money must in each case come from about the same men, is in every case a drain upon the private resources that should be spent in providing extra comforts or even luxuries for the individual families. The member of the coming church will know no distinction between his church life and his ordinary pursuits. Whatever he now does, with a clear conscience, outside the church * * he will then take into the church building. It will be the most cheerful, attractive place in town, always open, and the center of every kind of helpful influence.

"Men, women and children will find their varied social and intellectual, as well as moral wants not only provided for, but catered to. In short, the church will be what it ought to be, the hearthstone of the composite life of the community.

"This church of to-morrow will have no creed, save the simple one of service to humanity.

"Its pulpit will have become a platform, and its preachers will be more of a procession than they are now. A powerful reason for the fickle taste of the average audience of to-day is found in the motive which brings them to church. Our fathers came to worship; the preacher was an incident. We of to-day come to be intellectually stimulated. Our homes are filled with the best literature; we are constantly in touch with the thought of the world's best minds; and, on Sunday, we find ourselves dissatisfied with something less * * *"

[And with mediumship the same thing is true. The home circle has educated Spiritualists and investigators to be exacting; most good tests are given in the home circle, there are more mediums, and better and more efficient ones too, working privately by means of the home circle than there are on the public platform; and the Spiritualist society that wishes to retain its good name and the active support of thinking Spiritualists must take this condition of affairs into consideration, and when mediumistic work is given, great care should be exercised that only honest mediums and well developed are allowed on the rostrum. Every time a society engages an unreliable medium it means the alienation of people from the society, and even from Spiritualism as well. Though the management of the society deem a certain medium genuine and satisfactory, yet if there are sundry murmurs and rumors of phenomena of doubtful authenticity taking place through this medium it is well to take the side of safety and hire only those about whom there can be no uncertainty and whose records are free from suspicion and accusation.]

"But, unfortunately, men of genius are rare; there would never be enough of them in any one generation to fill all the pulpits, even if the churches were able to pay them the amount of money which equal ability could command in other lines of effort. And so the matter will be solved by having a local superintendent, who with his assistant will look after the detail work of the organization. But the platform work will be done by specialists, very much as is done in some of our universities to-day, these men being engaged for single addresses long in advance, and making a tour of the leading churches of the country." [be it noted that this is a commendation of the method so common among Spiritualists of having itinerant workers instead of settled speakers.] "The Sundays when, for financial or other reasons these men cannot be secured, will find upon the platform the leading citizens of the town, who will discuss questions of public interest. And there will be many musical Sundays, when the people will get the uplift and inspiration which is so vital an element in living.

"The church offering will also be relegated to oblivion. The modern church will no more think of collecting funds to pay its bills during a public service than a well-bred host would think of permitting his grocer and caterer to present their bills at his banquet-table between courses, say the salad and the desert." [In other words, the meetings will be supported by subscription, as they should.]

When one compares the average Spiritualist society, as it is, with the ideal society, as it ought to be, the outlook is not very bright and cheering. In fact, the gulf seems almost too great to span. The Spiritualist society of to-morrow will have a field of labor as broad as humanity's needs. The Spiritualist society of today is narrow, extremely narrow, sectarian, far more sectarian than we realize; the philosophy of Spiritualism is expounded, but seldom is it placed in practice to the extent it ought to be; the great humanitarian and educational moves the world over are seldom given active support by our societies, and still more rarely do they find their genesis in organized Spiritualism. This is not as it should be. As Spiritualists we need to awaken, to exercise more zeal; we should extend the field of operation of our societies, and make Spiritualism more useful than ornamental, if ever it is to assume its proper station as a religion that brings heaven to earth, gives hope to all who listen, and offers to the unfortunate, the unrighteous, and the undeveloped, a way to justice, to righteous, and to more perfect life.

It is not enough that we preach our philosophy; as an organization we must apply its principles. The Spiritual society will not drift into its proper place; it will take united and persistent effort to place it there. Our pathway is not unobstructed; we must compete with the liberal churches. Thousands and thousands of avowed Spiritualists throughout the country are attending these churches; and they would not do so without good reasons. The liberal churches must excel in some particulars wherein the average Spiritual society is deficient. It is our duty to remedy these defects. Among other things, at these churches good sermons are often preached that contain much of the philosophy of Spiritualism. The meeting places are light and clean and attractive. Above all, Spiritualists are made welcome, are not discriminated against; their support is appreciated. Then, too, there is generally better organization than is usually found among Spiritual societies. Certain it is that Spiritualists would not desert the Spiritualist meeting unless their needs were better catered to elsewhere.

The lesson scarcely needs enforcing. We must become more diligent; make our meetings more attractive; organize more thoroughly. We must excel in every point where the other churches now surpass us—or else remain in the rear of the procession. If we want to make the Spiritual society the leading church of the future, we must strive to have it perfect in every detail, supplying the needs of the present that it may grow and prosper, considering the necessities of the future that it may fulfill its obligations to posterity and stand in no danger of being supplanted by other organizations.

THE MYSTERY AND THEORY OF DREAMS.

No person ever gets through twenty-four hours of life without hallucinations of memory, or of the senses—sane hallucinations. They go to make up our dreams. We see, hear, smell, and taste things in our dreams which have no reality, but which appear to the mind of the dreamer to be real.

There is no such thing as dreamless sleep. During the whole continuance of sleep the mind, I believe, is occupied with a certain kind of thinking, which works round hallucinations. Every one has some dreams which he thinks he remembers clearly, and which he can recount in a fashion when awakened. Usually the dream editing will be extremely free. Often when awakened a person will assert that he has not been dreaming. Nevertheless, after a lapse of time, he may remember that he had been dreaming and may be able to remember what he dreamed. If a person resolves every time he is awakened to ask himself immediately whether he has been dreaming, he will generally be aware that he has just passed out of a dream.

If there is no dreamless sleep, then it seems to follow that the brain is uncensingly at work either in dream thinking or in thinking that goes on when we are awake. Both kinds of thinking differ much in different individuals.

The continuity of the thinking part of brain work may appear to prevent that refreshment to the mind which we commonly regard as obtained through sleep. But refreshment may come without stoppage of work. Change may be sufficient. In some parts of the work of the brain it is certain there is no stoppage. Its work, for example, of carrying on respiration and the circulation of the blood never ceases. The thinking part of the brain's work may be regarded in a sense as involuntary, though it can be modified and directed by the will, it is nevertheless independent of the will, to the extent at least that at no time can we choose whether we shall think or cease from thinking, and, like other parts of the work of the brain, it may go on without stoppage while the life lasts—under control of the will when we are awake and without that control when we are asleep. The point is that thinking is essential to the continuance of life. It need not be the kind of thinking that comes from the direction of the will, but thinking of some sort must go on if life is to continue. We cannot think unless we are alive, and we cannot be alive without thinking.

Beyond question thinking goes on in some parts of sleep, and in those parts consciousness is as certainly not lost. Consciousness is coextensive with all mental operations and it must exist in dream thinking—both in that which is remembered and that which is forgotten. In the thinking that goes on in sleep there is an absence of the sense of weariness. It seems to be left free to sport and, through the free, unrestrained play, as well as through the will's rest from work, refreshment seems to come to what we call thinking. Dreaming is mental recreation.

It is alleged that during sleep valuable legal opinions have been written, difficult mathematical problems solved, and poetry and music composed. All such things I believe to be fables. The stories of the wonderful balancings of sleep walkers on roofs of houses and narrow ledges may be accepted as desires to manufacture the marvelous.

There is another character of sleep thinking that is of interest, and that is the lack of moral sense in sleep. It would shock us to know all the improper things that are done in sleep with unblushing effrontery by the most proper people. If the moral sense is not wholly suppressed in sleep it is only partially active. If the moral faculty were not in abeyance while we dream, then I should have difficulty in holding that dream thinking is a state of mental disorder, because in all forms of mental disorder the moral faculty participates in the disorder.

We almost never feel astonishment or surprise in our dreams. We commit wicked and immoral deeds, but we are neither troubled nor surprised.

The study of dreams appears to lead to the following opinions:

That there is no such thing as dreamless sleep.

That thinking is involuntary—to the extent, at least, that we cannot cease to think under any order of the will.

That thinking has various characteristics, these being mainly due to the amount of control and direction exercised over it by the will.

That there are different qualities of thinking, depending on the original constitution, or the existing state of health of each individual.

That thinking never ceases during life, and is essential to the continuance of life.

That dream thinking is uncontrolled and undirected by the will, is never coherent and concentrated, is more or less of the same character as thinking in delirium, and constitutes a state of mental disorder which is not a state of disease.

That thinking, when awake, is always to some extent under control of the will.

That there are many degrees of sleep and wakefulness, and as many degrees of efficiency in the controlling and directing power of the will.

That thinking, like breathing or the beating of the heart, does not cause a sense of weariness, though all three, of course, have a wearing out effect on all the organs concerned.

That the will's inhibiting and directing work brings fatigue and a demand for rest.

That the will finds its rest and refreshment in sleep.

That the frequent occurrence of a state of disordered mind occurring in sleep does not do us harm, but, on the contrary, does us good.—Sir Arthur Mitchell, in Chicago Tribune.

SPIRIT HELP.

A Marvelous Occurrence in Connection With a Bird Cage.

I have a little bird. Its cage is suspended by a copper wire to a hook. Well, the wire was getting old, and when I fed the bird, I thought I must get another wire. The next day I was surprised to notice the wire shorter, and the same tied, and a piece of broken wire lying on top of the cage. If the wire had broken in the night, the cage would have fallen, so I thank the spirits for breaking the wire and tying the cage up again, and putting the broken wire on top. We have no servants, and my husband hardly ever notices the bird at all, so I know the spirits did the work.

Review of Passing Events.

There is a whale on exhibition in Baltimore and the Baltimore Sun takes occasion to preach a sermon to those who disbelieve the story of Jonah and the whale. That story has furnished a bone of contention, and been taken seriously or humorously according to the mentality of the receiver. Understood as a solar myth, a folk-lore story, it is a pleasing portion of the child literature of the ancient world. As a divinely inspired writing it is an amusing story from the delightfully ingenuous manner with which it narrates impossible occurrences.

It appears that some visitors to the whale have expressed the old criticism that the whale's throat was too small to swallow a man, and therefore the Bible is not true. The objection is shallow, for the Bible does not say a whale swallowed Jonah, but a "great fish." It is entirely gratuitous to say it was a whale.

The writer of the Sun editorial is deeply incensed at the attempt to explain this miracle. He says it would be no more difficult for God to enlarge the throat of a whale than to "create all things." He says:

"The Bible withstood triumphantly the attacks of Voltaire and Hume, having done that those who believe in it and love it have nothing to fear from the small fry critics who cannot see how an Almighty power could prepare a fish to work his will. Upon the Bible as a sure foundation, rest every hospital, every church, every institution of charity in the land."

When the editor of a great daily writes in such a strain, we call it a blot on the intelligence of his city and age. He has been asleep ten times as long as Rip Van Winkle, and has not awakened.

That all hospitals and institutions of charity are founded by the church on the Bible, is constantly reported, yet is quite untrue. These institutions are, as they should be, with few exceptions, maintained by the government.

There is no question that an infinite God could enlarge a whale's throat, to allow a man to pass, and sustain that man three days in the fish's maw. He could furnish a whale's stomach into a Pullman sleeper, with a buffet and all modern improvements. The query is, Did he do so?

If such rot is popular in Baltimore, it shows a dormancy of intellect quite appalling. His conclusion is noteworthy: "If any reader of the Sun desire to witness a miracle inestimably greater and more marvelous than that of Jonah and the whale, let them arise early to-morrow morning, at 20 minutes before 5 o'clock, and look in the east."

If they should do as recommended, would they see a miracle?

On the contrary they would see the supreme activity and power of Law, which never swerves or deviates a hair's breadth for all the prayers and intercessions of man, or the interference of gods.

On the other hand we have a whale, said to be in a sea which whales never enter, and God specially stretching its throat that it may swallow Jonah, because the said Jonah has offended the Supreme Ruler of the Universe!

In the density of his ignorance this editor opposes Spiritualism. It would be premised that he would. Ignorance always opposes it.

"What Say the Scriptures About Spiritualism?"

A marvelous work would have been accomplished had there been established a spiritual publishing house, for the distribution of its literature, putting forth the efforts that characterize the "Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society." Especial effort of this society has been made against Spiritualism. Numerous tracts and pamphlets have been published and sown broadcast. The distribution has been so wide as to be something wonderful. These attacks have been from Bible grounds, severe, unscrupulous, dishonest and intensely bigoted.

The latest, bearing the title above, is a stronger and enlarged edition. Copies have been sent me from California, Washington, and Maine, showing that the book has been widely sown, and the harm it will do by its misrepresentations and falsehoods cannot be measured. It is difficult to meet such attacks. Those who read these screeds do not see the spiritual papers, and remain in ignorance that any reply has been made. The only way is by the same means—the sending out of literature showing what Spiritualism really is. If some Spiritualist should be moved to apply even a small fund in this direction, immeasurable good would be accomplished.

For Higher Education.

That latest gift of ten million dollars of Rockefeller for higher education, means a great deal to the smaller colleges which have been living at a dying rate. We confess that we fail to grasp the meaning of "higher education." The highest education we comprehend, is not that which stuffs the head with Greek idioms, or with the odd crumbs of scientific facts; that makes boat crews, football bullies, or athletes. Rather is it a full and complete development of character into ideal womanly and manly excellence. It is an education in which loving kindness, thoughtfulness for others, not only self-helpfulness, but helpfulness for those requiring aid. The highest education is a development of the spirit, and makes the curriculum of the schools secondary to its purpose.

We do not suppose the authorities will sneer at the money as "tainted." It may have been wrung from the sinews of toil, or represent concrete tears of want, yet it will bring good value if rightly employed.

There is, however, always something to be thankful for. We may be greatly thankful in this case that the Standard millionaire is a Protestant. We would be exceedingly glad if he were a Liberal or a Spiritualist, but as he is not, we rejoice that he is a Protestant and not a Catholic. If he were the latter, and had taken the fad to give vast amounts to sustain Catholic schools and other institutions, he would give an irresistible set to the popular current in that direction.

The possibility of such an occurrence is appalling. A vital blow might be thus struck at the freedom of this nation.

Priestly Advice.

A letter comes from a preacher, one Ogelvie, full of warning and advice. Such a letter could be expected of an orthodox minister, especially a fledgling. This preacher attempts to disprove Spiritualism by the Bible. He brings forward the stock matter of the "Witch of Endor," and says she was proven an impostor because when God sent Samuel "to put her to shame," she was "frightened nearly out of her wits." If the Bible is to be quoted as authority, it should be quoted correctly. Was the "Woman of Endor" frightened because Samuel appeared, or because as soon as she entered the clairvoyant state, she recognized Saul, whom she knew had been persecuting to the death all her kind? The answer will convict this minister of the gospel of purposely or ignorantly distorting the language of his Bible.

His Bible quotations are so prolix they are omitted, but his conclusions are brief:

"If man seeks to receive this intercourse in forbidden ways, we may fairly presume it is Satanic aid, and for the furtherance of Satan's purposes. There is no satisfactory evidence that men talk with the departed. The effect of such efforts is sinful, being contrary to scripture."

In conclusion he says, by way of consolation:

"Christ did (converse with spirits), and probably was comforted and strengthened thereby. We may if God furnishes like occasion. Otherwise we seek it at peril of our souls."

There is a gleam of truth. Certainly Christ conversed with spirits. The disciples were ministered unto. There is not a phase of modern mediumship not represented in the Bible. "God furnishes the occasion"—in the language of theology—to us, when our spirit friends come near and intensely desire to manifest their presence. The occasion is as urgent as when Moses and Elias appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration.

After this admission, argument of his long and dependent contention, appears as waste of time.

DR. BABBITT.

This Venerable Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

Edwin Dwight Babbitt, physician, scientist, philosopher and educator, was born in Hampden, N. Y., in 1828, and died at his home in Rochester, N. Y., Wednesday morning, June 18, 1905. His illness lasted over a month and was brought on by being struck down by an electric car.

His father was a Presbyterian clergyman, and Dr. Babbitt in early life contemplated the ministry, but his views becoming liberalized, he devoted his life largely to educational work, authorship and to scientific and philosophic study.

He was educated at Knox College, Ill., having previously attended school at Olean and Geneseo, N. Y.

He founded the Miami Commercial College at Dayton, Ill., in 1860, which has ever since been a most prosperous institution. He left that institution to publish a series of penmanship books, and to engage in the manufacture of steel pens which he introduced into London and Paris which are now known as the Spencerian steel pens.

He became interested in Spiritualism in 1865 and gave up all other lines of work to devote himself to its philosophy and promulgation, chiefly by means of his books and other publications.

His masterpiece, "The Principles of Light and Color," was partly the result of his own scientific studies, but also and largely a work of inspiration, nearly all the leading principles of the work having been given to him directly by the higher intelligences and through his own mediumship. This work alone is an imperishable monument to his memory and more lasting than brass or marble.

Among the other works which made his name famous among scholars and philanthropists are the following: "Health and Power," "Religion," "Human Culture and Cure," in five volumes.

Since 1878 Dr. Babbitt has devoted himself solely to the study of the spiritual philosophy and its applications to the human life and to teaching his system of the cure of diseases by "Light and Color," to his private pupils and through his books.

He married in 1858 Augusta Darling of Cincinnati, Ohio, by whom he had five children, two of whom died in infancy, and three of whom survive him. His first wife died in 1876, and in 1879 he married Mrs. Alden Clark, who survives him.

The funeral service was private, and conducted at his late residence on Oxford street, on Thursday afternoon, by Rev. Dr. Austin, assisted by Dr. Dickinson, a Baptist clergyman who was present. The body was taken to Dayton, Ohio, and buried in the family plot. A mighty man in our Israel has been taken from us. B. HURSEN.

Letter From San Jose, Cal.

The First Spiritual Union has enjoyed a pleasing program of lectures and question meetings the past month, by Rev. Allen Franklin Brown, state missionary.

A basket picnic and meeting was held at Alum Rock Park, June 25. Many gathered around the well ladened tables at noon. Hot coffee was served with the many good things from the baskets that were made even more relishable in the opening.

At 2 p. m., conference was called by our chairman, Mr. Jos. Murray. The subject, "Why I Am a Spiritualist," was made very interesting by all who responded. The day was perfect. All nature seemed to smile upon us as the birds blended their notes with the chorus. All were happy and joyful as they departed homeward, feeling benefited by the fresh air and pleasant visit with the many friends from both sides of life.

In the evening a meeting was held at Eagles' Hall, Mr. Brown giving a very able and interesting lecture on "Destiny," followed by psychometric readings, which were all acknowledged as correct. He will speak for the society the first two Sundays of July, and continue his question meetings that are becoming very popular with the people.

Mrs. Nettie Pease Fox will work for the Union the last three Sundays of July, and hold Friday meetings during the week. She has been in the spiritual field many years, and the people, with the interest of the First Spiritual Union at heart, recognize the blessing bestowed upon them by having her located in their city. She is a noble, willing and capable worker in this grand movement.

On July 13, a reception will be tendered Mrs. Fox and Rev. and Mrs. Brown, at the home of Mrs. Cora D. Ringlep, 230 N. Sixth street.

At a membership meeting held July 2, Mr. Brown was chosen pastor for the society during the month of August. As a missionary and organizer, he is unexcelled. While here his address will be 230 N. Sixth street.

Mosheim Told the Truth.

Mosheim, the learned German, in his Ecclesiastical History, whose scholarly work betrays his honesty on every page, thus wrote:

"The rites and institutions, by which the Greeks, Romans, and other nations had formerly testified their religious veneration for fictitious deities, were now adopted, with some slight alterations, by Christian bishops, and employed in the service of the true God * * * Hence it happened that in these times THE RELIGION OF THE GREEKS AND ROMANS DIFFERED VERY LITTLE IN ITS EXTERNAL APPEARANCE FROM THAT OF THE CHRISTIANS. They both had a most pompous and splendid ritual. Gorgeous robes, mitres, tiaras, wax tapers, crosiers [staffs surmounted by a cross], processions, lustrations, images, gold and silver vases, and many such circumstances of pageantry, were equally to be seen in the heathen temples and the Christian churches."

Chambers, in his Encyclopedia, stated a fact which all know who are familiar with the great author's productions. He says: The Ecclesiastical History of Mosheim: "Is a work of great learning, fullness and accuracy." Educated however in the church, and a professor in a theological college, as was Mosheim, possibly he did not suspect what thousands of learned men now know, that the Christian church, instead of stealing the ritual, ceremonies and institutions of paganism and engrafting them on Christianity, the latter was only reconstructed paganism. The scholarship of the last 50 to 75 years has revealed with certainty that which for centuries had been suspected and hinted at, and even proclaimed by leading churchmen. But such persons were soon silenced by imprisonment, torture, or the stake and fagot.

In conversation with a bigoted churchman a while ago, in which this revamping of paganism and construction of Christianity was under discussion, he said: "There are persons as learned as you who do not accept your ideas on that subject. There was Gladstone, who you will concede was a great scholar, who died an earnest Christian."

"True," we replied, "but the attention of the scholar you refer to and Gladstone, was not directed to this subject. Mr. Gladstone was a politician. His time and thought were turned to great national issues, and he had no time to investigate in the direction others equally honest and truthful have traveled. So soon as learned men in the church become acquainted with the facts, you pronounce them heretics, and set out to destroy their influence. You cannot burn them any longer, but you expel them from your church, and brand them with being renegades from the faith. But in spite of all your efforts the numbers who have investigated are increasing at a marvelous rate, and your church literature, when carefully examined supplies proof that cannot be controverted that your church beginning was in paganism."

The truth is, churches built on the ignorance of the ages cannot survive the light of modern intelligence, provided they still cling to their old-time narrow conceptions of a future life.

Three Churches Struck.

One of the strangest phases of the severe storm in Richmond, Va., is the fact that the three buildings that were struck by lightning were all churches. In addition to this, a Sunday-school picnic party at Westhampton Park, was almost frightened to death by the thunder and lightning. The houses of the wicked were let alone.

"Success, and How to Win It." A lecture and course of twenty-four success lessons by Dr. B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D. The titles of some of the lectures are as follows: Self Helps; Financial Success; Ideals; Economy; Planning; Attraction; Courtesy; Kindness and Tact; Angelic Help. Price 25 cts.

A Piteous Appeal to Christians.

It has been a common complaint against Christendom for a century that rum, the vices of civilization, and the missionary accompanied each other in all attempts to civilize the heathen. The consequence has been the almost entire extinction of the peoples brought under the influence of the cross. Africa for more than two centuries was made the hunting ground of the slave trader. Tribal wars were incited and the prisoners captured on either side were sold to the slave trader for a trifle, perhaps a jug of rum. These slaves thus captured were transported to the American colonies, to curse the new world. The pope at Rome, with authority from the Bible, legalized this traffic by an official bull, claiming to voice the will of God. The missionary with the Christian vices, was always an accompaniment of the slave trader.

The Spaniards found a better civilization in Peru and Central America than that they planted in its place. Las Cassas, with how much truth we will not undertake to write, says 40,000,000 of natives were massacred in this process of Christianizing the natives of the countries they colonized.

Look at the Indian tribes of North America! The task of the missionary has been successful here. Possibly they have peopled heaven, but in doing so they have almost annihilated the Indian race.

The Sandwich Islands came under the influence of the missionary, and the people were on the highway to extinction when their government was usurped by the white man.

Japan welcomed the arts and sciences which followed in the wake of the missionary; but they rejected his religion, and we see them successfully combatting the aggressions of a professedly Christian nation.

But turn we with tears in our eyes to "Africa's Appeal to Christendom," which we find in the Century Magazine, only brief extracts of which we can give at this time. It comes from Prince Massaquoi, of Vei territory, on the western coast of Africa. The little kingdom lies about 300 miles along the coast from Gallinas to Cape Mount, and is about 200 miles wide. The missionary, the slave trader, the rum traffic, and the nameless Christian vices have been very active in that country. The prince complains that foreign powers claim to own the country, but he thinks the country belongs to them. He says:

"A worse feature of European occupation, worse than losing the land, is the destruction of the people through the introduction of western vices. These vices are as degrading as the virtues taught are uplifting. These vices have been wholly introduced into Africa by European representatives. All who have traveled on our continent will bear me out in the assertion that there is a remarkable contrast morally between the natives of the coast and those of the interior. This is owing simply to the fact that the people on the coast have been demoralized by the vices of civilization from European sources. As an instance, in none of the various native dialects with which I am acquainted, about eighteen in number, are there any words with which to curse or swear. When one hears a profane word it is always in English, German, or other foreign language. Polygamy is practiced as much by Europeans located among us as by natives. * * * From actual calculation I find nearly one-half of all importations came in the form of liquor, of the very worst and most injurious king. It is common to find a man who is poor and not able to get sufficient liquor on which to get drunk, rubbing a drop on his head or mustache that people may smell it and call him civilized. The poison is fast doing its deadly work. In a few years there will be none left to resist the oppressors. Our blood will be on their heads.

"We appeal, not to England, not to France, not to Germany, not to other empires and states, but to the consciences of the individual men forming such nations. We appeal, not for a gift or favor, but for our right. Even as the Americans appealed for their rights and obtained them by heroic measures so do we claim the right for freedom to worship God, and to worship him by sobriety, industry, good will, and all the Christian graces."

A people recognized as heathen appealing in the most pathetic terms to be saved from Christian vices! It is positively mournful to contemplate the condition occupied by them. First, their country is depopulated by Christian slave-hunters. Then they are robbed by these same people of their land which gave them support. This is followed by introducing vices among them, under the guise of saving their souls from hell, which brutalize them and fit them for the degraded condition they occupy. But the soul-saving process will go on until the present remnant of a once populous country is christianized out of existence.

Looks Like a Priestly Device.

That legislator who makes laws and does not observe them himself we consider an improper representative in Congress, or in the state legislature, so we push him aside at the next election and select a more worthy person to make laws for us.

The Sovereign Ruler of the Universe, so very exalted, one would suppose, ought to be guilty of no infraction of the laws of his own making. We are told by churchmen he created all there is in the universe, and rested from his labors on the seventh day, and he required all mortality to rest on that day in consequence. Instead of continuing his rest on each seventh day thereafter, he does not cease his own labors, but continues to run the entire machinery of the world just as he did on his former working days. Not a planet is stopped in its course, but it rolls on just as glibly on Sunday as on any other day in the week. The sun sends forth its illuminating rays to all on that day. The thunders roll in the heavens, the lightnings flash, rain, snow or hail falls with no seeming respect for the law made for mortals. Beasts, birds and fowls don't heed the injunction. Vegetation takes no rest, but the leaves flutter in the wind, and the buds are just as liable to blossom on that day as the day after. But the good bible tells us for simply picking up sticks on the Sabbath the great God caused the man's death who offended. Maybe Moses lied when he said the Lord directed: "The man shall surely be put to death." See Numbers 15:32 to 36. We hope so. And maybe God had nothing to do with setting aside the Sabbath day for rest and worship. It looks more like a priestly device than the act of a God.

John Hay Famous as a Poet.

John Hay, late Secretary of State, was a most remarkable man, not only as a diplomat but as a keen, logical, incisive poet. His reputation in that respect is world-wide. "Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludsoe" are immortal. They set people to thinking. They convey an important lesson. "A Woman's Love" will also be read with appreciation.

LITTLE BREECHES.

I don't go much on religion,
I never ain't had no show;
But I've got a middlin' tight grip, sir,
On the handful o' things I know.
I don't pan out on the prophets,
And free-will and that sort of thing,
But I believe in God and the angels,
Ever sence one night last spring.

I come into town with some turnips,
And my little Gabe come along—
No 4-year-old in the country
Could beat him for pretty and strong,
Peart and chipper and sassy,
Always ready to swear and fight—
And I'd larnt him to chew terbacker,
Jest to keep his milk teeth white.

The snow come down like a blanket
As I passed by Taggart's store;
I went in for a jug of molasses
And left the team at the door.
They scared at something and started—
I heard one little squall,
And hell-to-split over the prairie
Went team, Little Breeches and all.

Hell-to-split over the prairie!
I was almost froze with skeer;
But we rousted up some torches,
And searched for 'em far and near.
At last we struck hosses and wagon,
Snowed under a soft white mound,
Upsot, dead beat—but of little Gabe
No hide nor hair was found.

And here all hope soured on me,
Of my fellow-critters' aid—
I jest flopped down on my marrow bones,
Crotch deep in the snow, and prayed.
By this the torches was played out,
And me and Isrul Parr
Went off for some wood to a sheepfold
That he said was somewhar thar.

We found it at last, and a little shed
Where they shut up the lambs at night.
We looked in, and seen them huddled thar,
So warm and sleepy and white.
And thar sat Little Breeches and chirped,
As peart as ever you see,
"I want a chaw of terbacker,
And that's what's the matter with me."

How did he get thar? Angels.
He could never have walked in that storm
They jest scooped down and toted him
To whar it was safe and warm.
And I think that saving a little child,
And bringing him to his own,
Is a derned sight better business
Than loafing around the throne.

JIM BLUDSOE.

Wall, no! I can't tell where he lives,
Because he don't live, you see;
Leastways, he's got out of the habit
Of livin' like you and me.
Whar have you been for the last three years,
That you haven't heard folks tell
How Jimmy Bludsoe passed in his checks,
The night of the "Prairie Belle"?

He warn't no saint—them engineers
Is all pretty much alike—
One wife in Natchez-under-the-Hill,
And another one here in Pike.
A careless man in talk was Jim,
And an awkward man in a row—
But he never pinked, and he never lied—
I reckon he never knowed how.

And this was all the religion he had—
To treat his engine well;
Never be passed on the river;
To mind the pilot's bell;
And if ever the "Prairie Belle" took fire,
A thousand times he swore
He'd hold her nozzle agin the bank
Till the last soul got ashore.

All boats has their day on the Mississipp'
And her day came at last—
The Movaster was a better boat,
But the Belle, she wouldn't be passed,
And so came a tearin' along that night,
The oldest craft on the line,
With a nigger squat on her safety valve,
And her furnaces crammed, rosin and pine.

The fire bust out as she cleared the bar.
And burst a hole in the night
And quick as a flash she turned and made
For that willer-bank on the right.
Ther' was runnin' and cursin', but Jim yelled out
Over all the infernal roar,
"I'll hold her nozzle agin the bank
Till the last galoot's ashore."

Thro' the hot black breath of the burnin' boat
Jim Bludsoe's voice was heard,
And they all had trust in his cussedness,
And knowed he would keep his word,
And sure's you're born, they all got off
Afore the smokestacks fell.
And Bludsoe's ghost went up alone
In the smoke of the "Prairie Belle."

He warn't no saint—but at judgment
I'd run my chances with Jim
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
That wouldn't shook hands with him.
He's seen his duty a dead sure thing,
And went fer it thar and then;
And Christ ain't a-going to be too hard
On a man that died for men.

A WOMAN'S LOVE.

A sentinel angel, sitting high in glory,
Heard this shrill wail ring out from purgatory:
"Have mercy, mighty angel, hear my story!

"I loved—and, blind with passionate love, I fell.
Love brought me down to death, and death to hell;
For God is just, and death for sin is well.

"I do not rage against His high decree,
Nor for myself do ask that grace shall be;
But for my love on earth, who mourns for me.

"Great Spirit! let me see my love again
And comfort him one hour, and I were fain
To pay a thousand years of fire and pain."

Then said the pitying angel, "Nay, repent
That wild vow! Look, the dial-finger's bent
Down to the last hour of thy punishment!"

But still she wailed, "I pray thee, let me go
I cannot rise to peace and leave him so.
O, let me soothe him in his bitter woe!"

The brazen gates ground sullenly ajar,
And upward, joyous, like a rising star,
She rose and vanished in the ether far.

But soon adown the dying sunset sailing,
And like a wounded bird her pinions trailing,
She fluttered back, with broken-hearted wailing.

She sobbed, "I found him by the summer sea
Reclined, his head upon a maiden's knee—
She curled his hair, and kissed him. Woe is me!"

She wept, "Now let my punishment begin!
I have been fond and foolish. Let me in
To expiate my sorrow and my sin."

The angel answered, "Nay, sad soul, go higher!
To be deceived in your true heart's desire
Was bitterer than a thousand years of fire!"

Women on School Boards.

Mayor Dunne of Chicago has appointed three women, Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Emmons Blaine and Dr. Cornelia DeBey, to the Chicago school board. Commenting on this appointment the "Public" remarks:

"Mayor Dunne has extended the recognition which has heretofore been but grudgingly given to women in the government of the schools. We are preached at with wearisome iteration to convince us that the place for woman is the home; and we might easily agree to this if the preachers' conception of home were somewhat more comprehensive than the idea of wash tubs for poor women and afternoon teas for rich ones. But all this pious talk about home as woman's sphere is twaddle, if the school is not included in the home idea. Yet the appointment of women to the Chicago School Board has heretofore been regarded as in the nature of a certain masculine condescension. Mayor Dunne exhibits a different spirit. He has recognized woman's true place in the home by considering the public school system as a a department of the home, and conferring approximately half of his school board appointments upon women entirely capable of dealing with it."

Grossly False.

I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the third and fourth generation."—Exodus, 20: 5.

Jealous is defined as "Apprehensive or suspicious of being displaced or outdone by another, especially in the love of another; revengeful of fickle treatment or slighted love." That may have been Moses' concept of God, but who believes God himself admitted to Moses he possessed such a character? It is a gross misrepresentation of the character of the Divine being, and, Bible or no Bible, it should be repudiated by every person of common intelligence as blasphemous. Why will churchmen, who profess to love God, persist in claiming Moses voiced his will? And why treat as "holy" a book that repeats and perpetuates such a vile libel against him we are taught to and justly adore?

MONOGAMIC MARRIAGE

As Viewed by Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

Mr. and Mrs Frank Hamilton, of this city, entertained Friday afternoon and evening at the Bon Air hotel, Rock City, more than 250 guests being present to enjoy the reception, dinner and dancing.

Special cars conveyed many of the guests from Bradford, Pa., to the Rocks at 2 o'clock, and others went at a later hour.

A notable and interesting feature of the afternoon program was a lecture by Professor W. M. Lockwood, of Chicago, on "Monogamic Marriage." It is keeping within safe bounds to say that the lecture was one of the strongest and most intensely interesting intellectual productions that has ever been presented in this section. Professor Lockwood treated the absorbing problem in sociology from a physiological and psychological standpoint and the subtlety of his thought, the keenness of his analysis, and the beauty of his language invested the subject with a peculiar charm. The speaker announced a new hope for the world through the establishing of the married relation upon a scientific basis. True marriage is founded upon intellectual love; but the speaker defined intellectual love as appreciation based upon true knowledge acquired through the agency of all the psychological perceptions of the soul. True marriage is a complete union, and such unions are monogamic. Rightly understood, love is not an affair of the fancy, but is born of knowledge and is eternal. Marriage is the unification of two natures, of which one is the complement and fulfillment of the other according to the law of selection.

The speaker did not expressly state that the affections are manifestations of the soul's reaction upon complete intellectual appreciation of the truth, but there was nothing in his remarks inconsistent with that inference.

The speaker, in the development of his theme, raised the marriage relations to a very high plane, and the lecture abounded in helpful thoughts and practical suggestions. It was admittedly a mere outline of a scientific system, but it made a profound impression upon the auditors.

After the lecture a fine course dinner was served in the spacious dining room, covers being laid for 208. Each guest was presented with a menu card and dance program and floral favor.

The affair from first to last was a brilliant social success. In point of attendance and amplitude of hospitality it was undoubtedly the most elaborate private reception ever given at Rock City, while the interpolation of the lecture by a distinguished scholar and orator was a happy innovation.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton proved themselves princely entertainers, and their personal attentions to their guests left nothing to be desired.—Bradford (Pa.) Paper.

Dr. E. D. Babbitt's Transition.

Dr. Edwin Dwight Babbitt passed to the higher life, June 27, in his 77th year of earth life. Some time ago he was struck by a trolley car, and was seriously, but it was thought not fatally injured. A dropsical condition set in and the end came.

Dr. Babbitt has been a busy and a very useful man, and humanity has lost the presence of a friend, but through the various scientific, occult and ethical works he has published, his name has been immortalized, and the grandeur of his teachings will be more highly appreciated as humanity unfolds to a full understanding of their depth and spiritual import.

He was an avowed Spiritualist, and as a sensitive was greatly aided in his lofty aims and useful undertakings by those "finer forces" upon which he founded a college.

IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the whole civilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

Psychic Circle

Every Friday Evening, From 9 to 10, Local Time—That is, by the time of the place in which you live—Dr. Alexander Caird and Wife, and Lynn Spiritualists Association Center.

Morning Prayer, by Robt. L. Stevenson.

The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep.

Will You Join It?

Through the suggestions of the spirit guides of Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Caird, and in gratitude for the inestimable benefit these resourceful workers have been to the L. S. A. and a desire that others may be brought under the same helpful influences, this circle has been formed.

Objects of Circle.

Soul study and the development of your psychic sense and of your highest and best natures.

Please sit in silence as far as it is possible for at least twenty minutes within the specified hour. If unable to sit alone concentrate your mind and thoughts on the objects and work of the circle.

Rules for Circle.

First—send a loving and heartfelt greeting to all members of the circle.

Second—Search your souls to learn if you have lived your very highest since the last circle. Have I been kind, patient and helpful to all with whom I have come in contact?

Third—Ask your spirit friends and the circle guides to draw near and assist you in the development of your highest soul powers and your mediumistic gifts.

Fourth—Send out a helpful thought to all speakers, mediums and workers; and to the press, that the divine plan may be more generally applied.

THE SUGGESTIONS AND DIRECTIONS FOR THIS CIRCLE CAME FROM WISE AND CLEAR-SIGHTED MINDS ON THE SPIRIT SIDE OF LIFE. THE GREAT POSSIBILITIES OF A CIRCLE, IN WHICH THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE AT THE SAME TIME, CONCENTRATE THEIR MINDS ON THE SAME OBJECTS, MUST BE OBVIOUS TO ALL.

If we believe in the potency of thought, we can but believe that such a thought wave permeating the psychic lives of so many in different parts of the world must be productive of spiritual good.

The object of this movement is not for the advancement of the cause in any one place, or with any particular people, nor solely for the good of the members alone, but for the workers, the press, the spirit friends, and the upbuilding of the cause in general. We believe that much good will be accomplished; that those possessing the gift of mediumship will receive help and spiritual strength by placing themselves in the psychic wave engendered by this means. We hope every reader of this will send their name and those of their friends, no matter whether you are a Spiritualist or not, join us, add the power of your thought to ours and receive a blessing with us.

Please remember that this circle is absolutely free to everyone, and we are glad to welcome you as a member without conditions, but there are necessarily some expenses (as printing and answering the many letters of inquiry received) and if any one feels to contribute a small sum toward the same, it will be very welcome.

Brother Francis has kindly offered the use of the columns of The Progressive Thinker for the advancement of this object, and articles will appear from time to time concerning its progress. We hope all members that can do so, will become subscribers to this grand publication, and so keep in touch with the work of the circle.

We also hope that all members will try and induce others to join; we wish to have 5,000 members before the close of the year.

You are cordially invited to join this circle.

All matter pertaining to the circle will be published in The Progressive Thinker.

Send your name and address and be enrolled on the circle book free of cost. The cost of a postal card will make you a life member.

Please pass this card to some friend; make it an endless chain. Send name to Explanatory Letter From Dr. Alex. Caird.

To the Members of the Psychic Circle:—I would like to correct a misunderstanding in regard to the Psychic Circle. Many of our correspondents seem to think that no one can become a member unless they are a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. We certainly wish that every member might (for their own good) receive the benefit to be derived from reading the grandest spiritual paper published, and so keep in touch with the spiritual happenings, and learn the views and opinions of the different writers on the large variety of subjects treated, but we realize that there are many who would like to become members of the circle who are not able to subscribe for the paper, much as they might like to. Such are just as welcome; there are no conditions. We wish Brother Francis could read some of the many letters we have received extolling his paper; he would certainly feel that his efforts for the world's betterment were appreciated.

A word as regards the difference in time. As our circle extends, not only all over our own country, but to Africa, India, Europe, Australia and New Zealand, one can readily see that if we tried to sit at nine o'clock by one time, some part of our circle would be observing the rules every hour in the twenty-four. If we all sit at nine o'clock, local time, the thought wave will start at the Atlantic, extend across the continent and around the world.

If any member wishes the circle to concentrate their wishes on any subject of general interest, will they kindly send the request to The Progressive Thinker? We have no way to inform the large circle, but everybody reads The Progressive Thinker. We would also request the circle members to repeat the following prayer, by Robert L. Stevenson, upon arising in the morning. "The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep."

ALEX. CAIRD, M. D.
44 Commercial street, West Lynn, Mass.

I am a member of The Psychic Circle advertised in your paper and want to express my thankfulness that it has been started. I have already received much spiritual help from it. Long may it continue. CHARLES GOULD.
Hampden, Me.

Will the members of The Psychic Circle kindly concentrate their minds on Mrs. J. B. Roberts, of Tacoma, that she may obtain some relief from the intense suffering that is her portion at the present time. Yours in the interest of humanity. CAPT. JONAS BALCOLM.
Tacoma, Wash.

I am deeply interested in The Psychic Circle started by Dr. Caird, of Lynn. I would like to request the members of the Circle to concentrate their thoughts on the legal powers to not only reprieve Mrs. Rogers, of Vermont, but commute her punishment toa life sentence instead, for we do not believe her spirit is in a condition to be thrust into the spirit world. J. N. NASON.

Michigan State Society of Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—In my report of the late Sturgis June meeting, I wrote a paragraph on a narrow strip of paper and pinned it to the report in the place where it ought to have appeared, but I presume it was lost when the pin was taken out. I feel it my duty to the state society to mention this and give the paragraph here. It was as follows:

"Dr. Julia M. Walton, missionary of the Michigan State Society, lectured; her subject was "The Soul." She quoted many ancient philosophers and sages to prove that the ancients knew, in all probability, as much about the soul as we do now. Her address was excellent; she gave tests at its conclusion which were accepted as correct by the persons for whom they were intended. The state society is congratulated on its missionary."

This paragraph has appeared in my home report to the Michigan Democrat.

WAS AN OCCULTIST.

The Late Mrs. Stockdale Was Interested in Spiritualism.

Flint, June 29.—That Mrs. Mary Stockdale, the wealthy Flint woman who bequeathed all her property to Detroit and Buffalo charities, was something of an occultist during her declining years of her life was evidenced by the testimony in the case to-day. One of the witnesses sworn was Paul Countryman, aged 72, who said that he was a Spiritualist and as a friend of Mrs. Stockdale, knew she was deeply interested in Spiritualism for some time prior to her death, as she had attended seances held at his house.

Mrs. Sarah Funcheon, aged 72, a Spiritualistic medium, testified to having had a conversation with Mrs. Stockdale in August, 1901, in which the latter told her that she had made more than one will.—Grand Rapids Press.

The Present Economic Conditions In the Light of the Soul Teachings.

Delivered through the Lips of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, Sunday, May 14, 1905.

Ever since man and woman were condemned to earn their daily bread by the "sweat of the brow" there has been an effort on the part of the human race to evade and avoid the penalty, i. e., not to toil.

The effort not to toil has its origin in two human motives: One is laziness or indolence, and the other is love of power over others. Of course both of these are very imperfect conditions of human life. But every adage in Scripture and philosophy, two-thirds of the proverbs of Solomon, all things that serve as moral, or at least social precepts to mankind, everything that society insists upon, have a tendency to foster industry and thrift, and the earning of one's daily bread by daily toil in some direction; with the hands if necessary, with machinery if that will suffice and, therefore, with the brain—notwithstanding all this, whatever can reduce the maximum of human labor is regarded as beneficial. Yet there are periods of reaction, when hand labor is considered more artistic and better than machine labor. There are certain esthetic tastes that are cultivated by the wealthy wherein the greater the amount of labor bestowed upon a thing by individual workers the more it is valued. The present time is prolific of the making of expensive articles of apparel by hand instead of by machinery, the making of furniture by hand instead of by machinery. The artist values the painting, the statue or whatever is the work of the individual creator. It loses its artistic value if it is machine made. However perfect the automatic music, although carried to a high degree of perfection by modern devices, it loses the individual quality of the master performer. Therefore, machine labor stultifies itself. That which is ground out, apparently to save human toil, becomes less valuable than the things that are fashioned by especial personal endeavor. Whether a thing is better or worse depends, of course, upon the standpoint of the one viewing it, upon his point of judgment and upon the perfection of the workmanship.

Idleness is enforced as a punishment, or penalty for crime. There is nothing worse than the hades of enforced idleness. Then it is not the work that is objectionable. Work is to do the thing that is needed to be done willingly, and for its ministration, lovingly. Toil is to labor because one must, because one is driven to it by circumstances, conditions, or other states of human life. Therefore, it is toil that people seek to avoid, not work. People that are supposed to be in the leisure class work harder than any other class; but they work in ways they choose for themselves; apparently they work in pursuit of what they call pleasure, or, at least, the following of what they conceive to be the highest aim of existence. While the bodies grow weary, unless one is over indulgent and satiety steps in, it does not tire them or weary them like the labor that is grinding, that is in a treadmill, that must be done every day, so many days in the year, so many hours in the day for some one else.

Many people suppose that the economic propositions are to be grappled with and settled separately, all by themselves. They suppose that the conditions industrially and economically make up the social state, either oppressively or otherwise. When Sir Thomas Buckle said that "the number of marriages depended upon the price of food," it was supposed to be the key to the sociological problems. But it is not. Only the most superficial observer, or the one who is intent upon pursuing a certain line of sociological inquiry can regard economics as the central question. There are periods that mark distinct steps in the world's progress, so there are times when the industrial questions culminate. But very one, of any degree of thought, must know, that these conditions are the results, not the causes; that they are the results of certain preceding conditions.

If we trace the history of human labor we will find that the physical supremacy of individuals and of certain nations through certain kinds of leadership brings about subjugation of other people. Now it seems that the time has passed in the history of the world when conquered nations are made the slaves, the burden bearers of the conquerors. Egypt, Rome, all those nations that reached a high state of civilization over one another, nevertheless, made slaves of their subjugated nations, even if the subjugated nations had been previously as far advanced in civilization as themselves. The pictures of conquered kings walking in chains through the streets of imperial Rome; the pictures of conquered queens walking through the streets in chains, as only slaves of their conquerers, you are familiar with.

Those who are acquainted with history will understand that many times the "hewers of wood, the drawers of water" and the diggers of trenches were conquered subjects; there were gradations of slavery it is true. The laboring man of Egypt had not only no right to his body, to his labor, but no soul. Whoever came under the dominion of the Pharaohs for the time being must be a slave. There is no doubt that the Israelites in their captivity were slaves as you are aware; there is no doubt that all the Oriental nations at one time or another were slaves under the subjecting power of the conquerors.

When you consider that enforced toil, and chattel slavery and serfdom are not so far removed from modern civilization but what you can perceive that something resembling chattel slavery still exists in many parts of the world, even where enlightenment is supposed to prevail. A portion only of the serfs of Russia have been set free. Peonage is tolerated, either surreptitiously or openly; and is it not a fact that coolie labor has been imported to take the place of chattel slavery in this country? When you consider this it is not surprising that the masses of the people have not yet the right perception of the individual or personal value of a pair of hands that can work; and it is not surprising that those who obtain power, either as kings, emperors, or dominating powers by the results of wealth, should fail to appreciate the fact that great renovation of the world is going on toward the recognition of each personal life.

Whatever Oriental religions may have taught before Buddha, he is the first one that is recorded as the leveler of castes. He made every human being equally valuable in the sight of the Infinite Good. You cannot say this of the Mosaic law, of the Mosaic Dispensation. You can say it of the true spirit of Christianity. But the spirit of Christianity and its modern application run along different lines. There is not a Christian nation on this earth but has been or is a slave-holding nation.

In the time of chattel slavery the bodies and the consciences of the negroes were not theirs. Their religious exercises were private and secret. They held meetings and offerings of prayers, oftentimes, unknown to their masters. It was at one time an offense for the negroes to hold religious meetings because of course, being owned they had no souls to save. If, however, they persisted in having religion, they were told that to obey their masters constituted the essential part of the religion.

Now, if you will look at the demonstrations in Russia when an hundred thousand peaceable citizens went up to petition to the Czar for their rights and to protest against certain objectionable restrictions, you will understand that the spirit moving upon the individual and personal lives of Russia is far in advance of what it was a half century ago. And the liberation of a portion of the serfs by one of the late Czars brought about a consciousness of the value of the person the moment that ediet went forth. But a nation that can produce a Tolstoi contains a prophecy for every person in that nation; and there are few so weak or ignorant but what they know it. They know it to-day when they did not know it twenty years ago; they know it now when it was not dreamed of forty years ago. It is because of the advancement of the personality that this hope dawns upon Russia.

When you regard that—barring chattel slavery and those who were held in chattel slavery—at the foundation of this government there was no discrimination made between persons. Of course one-half of creation has always been left out, that is the women; but even they have refused to accept that position, of being unrecognized. With the advancement of the personality of men the whole of womanhood has advanced. The fact that there was no bond, no free, no king, no subjects, that presumably every citizen of the United States had equal rights and equal opportunities, according to the ability to labor, to liberty; life and the pursuit of happiness, constituted an epoch.

That there has been a recession from that standard is not to be wondered at, since a few dozen, or a few hundred, or a few thousand people can be at a height that millions may not have attained. But the human race has not grown to consider that the moral proposition or the spiritual proposition is first. The "seeking first the kingdom of God and its righteousness and all these things will be added unto you" is not yet a general human attainment. That is, there is not any very large numbers of people who recognize that each person is just as valuable in the sight of God as every other person.

As a theory this is true, but, of course, many say "it is not practical"; and why? We must strike at the root of the difficulty: If souls are not equal, and that is Calvinism, and for Calvinism how could there be a republic anywhere? For as your Puritan Fathers believed some souls would be saved, a very few, and all the rest lost, how could there be an equal thought for all people in the direction of government? If it is true that the kingdom of heaven is only for the few, and the other place for the many, and by divine processes the few obtain that kingdom of heaven, is it not legitimate to suppose that this earth also belongs to the few?

The Jews believe that the few will inherit the earth; that the kingdom of heaven has not yet come, but that the "New Jerusalem" will come. Of course the more liberal Jews believe that this is a condition, that it does not apply merely to the Jews. The orthodox Jew believes it to-day.

There can be no universal liberty when the thought is that even heaven is exclusive. It is perfectly consistent with the tenets of the Christian church that Mr. Rockefeller should want to own the earth; because he believes in the exclusive kingdom of heaven. It is the legitimate sequence. It is that kind of religion gone to seed; it is flowering out of Calvinism, and the flowering out of that heaven that excludes those who do not accept the words as taught by theological tenets. Of course, the possession of the things in this world, reasonably according to that idea, should belong to those that are the "chosen of God."

The Jews believed formerly that the Children of Israel were the chosen people of God and that they would inherit the earth. So the Czar of all the Russias, hereditarily, must believe that he is the chosen of God, (the God of the Greek church), as the head of all his people, and that they must do as he says. As the Church of Rome has taught that every blessing must come to humanity through that accepted channel and, in fact the moral results of a partial heaven and a partial Deity must be a partial human state. But if we accept the Sermon on the Mount, the ministrations of Jesus, the Beatitudes, we then know what the true spirit of the Christ teaching is. But the failure of mankind to interpret it aright is because of the lack of growth; because selfishness has not yet been overcome.

A big boy can whip a little one, a big nation can usually conquer a little one, a great financial power can swallow up a lesser financial power. It is a part of the system. How many human beings are there upon the earth to-day who consider that every child of earth is just as large a child of God as those who are called the ablest and largest? How many are there who feel that every human being has just as good right to the air and the sunshine and the opportunies of the earth as they have? If they are indolent and do not avail themselves of it, of course, that is a different question, and they are unfortunate; but having the opportunity is one thing and not being able to, or unwilling to avail themselves of it, is quite another. With the advancement of machinery, with the great increase in the demand for every commodity there is still in every crowded street in every large city and all over the earth a very large percentage of the human race that cannot find anything to do.

The condition of society that creates the greater demand and the greater supply should, when well balanced, create greater opportunity for all. When you read in the papers that any man who wishes to can find employment, you know it is not so. Let there be an advertisement for any kind of a position and there will be hundreds or a thousand applicants for the one position. The daily bread must come from somewhere. The farmers lack the essential hands to till the soil; the fruit orchards and vineyards of California have gone to waste because there is no one to gather the harvest. But why not? Not because men could not be found in abundance; not because women too, for that matter, could not be found in abundance, but because the markets for the produce cannot be reached without paying ruinous tribute to the common carriers. How is the western farmer to induce men to give their toil to him when he has to burn his corn for fuel because it does not bring the price of transportation? The economic problem, therefore, is not solved when individuals and syndicates press forward into the wilderness and out upon the plains to build railroads to ever lay an embargo on every man's toil and every man's land. When all the railroads combine, the consumer and the producer are at the mercy of the transportation companies.

These are the great problems then. People talk about this thing being very dreadful, and that they should be careful of private ownership and of protecting the utilities of life. In the early days of this country, perhaps you remember, those of you who lived away in some backwoods and had to drive over the roads, that every mile or so you had to pay toll. The highways were sometimes built by individuals, sometimes by the states, and small municipal corporations. Then the great hue and cry went up for "free roads." Does not that mean railroads? Does not that mean all methods of transportation? You are to settle it. We, who travel on the wings of thought, we who know no time and space, we only have to earn our "daily bread" which is the food of the spirit, by goodly deeds and loving words, offer to you as a proposition: If there should be free public highways, is not every way traveled by the public a public highway?

Now you are entering upon a condition where combined capital sees the value of combination, and combined labor sees the value of combination. The individual was worshiped a century ago in this country Personal freedom was what men were looking for, the right to worship God and to pursue daily life and earn the daily bread without imperial, kingly or other dictatorship. Voluntary combinations have been found more profitable among the capitalists than individual competition; voluntary combinations have been found more valuable in the protection of labor than individual contractors. Now the next great question is: shall these two be at war, or will it be found that universal combinations of capital and labor are better for the human race? That is the question that confronts you.

Right here in Chicago to-day employers are only so relatively; employes are only so relatively. Your hand and thoughts and bodies are the servants of the intelligent and moral forces of life, if you will have it so. But if we are compelled to pit the millions of dollars accumulated in a few hands against the toil of the many, we would take the latter alternative; Men are more valuable than dollars; the dollar is but the instrument of utility. The insensate corporation has no soul; as a corporation it is simply a legal thing. Therefore, to-day, if we were in Russia we would take the side of the men and women that went to plead with the Czar. Here in Chicago the czar is wealth, and we take the side of the people.

We do not believe in violence; we do not believe in bloodshed, but an armed policeman who intends to shoot is no more sacred than an armed striker. The armed negro who is brought here to shoot your workmen is not sacred. The power of violence, whether on the side of the state or the side of the people is not the right power. The question is not whether these employers have a right to deliver goods, but down deep behind that, had they the right to break their promises with the men whom they have obliged to fulfill their contracts? The under-current is not what appears on the surface, on the streets today; that is but the result. But will the United States troops or the state troops settle the problem of how this question is to be met? If you have anything to do with a railroad corporation (that relates to all the syndicates) the directors have an especial meeting and you have a hearing. If you have anything to do with labor that effects the whole of the workmen they have an especial meeting and the question is met.

Now the people have a right to demand that the streets shall not be obstructed by the strikers, and that they shall not be obstructed by the strike breakers. This question should be settled in the way that modern civilization has pointed out. There is only one way; it is not by troops, it is not by the police force, it is not by deputy sheriffs, it is not by injunction; it is by the moral force of the people insisting upon ARBITRATION. There is no difficulty that people can enter into but what the people who are disinterested can help to solve. You insist upon the murderer having a trial by jury. You presume by a jury that is impartial, because you can insist upon it, but you do not know that they are, but nominally every opportunity is given the murderer for the saving of his life. If it were insisted upon that an impartial tribunal, a court of arbitration should settle these questions—and it could be impartial—there certainly would be a vast stride from the nineteenth century. And the steps in civilization that have been taken by Australia and New Zealand—perhaps the highest advancement so far—would also be incorporated and introduced here.

When the capitalist says, "there is nothing to arbitrate," he means that from his standpoint there is nothing to arbitrate. We have yet to learn that any refusal has been on the part of the unionist or laborer to arbitrate. The one who is willing to submit his case to an impartial tribunal has certainly the balance in his favor.

Now the question is before you, that if these workmen are conquered now, if there should be intimidation, or if, notwithstanding the protest of the mayor and citizens, the United States or state troops are sent here, will that settle the question? This and another answer is resting upon you, the great questions concerning the highways is to decide whether the voice of the people is free from financial and other arbitrary pressure so as to leave it to a fair and impartial hearing.

The trouble is not where you think it is. Most of the people who earn their daily bread just as surely as those who toil with their hands have an insane idea that they are not working people; have an insane idea that their interests are with the capitalist. Since when have the capitalists refused to discharge, even their most reliable agents if others were found who could serve their interests better? Since when are clerks or any in subordinate positions in large establishments retained merely as a personal favor? There are instances it is true, where personal regard is shown, but the great system is centered on the point of personal interest to the employer.

Now if one has a larger interest, if there is anything beyond personal interests; if there is anything in the spirit, in humanity, in the public mind that is greater than the almighty dollar, he makes all the money that he can through syndicates and through speculation and then gives it to charitable institutions. But Jane Addams works in the slums. Undoubtedly she has her "daily bread," but she also has the Bread of Life. Miss Willard worked for everyone; undoubtedly she had her "daily bread," but she also had that larger sustenance of working for others. The whole question is: not what is for your interests as a capitalist, even your personal interests as a laborer, but what is for the interest of the people?

Since capital cannot move a wheel, run an engine, build a railroad or do anything without the hand of labor and the man behind, it is the human being we must consider and not the bank, not the syndicate, as a question of capital, but the human beings as portions of this great life and work. Now the value is to be determined within the next few years; whether humanity is greater than selfish interest; whether we have reached a point in the world's history when the teachings of Buddha Gautama and the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth can be applied to daily life. Whether the world has had enough of strivings and contentions and bloodshed for the mere maintenance of the name of physical power. Whether that which is miscalled "patriotism" that urges the Russian soldier to leave his family and home and to go out to battle for the purpose of extending the empire of Russia shall be called "patriotism?" Whether that which seeks to conquer all the weak nations in the world for the purpose of augmenting its territory shall be called "patriotism?" Whether that which enables a man, because of his genius and ability, who can win all the wealth in the world to the exclusion of those who are struggling along similar lines shall be called "legitimate business." Whether the Vikings that came sailing down from the north for gold shall be considered great and correct, irrespective of true commerce upon the high seas? Whether the pirates that have been relegated to the domain of darkness by advancing commerce and civilization shall be supplanted by modern commercial pirates? Whether there shall be in the thoughts and minds of the human race this idea: that the race of giants has disappeared, that the race of pirates has disappeared? The highway robbers, who came out from the fastnesses of the mountains and robbed the unsuspecting travelers have been relegated to a few remote regions. But have I a right because I have intellectually gained control of all the money power in the world to use it oppressively to my fellowman? For the intellectual giant, the monetary giant and the Vikings of old are similar in their expression. There is a tradition that the souls of the Vikings are bound to those icy barques that come floating down from the northern seas. In those frozen ships they are condemned to sail for eons of time because of their wrongs against humanity. Those wrongs were as the smallest part of a fragment compared to the wrongs of the vikings in your midst, compared to the bandits who, under the protection because within the limit of the law, prey upon the people. What ships of ice, what frozen regions of the spirit, what weird and terrible states will they find when out of the gateway of their own souls and of the immortal world they seek to find the passage way that is barred by their lack of humanity?

Friends, the economic question is the important question today. The great industrial problem is the imminent problem to solve. The President cannot solve it; the governor of the state cannot solve it; the mayor of the city cannot; even the chief of the police cannot solve it. You, and by you we mean the entire inhabitants of this city and this nation, have the opportunity of solving it. It is a moral question; it is a question of deepest humanity; it is a question that relates to the spirit; it is that which belongs to the next great stride in civilization. Its battle-field is not in any nation, it is between the Titans of commerce and those merciful deities that hold charge over the lives and souls of earth.

Now this voice of the spirit summons you, not to solve this question from your small personal interest of salary, not from your small personal interest in the value of your stocks, but from the larger interest of that which "ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

Ministers in the Christian churches have said that the people want peace; they do not want bloodshed; they do not want rioting. That is true; they do want peace, but they do not want peace through smothering the mouth of the volcano; they do not want it in the region of the earthquakes; they want it on the high plateau of a broader, deeper and wider humanity.

Are you ready? If it came to the matter of principle, whether you should worship in this little room every Sunday or give up your religion—or perhaps your daily bread—are you ready to give up your religion or your daily bread? Is truth stronger to you than any other present inducement of physical life? If it is not, then you are not ready. And over and over the mills of the gods will grind and grind, and another will take the place of the Czar; half a dozen more men will take the places of those now in the syndicates of the world. You will tread the same treadmills while the fields are longing for hands to cultivate them, and Nature beckons to you to come home, to be one with her, and earn your daily bread where there is no striving, no external display, only nature and the life of her many happy children there.

Oh! when, heart-sick and weary and broken in spirit, the man of the world goes back to the old home. stead roof after all his strivings and all his millions, he is not able to purchase the smallest measure of the happiness which was his. He would give all if he could lay his head upon the bosom of mother nature among the daisies under the waving branches of the trees and rest and sleep as when a child! So the restless nations of the earth that have seared the consciences and tortured the brains with the seeking for position and power will all one day go back to the bosom of the mother, and like the spoiled child will say: "Mother, I have sinned against thee, but I come back now to ask your blessing." And the great, Infinite Mother, the heart of love, and the great Infinite Father, the heart of wisdom, beckon the children of earth, when weary with all this wandering, when their hands and hearts and brains are tired of all this striving, to come back to this Infinite altar of love with their added experience and their sorrows, and understand that there is no sorrow in the world, no struggle for which there has not been a wise provision when the lesson is learned. The infinite Love is always there with its divine benefaction.

"THE BLUE AND THE GRAY." "HOPE."

Spoken Through the Lips of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, May 27, 1905.

(Impromptu poem, the subjects being given by members of the audience.)

Along the ramparts of the skies
When the sun shall rise on that one day,
And you behold, with loving eyes,
The streaks of Blue and the tints of Gray,

You will say: How well they mingle in love
In that upper light in the morning dawn;
How well it is, that in heaven above,
As the sun lights up the wondrous lawn
Of Earth, there is no other way
Than the mingling of the Blue and the Gray.

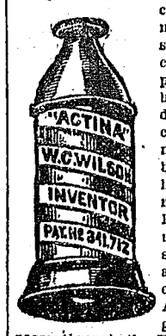
Here on the earth men do what they,
For duty, think is right and best,
And think because if they give away
Their human life and human quest,
They do it for their country's sake,
That she will better glory make.

But if each one bears within his heart
A sacred purpose, who shall say,
That in heaven they must stand apart,
And be known distinctly as "Blue" and "Gray"?

We honor ever the nation's flag;
We prize the patriots of all time,
The courage of the soldiers who never lag.
Oh! we know! there in that higher clime,
Is a bond that will not pass away:
They are crowned together, the Blue and the Gray.

When Abraham Lincoln knew that the war
Was over, and peace once more was here,
When his spirit rose unto that height, as a star,
He did not take to that heavenly sphere
Any hatred for those who had erred that day:
He blest and welcomed the Blue and the Gray.

And now as Hope lights, like a star,
The warring nations of the earth,
And you behold from near and far,
New struggles and impulses have birth,



Can you not walk forth in that spirit to-day,
Feeling the contention and striving that is here,
But casting hatred and scorning away,
Pitying those in sorrow and fear,
And in your heart of hearts still say:
I bless them, too, "the Blue and the Gray"?

For hope lights up the life with light,
And above all colors, that are broken here
In the shattered shards and fragments of sight,
Is that which is still more pure and dear:
That Hope, with white banners, is floating alway
Above the red and green and the Blue and Gray.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "I make bold to say there is no field for human investigation half so promising as this, none which should so appeal to educated, intelligent, philanthropic men to support and endow. Anyone who walks with his eyes open, ready to hear what men have to tell, will find stories pouring in upon him from men whom he cannot mistrust as liars and whom he knows to be sane and sensible, which will stagger him."

Cheerful news comes from St. Louis. During an operation in the city hospital on Peter Eldam, who had shot himself, the patient's heart ceased to beat for so long a time that two of the attending physicians pronounced him dead and left the room. A third physician remained, however, and by injecting salt into Eldam's veins set his heart to beating again and restored him to consciousness.

B. S. WATSON WRITES FROM DENVER, COLO.: "THE PREMIUM BOOKS YOU KINDLY SENT CAME SAFELY TO HAND. THEY ARE ALL MY FANCY PAINTED THEM, LOVELY AND DIVINE; BUT I DO NOT UNDERSTAND HOW YOU CAN GIVE SO MUCH FOR SO LITTLE MONEY. MAY YOUR LIFE BE LONG AND PROSPEROUS TO PROMULGATE THE GRAND TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM."

Goldwin Smith says: "We are told that the origin of life has at last been discovered. This, if it is true, might seem to make the case in favor of Materialism complete. But is it the origin of life that has been discovered or only the beginning of life on this planet? That sooner or later the beginning of life on this planet would be discovered by science was almost certain. But the beginning of life on this planet is not its origin. Something there must apparently have been in that particular particle in which life commenced distinguishing it from other particles and from matter in general. If the source of this has been found, the origin of life has been discovered; otherwise what has been discovered is not the source, but only the beginning. The proof of physical evolution is heartily accepted. But, as at present advised, we challenge the assumption that physical development out of a germ plasm is the beginning and end of all."

On account of sickness Miss Laura Mattock of Owosso, has resigned her position as Secretary of the Grand Ledge Camp, and Miss Rena Chapman will do the work of Secretary for the camp this year.

Taking as its text a "revival" which occurred in Belfast in 1859, the Hospital calls attention to the fact that Archdeacon Stopford had the discernment to perceive the hysteria produced and the courage to preach a warning. "He traced some of the attacks of hysteria to the abuse of certain pulpit arts, to the reiteration of hell! hell! hell! and to the consequent accumulation among the congregations of depressing emotions for which no adequate outlet was provided in active thought or in practical duty. He traced others to the kindred but more gradual operation of the highly charged mental atmosphere of the locality, and he described the nature and tendencies of the induced disease with sufficient clearness to disabuse all candid minds of the supposition that it could ever, in any circumstances, be rendered an instrument of good. Physiologists, and physicians as physiologists, are bound to recognize that emotion is a force seeking outlet in action, capable of being guided by those who have been trained to bring it into subjection, but certain, when suffered to accumulate, to overpower persons of feeble will, and to compel them into courses which sound judgment would often be unable to approve. Abandonment to religious feeling, like abandonment to any other feeling, is merely a surrender of the will to the emotions, and its principal effect is to render emotion, and not will, the predominant factor in the organism.

At the First Congregational Church, Oak Park, Mr. William E. Barton preached on "Redemption in Other Worlds." He said in part: "With our increased knowledge of other worlds we cannot restrain our inquiry as to the probable condition of life there. That there is now life like ours in every word, or precisely like ours in any world, is not known, not even probable. We are not at liberty to suppose that Christ has been born and crucified in other worlds. His life is a part of the history of this planet. But the more we free the Bible plan of redemption from the adventitious and the accidental, the more overwhelmingly probable it becomes that in every world characters shall rise through analogous revelations to a common zenith."

Mrs. Hobson writes from Toronto, Canada: "Mrs. L. A. Griffin, the English medium, who for the past six months has been touring in Canada and the states, is recalled unexpectedly to the old country. She leaves for England July 6. It is with feelings of deep regret she finds herself compelled to return to British shores without being able to visit the Lily Dale camp grounds, where her Erie friends had arranged to receive her. Mrs. Griffin desires to sincerely thank all those kind friends who have been instrumental in making her visit to America a success and pleasure."

Mrs. Squire writes: "The Church of All Souls has been discontinued for the summer. I thank my many friends for their presence, hoping to meet them again in the fall."

W. P. Butler says: "I tried hypnotism upon alcoholic cases and found that it is as successful as in the treatment of cigarette fiends and have had the good fortune by this means to add several recruits to the temperance cause. So successful has the hypnotic treatment been that I have already trained Daniel P. Higgins, John S. McCullough and Dana Heck, of this city, to help me with it, and as soon as they mastered the power of hypnotizing subjects they have had the same success as I have had." Mr. Butler believes that hypnotism should be adopted as a branch of the temperance cause, that each temperance society should have a squad of hypnotists and that temperance orators should practice hypnotism as an adjunct to their work.

Mrs. Ina Wilcox writes: "I attended a Spiritualistic meeting held at 962 Milwaukee avenue, of which Mrs. DeLong Moseler is pastor, July 2, and I cannot say too much in behalf of the medium. Her psychic power is something marvelous. A large audience congregated in her parlor, all anxious to receive a word of cheer from some departed loved one through her organism. These meetings are held every Friday at 2:30 p. m., and Friday and Sunday evenings at 8 o'clock. They will not be discontinued during the warm weather."

Parkland Heights Spiritualist Home and Camp-meeting Association will open on Sunday, July 9. Mr and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates will be the opening speakers. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn and others will follow. Address all communications to the secretary, Miss Elizabeth M. Fish, Parkland, Bucks county, Pa.

F. M. H. writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The closing services for the season of the Earnest Workers S. S., were held at its fine hall, 333 Michigan avenue, Sunday evening, June 11. The hall was tastefully and beautifully decorated with bunting and flowers. The services were fittingly and gracefully conducted by our esteemed president and pastor, Mrs. Mary Stein, in her usual brilliant manner. A great part of the success was due to the high and soul-inspiring work of Mrs. Metcalf, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Pengally and Mrs. Dr. Fish, who kindly lent their aid and assistance. A fine musical program and recitations were beautifully rendered by kind and loving friends. Everything passed off in a harmonious manner, and all retired feeling they had spent an enjoyable evening in communion with the angel world, and sorry that the meetings had closed. Much praise is due Mrs. Stein and the officers of the society who have raised it from almost a failure to the flood-tide of success. The society is so pleased with the grand work of Mrs. Stein that it has selected her as pastor for another year, and in the fall with the blessings of the angel world we expect forth greater efforts for the uplifting of humanity. The meeting was closed with a beautiful benediction and the audience singing, 'Our Father in Heaven.'"

D. G. Hill writes: "The opening service of the summer meetings of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, Sunday evening, July 2, was very satisfactory in attendance. The speaker, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, gave a very interesting address, with messages by visiting sisters, Mrs. Weaver and Mrs. Thompon, which were well received with the beautiful music and singing by our choir, and which made the service a most enjoyable one. The next meeting will be held on Sunday evening, July 16, and each Sunday evening thereafter during July and August. Good speakers and mediums always in attendance; open door; all welcome. O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue."

The American Journal Examiner of California, says: "On 'Calvary Hill,' near Torres, Colorado, in Las Animas county, an accident happened on Good Friday. A young man named Jesus Gonzales was nailed to a cross during the Easter religious ceremonials of the Penitentes and expired in view of the awe-struck spectators. He had volunteered to take the part of the Savior in the solemn ritual of the sect, and his wrists and ankles had been firmly bound to the cross with ropes. At his own request nails were then driven through his hands and he was spiked to the cross-beam of the cross. At a signal from the high priest of the Penitentes the cross was elevated and the ceremonial continued. Following literally the New Testament narrative of the Savior's crucifixion, every incident and episode was imitated. Some of the Penitential Brothers performed the part of Roman soldiers, and one of them pressed a sponge of vinegar to the lips of Gonzales. The pseudo Christ smiled feebly and whispered the Savior's last words, 'Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.' The Penitentes then divided Gonzales' clothes and cast lots for them, as told in the scriptural account. A brother then seized a spear and plunged it into Gonzales' side, and his face lighted up with the beatific smile of a martyr. Meanwhile the various episodes of the crucifixion were executed with solemn zeal."

Mrs. T. J. Boyd of 403 Stanton street, Bay City, Mich., warns all people against employing the services of one Geo. White in any capacity in connection with Spiritualism. He said he hailed from Toledo, Ohio. His methods were very simple. He would put out every ray of light, and we poor dupes would see spirit lights (or thought so) until some of the same kind of light was seen on his fingers, and it was a very fleshly hand caught holding the trumpet. A voice smelling strongly of whisky and tobacco came through the trumpet. Mrs. Boyd would like to warn others so they will not fall into the same trap. He is about 40 or 45 years old; medium size and build, and has a young woman with him of about 25—a tall blonde.

J. M. Humphrey writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "I want to say to the sisters and brothers everywhere that here in St. Louis Spiritualism is attracting more favorable attention now than ever before. It is interesting more thoughtful people. For the past two months the First Spiritualist Association has had Brother Will J. Erwood of Wisconsin and he has worked up something like a revival interest here in things Spiritualistic. Thirty or more new members have been added to our rolls in this time, and others will follow. Brother Erwood is a talented, educated, coming young man—a credit to our cause, a capable, earnest and industrious worker. Wednesday night, June 28, our temple was filled to hear his last talk on 'A Glimpse of the Future,' a subject he handled very acceptably to his audience. Following the discourse Brother Erwood received new members in a beautiful, suggestive and original flower service, fittingly appropriate to our loving cause, and most impressively conducted. A Spiritualistic wedding followed, wherein flowers and little white-robed children assisted, and closed Brother Erwood's work here for this season. Representatives of the city press were present, and made extended pleasing reports, a certain evidence of Spiritualism's growth in public esteem. All is well with us and our work."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "The middle ages believed that the saints were surrounded by halos. Again the scientist laughed in his sleeve—if he was courteous enough not to laugh openly. Yet Baron Reichenbach showed that certain scientists recognized a luminousness in magnets, and since the earth is now known to be a great magnet man may also be a good sized one."

Mrs. Ruth Eastman of Mancelona, Mich., writes: "I wish to announce to your many readers that improvements are being made at our camp grounds. Our venerable worker, Samuel Lesher, is giving his whole time, so far as his health will permit, to beautifying the grounds he loves so well. He has given up his farm to spend his last earthly days to do so. He is 80 years of age, and knows how to clear up land. Two cottages are in the course of erection. Come to our Northern Camp; more the merrier."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "A large and appreciative audience which tested the seating capacity of our president's home, listened to the services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sunday evening, July 2. Our sister, Mrs. M. Price, delivered a grand lecture on Spiritualism, which was listened to with rapt attention. Our president spoke about the meetings being closed for the summer at the People's Institute, and to save the expense of rent would hold meetings at his home, 22 Jackson Place, between Van Buren and Jackson Blvd., west of Hoyne avenue. Brother Thompson gave some grand tests, as well as did Sister Kirchner. We are pleased to see so many strangers at our meetings, and feel we are spreading the gospel of Spiritualism to a good number of investigators. The regular meetings will be held every Sunday evening at the president's home until September 3, after which the services will be held in our new temple. A social will be held at the president's home, Saturday evening, July 15, for the benefit of the building fund. All welcome; come and have a good time. Our speaker for Sunday, July 16, will be Mrs. W. F. Schumacher, pastor of the Church of the Students of Nature."

P. A. Jensen writes from Melmont, Wash.: "One need not get hysterical over this fraud question and say, 'The fakes everywhere are trembling in the anticipation of exposure.' The fakes are doing nothing of the kind, for they know there are dupes enough to support them for years to come. Elsie Reynolds and the Crindles, after their exposure in Los Angeles, struck camp, and started business in San Francisco. Maud Freitag of Los Angeles, continued her meetings as usual, after her exposure, although the particulars of her fake work were published in the three leading Los Angeles newspapers; and there was nothing unusual noticeable about her meetings, unless it might have been a little suppressed excitement among her dupes."

A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "The prospects never looked brighter for the growth and prosperity of our cause than at the present time in Lynn and vicinity. The meetings held at Cadet Hall during the winter, under the management of Dr. Alex Caird, have been full of interest. Some of the finest speakers procurable have been heard from our rostrum. Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly was with us during the month of April and delivered as fine a course of lectures as was ever listened to from any platform, spiritual or otherwise. In May we had Dr. G. A. Fuller, who presented the spiritual philosophy in his usual able manner, and Mrs. Kate M. Ham of Haverhill, who demonstrated it just as ably. And the work does not end with the coming of Summer; on the contrary, it is entered into with more zeal and vigor when the meetings are renewed at Unity Camp. There is a wonderful increase in the size of the audiences since last season, partly in consequence of the opening of the new electric road which now takes passengers direct from Scollay Square, Boston, to the camp gate, running every half-hour. June 4, was Benefit Sunday and a large number of local and visiting mediums assisted. The 11th, Mr. Edgerly was with us, and the 18th was Haverhill Day when the Helping Hand Society of that place made their annual excursion to the camp, and it was truly a gala day, parties being present from nearly all the neighboring societies to greet the Haverhill friends. Miss Elizabeth Harlow, who has lost none of her old-time power and vigor since she became a Westerner, was warmly welcomed on the 25th, as was Mrs. Ham on July 2, to be followed on the 9th and 16th by Rev. May S. Pepper, whose wonderful work in New York has attracted attention all over the world. She will also be present during the fair which is to be held in the grove July 12 and 15, inclusive. It is a dream of ours that some plan may be formed whereby more of the western speakers could come east and the eastern ones go west, which could be easily accomplished by the formation of circuits, so that a speaker could have six months' engagement with societies near each other, each society paying their part of the traveling expenses. There are many mediums in the west that our people would be glad to hear, and we know that we have many here that could do good work in the west."

Mattie E. Hull writes: "Mr. Hull and myself have been so busy since our return from the west, we have been compelled to seemingly neglect many correspondents who have sent us cordial messages during the past two months. As there comes an end to all things in our earthly experiences, there will soon come a temporary change in our condition, and we hope we may find more time to attend to our friends though the visiting must be done at long range and through the medium of the type-writer. On the 12th inst. we leave our home quarters for Mantua, Ohio, where we have an engagement with the management of the Maple Dell Camp Association. My next camp engagement will be at Clinton, Iowa, Mt. Pleasant Park camp-meeting, where I am under a three weeks' engagement in the interest of the children's lyceum. I wish the friends to remember that while we announce a children's progressive lyceum in connection with the camp work, it is not to be purely a kindergarten affair. I urge that the children and young people especially should be in attendance, but I want the adults, those who have the time to spare to feel so much of an interest, that their presence will be in evidence. I shall engage my best endeavors to make my part of the work a success, but there must be a co-operative effort on the part of the visitors at the camp. We are looking forward to our next school year with a great deal of anticipation. Calls for catalogues are coming in larger numbers than ever before. The probability now is that Mr. Hull and myself will return to Washington and Oregon early in January to work in the interest of the school, and I feel to say to more fully complete the work with our friends on behalf of Spiritualism, than we were enabled to do in the spring, on account of being compelled to return so soon. I mention this, so the friends in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, and smaller places that we failed to visit for lack of time, may communicate with us relative to the dates, etc. Spiritualism is going forward in spite of all it has to meet."

Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy are working under the auspices of the Montana State Association, and will serve same state until the N. S. A. convenes in Minneapolis next October. Any other speakers or mediums claiming to be working under the same state association excepting the above named parties are making false claims. Mrs. Frank McCormick, president; Mrs. W. C. Selbrede, secretary.

Mrs. John Lindsey, who has been ill for some time, is now at the hospital at the Soldiers' Home annex, Grand Rapids, Mich., for treatment. She will be pleased to hear from her friends.

Mrs. Christine Cooper writes from Clinton, Iowa: "Miss Ella C. Preston of St. Louis, Mo., has felt obliged to cancel her engagement with the M. V. S. A. We are pleased to announce the engagement of Mrs. Alice C. Barry to fill the vacancy. Mrs. Barry has for the past twenty months, served as pastor and message bearer for the Philosophical Society of Spiritualists of Clinton. During this time she has, through her pleasing personality and honest, earnest efforts, completely won the hearts of all who have been so fortunate as to listen to the inspired teachings and She will no doubt receive the same cordial greeting from the M. V. S. A. platform."

E. L. Stewart writes: "For some time the Hyde Park Occult Society has not incumbered the columns of your paper, for the thought came to us that sometimes "Silence is golden"; but now we wish to give a little information to the numerous readers. We will still continue to hold our regular Sunday evening services. We have been very excellently entertained in the last few months by fine speakers, such as H. S. Frazier, Dr. J. H. Randall, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Mrs. Martha Price, Mrs. McArthur and Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams. We always aim to get the best, and those who work for the sake of spreading the truth. Our society has kept its rostrum clear from objectionable mediums, and those we have had we do not hesitate to recommend as doing honest work, giving only what they get from the other side of life. We refer to Mrs. Kline, Mrs. McMenamin, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. Lichtig and Mrs. McIntyre, who have recently served us. Since January, 1905, we have lost two of our officers by resignation, having gone from the city; our president, Mr. Enslow, having gone to Jalisco, Mexico, and Mr. Otto E. Kropp, treasurer, being called away, on account of the sickness of his mother, and who passed to spirit life a few weeks after he got home, to St. Peter, Minn. Regrets have been expressed that we had to lose such an active worker as Brother Kropp. The vacancies occurring necessitated an election which took place on June 30, which made a change in our officers. As it now stands: H. T. Stewart, president; Mrs. A. Ware, vice-president; Mrs. O. B. Wilson, financial secretary; W. H. Lundie, treasurer; J. A. Bostedo, recording secretary; Miss E. L. Stewart, corresponding secretary. Mrs. S. Irwin and Mrs. E. Kline with the above, form the board of trustees. I wish to inform those who desire to correspond with me that I have changed my residence, and all communications will reach me at 455 East 55th street. We extend a cordial invitation to all who find their society closed for the summer to come and see us. We will guarantee you a pleasant time. Good speakers and mediums will always be present. The third Sunday of every month will be devoted to mediums giving messages, and no lecture."

Harry J. Moore writes from Butte, Mont.: "Noticing an article in the general survey in reference to Madame Bell and signed by Wm. M. Tabor of Butte, Mont., I wish to repeat what I stated in my former article that Madame Bell came to Billings during the state convention and it was deemed advisable to publish in the secular press that she was not a medium endorsed by the National or State Associations of Spiritualists and was not in Billings under the auspices of the local society. Mr. Frank D. McCormuck visited her and when he mentioned something about credentials or recommendations she said she did not have any, hence the notice in the secular press. Will also say that more than one 'floating' medium (so-called) who travels about not only in Montana but adjoining states will come in for their share of notice as soon as I return from the coast. We must uphold the position of the N. S. A. and state associations."

Lorenzo Worthen writes as follows from Hillsboro, Br., N. H., about the Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp: "Our camp-meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commences July 30, and closes Aug. 27. All arrangements have been made by the committee. It has a good list of speakers and mediums. We have engaged Mrs. Sadie L. Hand, and also Edgar W. Emerson, who is known from Maine to California. The officers have done all in their power to make this camp-meeting a success. We will welcome all who come to investigate the truth of Spiritualism. The officers cannot make a success without the people helping them. We hope all old members will renew their membership, and each one bring a new one with them. Direct all letters to the secretary at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., after July 25."

Fred P. Evans writes from Psychomo Lodge, Los Gatos, Cal.: "I have given up my San Francisco home for the present. My family and self are now domiciled at my mountain home, as per above address. I leave here for Lily Dale and other eastern points on July 24."

Dr. N. F. Ravlin was in the city last week on his way to Portland, Oregon. He is one of our ablest workers, his keen, incisive logic hitting the mark every time.

The Sunflower Club had a splendid picnic at Lake Bluff, July 4. It had as its leading spirit, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, whose efforts were seconded in a noble manner by ALL the members and officers of the Club. The occasion will long be remembered as most enjoyable by everyone present.

Dr. Beverly writes: "One hundred and fifty people were at Arlington hall 31st and Indiana avenue, last Sunday. Why should we close when the hungry people come? All cannot go to camp meetings, and many cannot wait till September for the next meal, so we invite all to come and partake freely of the waters of life. The writer is giving a series of lectures on 'Development from the Blackboard.' We have our new membership cards ready. Send 25 cents for this card of instruction. Co-operate with us in unity of purpose, to help each other and all humanity. Address Dr. Beverly, 44 East Thirty-first street."

PSYCHOMETRY.

Some Notable Exhibitions of the Faculty.

In The Progressive Thinker of June 17, is an article, "A Medium in Japan," which is interesting as showing progress on the other side of the earth. But is it more marked than the work of many of our mediums here in the United States? Years ago it fell to my lot to preside at a series of lectures on Spiritualism. Among the lecturers was Dr. L. Barnicoat of Boston, whose peculiar gift was psychometry. Twenty-four paper boxes were made as near alike as possible, and when she lectured these boxes were passed among the audience for articles to be read by her. The cover was placed on the box and the twenty-four brought to the platform. This was done to show that it was impossible for any one to know what was in the box—to stop criticism. She never failed to read the magnetism attached to articles sent up. Occasionally there would be three or more magnetic conditions and there would be amusement and instruction in the unraveling; but she always came out correct in the reading.

Another lecturer who had the same gift was Miss Jennie B. Hagan. She was given a pebble. Placing it at her forehead, she told of its long journey from the north—its varied experiences till it came into the hands of man. Up to this point its history in past life rested on her sayso. It was all natural and quite probable. When it reached the hands of man, we could test what she told—and it was correct.

I name these two mediums, having been intimate with exhibitions of their ability to read the past as impressed upon or into inanimate objects. Doubtless there are thousands of these psychometrists. Let their friends say a word for them, and then Enima Kasakura won't be such an apparent curiosity as one "talking with (reading) inanimate things."

Report on Baby Barrett Spread.

Received in all, $19.40. Forwarded to Morris Pratt Institute Association and Mediums' Relief Fund, $7.23 each. Remainder left for expenses, $4.94. This is to pay for material, purchase the book, and pay express charges on the spread to Brother and Sister Barrett.

It will be seen that the ladies who made the spread made nothing. As they had hoped to have a small balance left for work in their Aid Society, they feel rather disappointed, but still believe that they have been more than repaid in the pleasure and profit they obtained from reading the many beautiful letters sent with the dimes and dollars. May the angels bless every one who has had a hand in the work. Our personal thanks are due to the editors of The Progressive Thinker and the Sunflower for the many favors received from their hands. The book and spread will be forwarded as soon as the names and sentiments are copied.

THE TALE OF A SHIRT.

I have served a stylish master and have been to him a friend,
But the best associations must in time
come to an end.
While my threads were new and stronger and were ironed to a shine,
I was chosen for the parties by that rich young master mine.

If, returning from the laundry, I'd a
wrinkle or a spot,
I'll assure you that my master waxed around there very hot,
And he cast me in the closet with a
cuss-word and and a blow,
And with bitter words for some one to the laundry I would go.

But the woes of life are never single-handed you must know,
And my master learned a lesson from another's tale of woe:
He had taken me to parties where I knew it wasn't right,
And spilled beer upon my bosom till I looked just like a fright.

Ah! he stained me till my whiteness grew as dull as common lead,
Like the skin of my dear master, as
'twill be when he is dead.
Yes, he stained me, then he cast me in the closet here for good,
But the truth about the staining will some day be understood.

I'm too good yet for the rag-man, and I still much would endure,
If somebody would but give me to some fellow who is poor,
And I'll bet he wouldn't stain me as my rich young master did,
Till I feel that it were better had I been forever hid.

Had we garments any union to protect us from the stain
That our masters put upon us we would never need complain.
Were each character we cover ever
clean and pure and bright,
We would have less stain to spot us and would treat our masters right.

Had we souls we oft would shudder at the fearful crimes we see,
'Neath the mantles of the classes called
"the best humanity."
Had we eyes to see and language to express what we behold,
We might make the world much better with the tales we could unfold.

Michigan State Association.

The Michigan State Spiritual Association will hold its twelfth annual convention, Tuesday, Aug. 15, headquarters being the Mediums' Home, Lansing. All Spiritualists of the state are invited to be present and all societies of the state are requested to send their full number of delegates. Let all come and make this our largest convention. There is work to be done.

THE CHURCH AND STATE.

It Has Been Divided in France—Concordat of Pope and Emperor Is Annulled by Chamber of Deputies—Comes Down From 1801—Contest Began in March and Was Bitterly Fought From Beginning of Session.

The bill for the separation of church and state passed the chamber of deputies, Paris, France, by a vote of 341 to 233. The result was greeted by governmental cheering and opposition hisses.

When the result was officially given out there was renewed clamor from the crowded galleries, lobbies, and the floor of the chamber.

The task has occupied almost the entire time of the lower house since March 22. The opponents of the measure utilized every means to prevent the bill becoming a law, moving no fewer than 250 amendments, which were rejected.

Tried to Make Bill Liberal.

The steering committee showed a reasonable spirit by accepting suggestions from all sides in order to render the bill as liberal as possible, at the same time taking every precaution to avoid leaving loopholes for political intrigue.

The text of the bill has been almost completely revised, with the consent of the house, since its introduction. The broad principle of reform is permitted to stand, fulfilling the long expressed desire of advanced republicans to see the state untrammeled by connection with any religious sect.

The system swept away by this bill dates from 1801, when the famous concordat was signed by Pius VII. and Napoleon.

Bill Abolishes Concordat.

This concordat gave religion governmental status, the churches being governmental property with the clergy paid by the state, and the entire church administration being under the direction of a member of the president's cabinet. The new system abolishes all laws and regulations under the concordat and terminates the authority of the concordat itself.

The general principle of the measure as finally adopted by the chamber of deputies is as follows:

"The republic assures liberty of conscience and guarantees the free exercise of religion, subject to the restrictions of public order. The republic neither recognizes, pays stipends to nor subsidizes any sect, but provides funds for college, hospital, and asylum chaplains. Otherwise the public worship budget is abolished and public establishments connected with religion are suppressed."

Compromise on Church Riches.

The most active contest took place over the proposition whereby the priceless riches of the church, consisting of collections made during many centuries of paintings, tapestries, and statuary, were to be passed to the state. This was finally modified so that civil organizations retain control of the goods of the church.

One of the last amendments adopted prohibits members of the clergy becoming mayors or holding other municipal offices during the eight years succeeding the adoption of the law. This was bitterly contested. Rigorous provisions are made against clergymen taking any active part in politics.

An Easy Way to Make Money.

I have made $560.00 in 30 days selling Dish-washers. I did my housework at the same time. I don't canvass. People come or send for the Dish-washers. I handle the Mound City Dish-washer. It is the best on the market. It is lovely to sell. It washes and dries the dishes perfectly in two minutes. Every lady who sees it wants one. I will devote all my future time to the business and expect to clear $4,000.00 this year. Any intelligent person can do as well as I have done. Write for particulars to the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., St Louis, Mo.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. B. L. Closson, 124 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Bamboraville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John T. Dow: Q. How are the people to gain their liberty? If combines, trusts and monopolies are to control courts, legislatures and every department of both local, and general government, and make tariffs and prices to suit themselves, is there any way to head off the plutocratic sharks?

A. We would not readily admit that the condition of the people is as deplorable as this question implies, yet if it were, they have the means of redemption in their own hands. They yearly vote these same men into place and power. If a voter casts his ballot against his own best interests and in favor of those who oppress him, it is self-evident it is because he is misinformed or ignorant. The remedy is as self-evident—he must be informed—educated.

Voting ignorance is the one great menace of popular government. If the voters remain uninformed until they vote away their heritage, red-handed revolution, the avenging of wrongs by brutal force, is the culmination.

If the voters become informed and hence capable of comprehending the ways and means of gaining and maintaining their rights, there comes the slow but sure advance by peaceful evolution. The government, as a growth of centuries, cannot be changed in a day. The efforts of the greatest reformers may appear of little avail at the time. The whole people, or at least a majority, must be drawn up to higher grounds.

This is a money age. The robber baron is represented by the captain of industry, and labor is stifled in the abundance of its own production. As money gives its possessor power and position, it has become master, and conscience has disappeared in the race of the money-mad.

Here is the opportunity and necessity of the diffusion of the exalted precepts and teachings of the spiritual philosophy of life here and hereafter.

A Thomas Paine is the requirement of the hour to write anew "The Rights of Man," from the present view-point.

True it is that the laborer receives more pay, may be better housed, clothed and fed, than at any time in the past. The new found power and machinery it drives is doing the work of hundreds of millions of men, and the men who guide it receive small recompense compared with those who claim its ownership. To the millions Carnegie has amassed, the men who toiled in mines and at the blazing furnaces, contributed, receiving a daily wage which gave him ten times more. It is not surprising that pricked by conscience he feels that he has what is not rightfully his, and exploits himself by gifts. The people do not want charity—they demand justice and their rights.

The great benefactions of nature belong to all, and laws which give them to an exclusive few, and enable them to put the many under tribute are the laws of robbers.

Every law of banking has been made for the bankers by the bankers, not for the interests of the people.

Every insurance company is organized to make money for the officers in control, and as much as possible out of the policy holders.

Every promoted scheme is for the interests of the promoters.

The root of the evil is in the money question, planned most cunningly by "financiers," which virtually makes every business man and every laborer pay tribute to those who hold this power.

An educated people cannot be enslaved by being hoodwinked by the sophistries of "economic philosophers," retained by boards of trade. This education is being received more rapidly than the great political leaders dream of. The feeling is permeating all classes, and in the strikes, the giant power blindly and desperately strives in vain effort. The most popular literature is tinctured with the new ideas of human rights.

When men believe the fundamental principle that to the laborer belong the products of his labor, they will not be the dupes of demagogues, nor have to be persuaded to vote for their own rights.

AT NIGHT.

Sometimes when Dark has spread for me her robe of rest,
And Silence guarded by;
The night bird, Sleep, would startle from her nest,
Stirred by the baby's cry.

When night is deepest now, again and yet again,
I lie with wide eyes wet.
It was his little cry which waked me then;
His silence wakes me yet.
—Edmund Vance Cook.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

Notes From Mineral Park Camp, Los Angeles.

This camp opened under the most auspicious skies on Sunday, June 25, with a very large and enthusiastic audience present at all sessions. The auditorium had been most tastefully decorated with flowers, potted plants, flags and bunting by the loving hands of those who are devoting their lives to Spiritualism, until it seemed a veritable bower of beauty set in the charming valley in which the camp is being held.

California scenery has been too often described by visitors to this coast, whose fertile pens have enriched the pages of American literature with choicest bits of poetic imagery in reference to climate, trees, flowers, mountains, the clear blue of the sky, and the hospitality of the people, to require any attempt at description or embellishment on the part of the writer. All of the truly beautiful and wonderful things associated with the word "California" are actualities, but they must be seen to be appreciated.

Mineral Park camp has a charming location, and all of the native elements of natural California beauty enter into and make up its surroundings.

This camp is almost wholly the result of the indomitable energy and enterprise of one little woman, Mrs. Nettie Howell ,whose executive and general business ability have won for her a most enviable reputation among the great financiers of the Pacific coast. In private conversation with business people who are not Spiritualists, it is most gratifying to hear them refer to her as one of the most substantial business women of America. Her word is her bond, and her name is gilt-edged in business circles.

Mrs. Howell is the motor power of the camp, hence it is sure of success. In fact it is a success already, for only harmony and good will are to be found on the grounds and every person seems inspired with a wholesome desire to do something for Spiritualism by means of this camp. The attendance for the first week has been good, and the secular press has been unusually fair in its treatment of the meetings.

Mrs. Howell deserves great credit for the program she has provided, and for her most excellent arrangement of the talent she names in her official proclamation to the world. She has put in a number of special days, with attractions second to none in the United States.

Among these special days may be named Woman's Day, with Rev. Eliza Tupper Wilkes as the leading speaker, flanked and supported by the splendid army of Spiritualist speakers who will be present on that occasion. A departure of great merit is Audubon Day, or Animals' Day. Rev. S. Augusta Armstrong will be the leading speaker on this occasion, and a rich treat is in store for all who are so fortunate as to be present on that day. Where should the dumb creatures find friends if not at a Spiritualist camp-meeting?

Other days of equal attractiveness will be announced as time goes on, and they are certain to bring out the reformers who are interested in the vital principles for which these days shall stand. These extra attractions in nowise interfere with the regular program—in fact they are a part of it, hence ally Spiritualism with every needed and helpful reform.

Mrs. Howell sought to secure representative speakers and mediums to present the religion of Spiritualism to the world, and substantiate it with demonstrated facts in the way of phenomena. As their names are given from week to week the readers of The Progressive Thinker will see that she has succeeded.

Camp opened promptly at ten o'clock Sunday morning, June 25, with John T. Lillie as chairman. A song service of great beauty and sweetness occupied the initial moments, following which Chairman Lillie introduced Hon S. D. Dye, of Los Angeles, to deliver the address of welcome. Mr. Dye is president of the Truthseekers' Society of Los Angeles, and is one of the trustees of the N. S. A. He knows what Spiritualism means to him, hence he spoke feelingly and eloquently of it, its work, and of the possibilities of the present camp. Mr. Dye spoke from manuscript, and it is hoped that he will kindly forward the same for publication later in the season.

Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks, formerly of Chicago, then gave an inspirational solo of great beauty, which was most enthusiastically received.

A symposium of brief addresses followed, given by Harrison D. Barrett, President N. S. A.; John W. Ring, Nat. Supt. of Lyceums; Mrs. Ada S. Horman and John L. Dryden. Each speaker was in a most optimistic and hopeful frame of mind, and succeeded in impressing a like spirit upon those who listened. It was an era of good feeling—an epoch of promise—an augury of success. Indeed, the seen and the unseen were blended into a perfect oneness of soul that made every one glad he was present.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie closed the morning services with a most touching and exquisite improvisation. Everyone felt the presence of the angels, and audibly murmured at the close, "Lord, it is good for me to be here." The poem itself was a gem, and its impress will long remain upon the minds of those who heard it.

Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., was the speaker of the afternoon. He took a text, "What came ye out into the wilderness to see?" Then announced his subject to be, "What Is Spiritualism?" He acknowledged that the subject was trite, and said that his method of treating it might also be trite, yet he felt as if it were best at the opening of the camp to reply to this question in a way that would show the outside world why we were out in the wilderness attending a camp-meeting. Mr. Barrett's address was kindly received by his hearers.

A vocal solo by Mr. John T. Lillie, a poem by J. L. Dryden, and congregational singing closed the services of the afternoon.

Sunday night at 7:30 a large audience was found in the auditorium, waiting to enjoy the feast of good things announced on the program. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan rendered an excellent vocal duet, following which John W. Ring gave a masterly lecture upon a poetical subject that he most eloquently and deftly turned to practical account as he unfolded his theme. Mr. Ring is an orator of no small ability, and is one of the young men in Spiritualism who are already "here" ready for work. Spirit messages by Mrs. R. S. Cowell, one of California's reliable psychics, and an inspirational solo by Mrs. A. K. Brooks, closed the services.

Monday was rest day, yet a spiritual conference was held in the morning, at which the discussion turned upon the iniquitous license exacted by the city of Los Angeles, of all mediums who presume to practice their profession within the city limits. Steps were taken to secure the repeal of so much of the ordinance as applied to genuine mediums, and a committee was appointed to take the matter in charge. This committee was made up of earnest Spiritualists, and they have lost no time in preparing a case for the consideration of the city council at its next meeting. Something may come out of this movement that will involve the Spiritualists of the nation in an earnest fight for their rights, ere the case is finally settled.

John L. Dryden of San Diego, was the speaker of the afternoon, and he gave a most earnest and eloquent address upon the subject of "The Problem of the Small Boy." It was a humanitarian cry and it touched the hearts of his hearers.

The evening exercises consisted of a message seance given by Mrs. R. S. Cowell of Oakland in Lyceum Temple, and a social dance in the pavilion.

Tuesday, June 27, an interesting conference was held in the morning, the question under discussion being, "What can we do to make Spiritualism respected?" All agreed that Spiritualists must respect themselves if they wish to have Spiritualism respected.

Harrison D. Barrett was the speaker of the afternoon, and he was followed by Mrs. R. S. Lillie in one of her most beautiful improvisations. Messages by Mrs. Cowell closed the services.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie was the speaker at the night service, 7:30 o'clock. Her subject was "The Influence of the Beautiful Upon the Evolution of the Individual Consciousness." It was handled in a most helpful, instructive and interesting manner, hence was enjoyed by all. Messages by Mrs. Bryan closed the exercises.

Wednesday's services were interesting from first to last. The morning conference was spirited, and was well attended. It was the people's conference, and the regular speakers listened to other voices than their own with keen enjoyment. The address of the afternoon was given by Mrs. C. M. Johnston of San Diego, who followed her lecture with messages. Mrs. Johnston was highly recommended to the management, and pleased those who were in sympathy with her thought.

The night service at 7:30 was conducted by Mr. John W. Ring. His subject was, "We Believe in Infinite Intelligence." The lecture must be heard to be appreciated. Wit, pathos, wisdom, eloquence and profound logic flowed fluently from the lips of the inspired speaker, who seemed almost transfigured as he gave utterence to the splendid thoughts with which his whole address was filled. Scores of requests to have it published were heard on all sides. Mr. Ring cast a spell over his hearers from which we hope they will never free themselves.

Messages were given by Mrs. Cowell at the close of the lecture. They were clear-cut tests—no stock business in what she gave that night. The two worlds were one again that evening.

Thursday, June 29, Harrison D. Barrett was the speaker of the morning, and he was favored with a very large and enthusiastic audience.

W. T. Hutchins of Los Angeles, an ex-Episcopalian clergyman, was the speaker of the afternoon. Mr. Hutchins pleased his hearers with his quaint humor and fed them with many solid chunks of meat. He has a happy way of stating his facts, is decidedly original in his rhetorical figures, and a perpetual surprise to his hearers.

The evening lecture was given by Prof. John W. McLean, whose quaint Scotch accent and strange metaphors amused and enthused his hearers throughout his address. He gave many nuggets of truth to the people, but did not have time, perhaps, to fasten them into one connected chain of logical sequence. He made his hearers think, and after all is said and done, what more should a speaker do? He read with effect several of his own poems, one of which, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" was most enthusiastically received.

The notorious W. W. Tatum, alias Fred Tatum, has attempted to palm this poem off as his own in several places where he has been at his nefarious work of humbugging the people. Spiritualists and all readers of The Progressive Thinker should take due notice that Prof. McLean wrote this poem—not Tatum, under one name or another. Mrs. C. M. Johnston closed the services with messages.

The exercises of Friday, June 30, were unusually interesting. An inspiring conference in the morning was followed by a scholarly and logical address by Mrs. Ada S. Horman upon the subject, "Is Spiritualism Worth While?" Her effort pleased everyone who heard it, and several who were not Spiritualists were heard to remark, "That woman stuck to her text. She gave us an address worth hearing." In fine, many word-bouquets fell at Mrs. Horman's feet as she closed her excellent address.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake gave one of her interesting seances at the close of the services.

Mrs. R. S. Cowell's test seance in the evening was well patronized, and greatly enjoyed.

Saturday, July 1—a whole week of the camp is gone. Everyone regrets the passage of time, but feels as if the week had been full of spiritual blessings. To-day we had a good conference in the morning; in the afternoon a medium's meeting at which Mrs. Bryan, Mrs Vlasek and Mrs. Hutchinson gave messages.

At night, John W. Ring gave another of his eloquent and truly inspired lectures. It thrilled and filled the souls of all his hearers, and every one is sounding the praises of John "Archbishop of Texas," as Mr. Barrett facetiously calls him.

Bro. J. T. Lillie makes a most excellent chairman. His introductions are most happy, and he has a way of making every one feel at his ease and at home as soon as he enters the auditorium. He is truly our "soulful, songful, happified John!"

Bro. S. D. Dye and wife are frequent visitors at the camp. They are always welcome, for they mean the camp shall be successful.

The strong, resolute, earnest face of Robert T. Hale is often seen among those who come to listen to the lectures. Mr. Hale's methods may seem too strenuous for some Spiritualists, but his heart is right, and his soul sincere in his determined opposition to all forms of fraud and chicanery. His blows are hard and effective whenever he is forced to strike.

The hardest worker at the camp is our loyal manager, Mrs. Nettie Howell. She has to attend to the minutest details in all business matters pertaining to the camp, besides having her hands full in making all speakers, mediums and visitors feel at home. How she can do so much hard work and hold up under it, is a marvel to all. Do we not see here an example perhaps of spirit aid? More when there is more to write. EVANGELA

Temple Heights, Northport, Me.

The annual session of the Temple Heights Spiritual Camp-meeting will convene on Saturday, August 13, and continue one week. The speakers will include Edgar W. Emerson of Manchester, N. H., Mrs. Effie Webster Chapman of Cambridge, Vt., and Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, of Leominster, Mass. Good music will be furnished and there is sure to be a week of pleasure to all.

Mrs. N. H. Rhoades of Rockland, who is one of the directors, and has been very seriously ill all the spring, is steadily recovering, and is now occupying her cottage for the summer. She is accompanied by her niece, Mrs. W. S. Hobbs of Belfast, who will remain with her this summer.

Mr. and Mrs. George Benson and Master Paul, are occupying the Pleasant View cottage and will care for many visitors to the grounds this season, as formerly. They have been here since early in April.

Mrs. J. P. Stearns of Lagrange has been spending several weeks at her cottage, Harmony, and will return for the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard L. Lathrop of Boston, who spent the winter here and have made another visit of several weeks, have gone to Boston for an indefinite stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Collins McCarty of Belfast and granddaughter, Miss Louise Webber, are at the Veterans' Home and will remain the summer. Mr. McCarty has been very ill during the winter but is in good health now.

The Bagley and Hadley cottage has been repaired and painted this season and is now looking very neat. The cottage is prettily located and will be occupied by the two families this season.

It is expected that the music this year will be furnished by a quartette of voices and an effort will be made to introduce some new features in the week's program which will be interesting.

Mrs. Mary A. Boynton of Rockport, has opened her cottage, and has been domiciled here some weeks. She is accompanied by Miss Nellie Haskell and Mrs. William Corthell of Rockport, who will spend the summer with her.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Black of Bucksport, are occupying the small Benson cottage which they have rented for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Lower of Detroit, will be among the visitors during the camp session at Temple Heights this year. They have sold their farm and this fall will go to California to make their home.

Many will be pleased to know that Mrs. Juliette Yeaw will return to grace out platform this year. Mrs. Yeaw was one of the early workers at Temple Heights and she has many friends there yet.

Sickness in the home of the writer since our return from the South in the spring has prevented earlier letters but more will follow. ORRIN J. DICKEY.

PARKLAND HEIGHTS, PA.

The New Camp-meeting Grounds.

At this beautiful rural spot, on Sunday, July 9, Parkland Heights Spiritualists Home and Camp-meeting Association will open the camp season by holding morning and afternoon services at the Auditorium, with George W. Kates and wife as the speakers for the day. These two well-known workers in the cause gave such general satisfaction last year at the first day's services ever held in the interest of Spiritualism on Parkland Heights, they are wanted here again this season, and we are looking forward to a grand opening day. These services will be continued each Sunday until September.

Many improvements are being made to our camp grounds, to which four lots have recently been added, making in all ten now in the possession of this society. A commodious tent is to be placed in front of the auditorium, and a dining-room and kitchen to be erected, and we feel justified in being proud of the progress made since the organization of this baby society on the 30th of August, 1903, in spite of the many difficulties strewn along the way.

These have gradually been surmounted through the efforts of a few earnest workers, aided by the unseen forces which we know to be with us in this work of making of beautiful Parkland a great center of high spiritual thought; also to establish on these Heights a home and orphanage.

Just across the avenue from our camp-ground a handsome new residence for William L. Park is in process of building.

Mrs. Mary J. Jennings has returned to Pioneer Cottage.

Thomas M. Locke and wife are spending the summer at their handsome residence.

Thomas Rogers and family are now established at their pleasant home.

Horace Oler and family are spending their second season on the Heights, at their commodious new home.

Henry Thomson and wife have again taken up their abode here, after spending the winter in the city.

The president, Richard F. Adams and wife, will be guests at Floral Heights on Saturday and Sunday of each week, and the treasurer, William R. McGlenn and wife and the other directors will be here to aid all in their power in making a success of this second season.

All the cottages vacated during the winter are rapidly being filled, and the prospect is there will not be sufficient small ones to meet the demand, but rooms may be obtained at the hotel, and many are preparing to take boarders, so all may be accommodated.

Hazlett Park Camp, Mich.

To the Spiritualist of Michigan and Friends Elsewhere:—The twenty-third annual assembly of the Hazlett Park Camp Association opens Aug. 5, 1905, with Dr. G. B. Warne of Chicago, as speaker for the opening week, and Mrs. R. S. Lillie for the second. Other good speakers follow to the close of the camp, September 3.

A cordial invitation is extended to all Spiritualists and Liberalists of different cults, to meet with us and enjoy with us the opportunities we have to offer. Few camps have as many inducements to offer as Hazlett Park. A beautiful lake, attractive grounds and scenery, electric and railroad service to and from the state capitol and the Michigan Agricultural College, with its many attractive surroundings, located on the electric line between Lansing and the camp grounds.

At the close of the 1904 camp-meeting the officers of the association secured an unincumbered title to the west half, and the most desirable part, together with the auditorium and all of the buildings belonging to the camp.

The one objectionable feature has been removed, and now the camp association has a title that secures to it every right belonging to a real estate transfer and no fears need be entertained as to the future of the camp and its belongings, if Spiritualists put forth half the zeal that the different sects do to maintain their respective organizations.

Hazlett Park camp will go down in the history of Spiritualism as one of the successful centers from which its philosophy and phenomena have been faithfully and successfully promulgated.

LAKE BRADY, OHIO.

Opening Day Exercises, Sunday, July 2.

The prognostications on the part of the weather bureau for Sunday, July 2, came true as predicted for this section—"cloudy, with occasional showers."

This was too bad, for it kept many Clevelanders from visiting the camp, who otherwise would have made the trip. The ride from Cleveland to Lake Brady is an hour and a half by rail, 35 miles of fine farming, garden-producing country, interspersed with woodland and small streams making a fine ride at this season of the year.

However, while it was not in the quantity it was the quality of the crowd on board our train that took the chance. Let me say it was one of the nicest, most intelligent lot of people that ever attended this camp. Most Spiritualists have read or heard of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie of San Francisco, who on this occasion was the attraction—speaker and test medium of the day. To hear her once is to wish to hear her again. Mrs. Gillespie is bright and witty, full of humor and pathos, has a splendid flow of language and holds her audience without effort. Her tests were excellent, astonishingly so to all present. She gave us two splendid lectures filled with knowledge and truth, interspersed with many touches of witticism. One I quote. "A clergyman and a Spiritualist were holding a controversy, when the good man said, 'But you Spiritualists are not building any churches.' Said the Spiritualist, 'Well, no; but then there will be plenty of empty ones soon for us to use.'"

During the afternoon lecture a laughable incident occurred. Up to this time the weather had been threatening, but no rain. While Mrs. Gillespie was holding her audience spellbound to the oblivion of all else, there came suddenly a faint flash of lightning, then a peal of thunder, and all of a sudden it rained, yes it poured, so quick and hard did it all happen that no one realized what was to happen. The tent was crowded, many standing. Instantly all crowded together, the noise of the rain on the tent, the sudden darkness, confusion prevailed, the lecture ceased, no one dared venture out. Outside all about the grounds benches and tables were covered with uneaten hash, paraphernalia of all kinds, boxes, bundles and baskets, pie, cake, etc., all floated down stream, for which there was no help. Finally kind nature let up a bit and peace was restored. Now Mr. Dell Herrick, the medium and lecturer, happened to be in the audience at the time. Noted for his quick wit, he stepped to the platform and made good use of the occasion, and with his genial manner thanked kind nature for having blessed the farmers round about for the bountiful rain so opportunely given, for it was sorely needed. Then appealing to the audience, showing by the awful rainfall the dire necessity for a better shelter house than a tent, asked for a one-dollar contribution of the audience to the auditorium fund.

Suffice it to say the fund was augmented to a considerable degree, proving the old adage, "It is an ill wind that blows no good." The storm also helped the ladies' lunch counter, for, mark you, after everything in the shape of eatables had been softened and washed away, the lunch counter in the ladies' cottage had to help us out. Pies, cakes, ice cream and sandwiches were eaten and sold out, even the coffee had to be watered. What a splendid rain-fall!

We had with us Mr. Bond of Willoughby, Ohio, one of the old pioneers, former president of the Lake Helen camp, Florida, who is known to most of the mediums and writers in the cause, also Mrs. Irene Gay, president of the First Spiritual Society of Willoughby, and Mrs. Goodrich, also of Willoughby; Major George Cock, connected with the emigration bureau and stationed at Cleveland, O., also a staunch Spiritualist, besides quite a number of others well known to the cause.

During the morning services a statement was passed among the audience and signed by the president of the camp, Mr. C. F. Hunger, showing the financial standing of the society. The fourteen acres together with considerable improvements, such as new fences, shade trees, shrubbery, flower beds, wells, tents and contents all paid for and a surplus of $1,062.82 in available cash on hand. This is to go for the new auditorium, expected to be built this fall if possible ready for next season's work.

This new Lake Brady society is working on a sure basis, the motto being to buy nothing without money, having learned from the sad experience of the old society, where something like $80,000 was lost so it is said, failure now is impossible. The association seems to be in the best of hands and all are workers without remuneration but love for the cause.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather there were about 500 on the grounds to-day, gate receipts about $70.

There have been built this spring three more very nice, two-story cottages, making a fine camp appearance.

Mrs. Gillespie is to be here the coming week and also next Sunday, after which Cora Morrell of Grand Rapids, Mich., follows with a two weeks' engagement. Next comes Cora Richmond of Chicago, Ill., then Lyman C. Howe of Fredonia, N. Y.; Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, O., next, after which W. J. Colville, and lastly Marian Carpenter of Detroit, Mich. There will also be a number of fine mediums along with these, making a splendid program for this season.

Lake Brady holds a winning card and is bound to succeed. My predictions are, we will all be surprised at what we shall see of her success in a few years more. H. L. TOBIEN.

CLINTON CAMP.

Its Prospects for the Coming Session.

To enjoy that peace which passeth all understanding, an occasional change of scene is almost essential, and there is not a spot more inviting than our own Mt. Pleasant Park. The meeting of new people, listening to finely framed sermons, the gaining of new subjects for thought and conversation, getting nearer to nature's heart by listening to the "tongues in trees," has a tendency to recuperate wasted energy, and send us back to our little world with renewed hope, fresh vitality, and a desire to live a better life for ourselves and a greater help to our neighbors.

The spirit of prophecy is pointing to a successful camp and the management is putting forth every effort toward the fulfilling of the prophecy.

Our program is a strong one from beginning to end. Hon. W. J. Bryan will deliver his popular lecture, "The Prince of Peace," on opening day, for the benefit of the association. As he has been styled "The most persuasive orator of all history," a treat is anticipated.

Transportation rates are an important factor, and we thank the Western Passenger Association that we can say to the people that a rate of fare and one-third has been granted on the certificate plan, from all points in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri. Tickets must show purchase of going on July 27—August 2, inclusive, and on each Tuesday and Friday thereafter during the meeting, which begins July 30 and closes August 27. Ask your agent for a certificate when purchasing ticket.

The Diamond Jo line of steamers plying the "Father of Waters," between St. Louis and St. Paul, has granted one-half fare transportation for round trip from all way landings. These facts reduce the expense of a summer vacation very considerably, while each passing moment the scene changes, and new charms break upon the enraptured gaze.

We are the recipient of many letters of inquiry concerning the mediums who are to be upon the grounds this season. As before stated, the management does not engage, or make a practice of especially inviting any particular phase of mediumship aside from the test mediums that are named on the program. A cordial invitation is extended to all alike to come and be one with us—come and stand upon your own merit. There is nothing in all the world so helpful to the soul's unfoldment as the freedom of the individual. The freedom to express our conviction, for in giving, we receive; the freedom to be ourselves, and not slaves to "dead men's opinions," or apes of living ones; the freedom to question everywhere and all times, concerning what we would know, and the freedom to live our own lives according to our highest ideals, is the most glorious freedom of all.

Friends, your way may not be that of another's—in fact the highest light of another may be mere darkness to you, yet there is an exquisite joy even then in the thought that all these differences go to make the grandest harmonies.

When reading the many criticisms concerning the phenomena of Spiritualism, I have thought, with all its "Tyranny of Darkness" we need not despair. Were there never another physical manifestation produced, we have a philosophy, a religion superior to all other religions and in this are more blest than our neighbors. Let us appreciate what we have at hand.

I have every assurance there will be mediums at the park this season, who are ready and willing to give to hungry souls that bread of life which will sustain and nourish, mediums through whose organism the friends from the celestial shore will come and in communion sweet live over, as it were, many happy incidents of their earth experience. "No good thing is a failure, no evil thing a success.

Double Birthday Anniversary Celebrated at "Floral Heights."

Monday, June 26, was a gala day at Floral Heights, in commemoration of the double birthday anniversary of Miss Lois Elizabeth Fish, youngest daughter of John T. and Theresa B. Fish, of Fallsington, Pa., and her aunt, Miss Elizabeth M. Fish.

Since the little maiden spent the first anniversary of her birth here five years ago, each year has been celebrated by a family reunion at this place on the 26th day of June.

One special feature of this recent celebration was the dedication of a Rose Bower of fifty crimson rambler vines. Around a center pole fifteen feet high, a rustic frame twelve feet in diameter has been placed, and over this the fifty rose vines are to be trained; four of which are now in bloom, the rest are but tiny plants, but with their rapid growth in two or three years they will make indeed a Bower of Beauty. Over the arched doorway on a golden beam are placed five shining letters of her name—"Lois E." In this the little lassie was seated, in her great-great-grandfather's old arm chair, to which was attached a white canopy, decorated with red roses, then crowned with a wreath of the same bright flowers, "our little queen of hearts." Around her stood six little maids of honor, each holding in her hand red roses and other sweet flowers. Miss Elizabeth M. Fish then dedicated this rosy bower to her little niece, by voicing an original poem, and with sweet blossoms christened it the "Lois E." In the latter she was assisted by the little maids of honor, who lovingly laid their flowers in the lap of their little queen; after which two of them, Lillian and Esther Greenlee, sang a sweet song about the roses. All the little maidens were fittingly arrayed in white, and with the red roses all about them, and their sweet faces shining with delight, they made a beautiful living picture long to be remembered by those who witnessed the same. After the dedication services dinner was served, followed with ice cream and cake, to which all did full justice.

On this occasion the family reunion was complete, four generations—each member being present—from Joseph Fish, who is eighty-one years of age, to his little great-grand-daughter, Miss Theresa Ellen Cooper. Beside these there were a few other relatives and friends, the following being present at dinner:—Joseph Fish and daughter, Miss Elizabeth M. Fish, John T. Fish and wife, Miss Lois E. Fish, John Cooper and wife, Miss Theresa E. Cooper, LeRoy Wildman and wife, Miss Theresa H. Fish, Andrew Smith and wife, Mrs. George DeCoursey, Mrs. R. F. Adams, and the Maids of Honor: Miss Lillian Greenlee, Miss Esther Greenlee, Miss Marjorie Dunn, Miss Mildred Dunn, Miss Marguerite Watson, and Miss Minnie Wilkie. Beside these, all through the day there were callers at Floral Heights with good wishes and kind remembrances of the day, and the two in whose honor they assembled were the recipients of many handsome and useful presents, all of which was greatly appreciated.

HOW IT IS DONE.

Fake Work in Spirit Photography.

To the Editor:—Mr. Ambrose Young's letter, as it appeared in The Progressive Thinker of July 1, needs correcting. I know all the parties mentioned therein, and can diagnose their conditions. Mr. Young says in the letter referred to: "The medium [Mr. Chas. Fredrickson] has a beautiful picture of himself with Prof. Denton, Franklin and Faraday as an aureola around his head, taken by Mr. Wylie, the photographic medium of Los Angeles."

Mr. Wylie, the photo medium, as he chooses to call himself, now engaged at Mineral Park camp, is only a trick photographer.

I know Mr. Wylie well.

Years ago when he had his rooms on Spring street, in this city, I visited him frequently, being at that time interested in spirit pictures. One day while in his rooms I had occasion to go into a back room, and there I SAW MR. WYLIE'S SPIRITS PILED UP BY THE HUNDREDS; THEY WERE NOT LIVE SPIRITS, JUST IMAGES ON GLASS, BOTH OF ANCIENT AND MODERN CHARACTERS. Since then, I have never wanted any spirit photographs.

Mr. William E. Robinson, author of "Spirit Slate-Writing and Kindred Phenomena," says that images on glass can be transferred two ways:

First—The glass with the desired spirit picture upon it could be placed in the plate holder, in front of the sensitive plate, so that the image of the glass would act on the sensitive plate. The size and distinctness of the spirit form would vary according to the distance between the two plates.

Second—A glass with the desired spirit image can be placed behind the sensitive plate after the sitting is completed, and afterward, by a feeble light the image can be impressed upon the plate with that of the sitter."

Mr. Robinson further states that when a skeptic brings his own plate for the negative, it can be done this way: "A microscopic picture of the spirit form can be inserted in the camera box alongside the lens and by a small magnifying lens its image can be thrown on the sensitive plate with that of the sitter."

The spirit photograph referred to, with Prof. Denton, Franklin and Faraday on it—posing there as Mr. Fredrickson's guides, ought to have been evidence enough that it had been manufactured by Mr. Wylie.

Mr. Fredrickson entertaining the notion that he is selected by the spirit world to do a great work was, of course, an ideal subject, and Mr. Wylie with the characteristic shrewdness of his profession, perceiving Mr. Fredrickson's wants, gave him the very best batch of guides in stock, namely, Prof. Denton, Franklin and Faraday; and so, these great men's names are dragged down and belittled, to satisfy the vanity of a silly Spiritualist.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 22, 1905. NO. 817

IN MEMORIAM.

The Death and Resurrection of Dr. E. D. Babbitt.

A pathetic letter just received from Katherine Babbitt, daughter of Dr. Babbitt, informs me that her father passed to spirit life, June 28—passed, to speak Masonically, from "labor to refreshment."

Surely a great and good man in our spiritual Israel has fallen. The news of Dr. Babbitt's death at Rochester, N. Y.,—so undesired, so unexpected—literally shocked me for the moment; and my first thought was, "It cannot be possible." His noble work on earth was not completed. He had extensive plans for the future, and though his books will constitute a lasting monument to his memory, further writings from his polished pen were needed. The thinking, reading public called for them.

For a full quarter of a century I have known him intimately, and it is sad to think that the hand which so readily responded to the psychic touch of the higher intelligences of the heavens, is now cold in death.

But why do I grieve? It is because I am human. It is natural. It is the uprising of sympathy. It is the emotion of a deep, profound friendship for a brother, and a friendship, too, pure and unselfish, based upon principle.

I know Dr. Babbitt in New York, New Jersey, in Cincinnati, in California—and what is more, I knew him in his home, the hospitable home of himself and his good wife, so devoted, so self-sacrificing—truly a helpmeet. Put it down as weakness, if you will, but my eyes are brimming with tears. It is neither well nor wise to dissemble. I cannot for the moment check my sorrow. Friendship, infinitely more than acquaintance, is abiding; and true, fraternal love is absolutely immortal. It is not for friend Babbitt that I mourn, but for his affectionate wife, his near relatives, and that spiritual line of scientific work relating to a broad, rational, religious Spiritualism, in which he was so enthusiastically engaged. While appreciating and holding in high esteem my co-workers, I cannot call to mind one who can take up the work where he left it, and conduct it to the success which he had so carefully, hopefully planned during his latter years.

No, Dr. Babbitt is not dead. He—the spirit in that more ethereal soul-body, has gone on and up, one step higher, where aided by his scientific spirit intelligences, he will doubtless find some sensitive through whom he can impressionally and successfully finish his great outlined, unfinished work.

In his private life he was as simple as a child, finding the happiest part of it with his delightful wife, whom he loved with unusual tenderness. He was honest. He was conscientious. He was hospitable to a degree beyond his finances. Naturally he was a man of strong yet subdued feeling and firm convictions, and yet I am certain that he cherished no animosity toward a solitary human being. He bore with him a strong personality, and yet his nature was genial and truly uplifting. Nature gave him the qualities essential to liberalism and moral excellence. His was a severe struggle out of that church octopus, which still has a withering grip upon so many. But his victory over creeds and confessions of faith was in the end complete.

I remember of his saying to me when briefly visiting him in Los Angeles: "While my good wife gets breakfast, I read to her from your 'Three Journeys Around the World,' and from The Progressive Thinker. What a broad field in the line of research and progress Francis' paper covers! There is none other like it."

His exhaustive and very scholarly work on "The Principles of Light and Color" was enough of itself to make him in the world's libraries immortal. Those who criticised it adversely were not competent to understand it. This is often the case with self-conceited critics. His several works upon health are invaluable, and away beyond the medical profession; and his book of nearly 400 pages entitled "Religion," is one of the most helpful and practical ever published in the interests of Spiritualism.

We did not always agree in our thoughts and theories, but there was never an unkind, disturbing element in our discussions. His charity, touching human nature was unbounded. Let me say here, quoting the Latin, "Nil de mortuis nisi bonum," meaning, liberally translated, "Speak nothing but good of the dead." Would not this be better if largely applied to the living also? Why not scatter flowers at the feet of men and women to-day, as well as to lavishly cover their caskets with them after theor bodies are dead?

Where are many of my early comrades? Where are those old pioneers, Prof. Hare, Judge Edmonds, Adin Ballou, Prof. Buchanan, Sargent, Denton, Brittan, Prof. Kiddle, and now Dr. Babbitt? Gone, one by one, leaving behind the odor of soul-royalty and loyalty to truth—gone to swell the unnumbered congregations of the star-crowned mortals. Thinking of them, seeing them through the mists of old-time memories, my spirit grows stout, my nerves become steeled anew, and my heart flames with enthusiasm afresh to continue the campaign that they inaugurated and baptised with the sweat-drops of suffering and persecution. Though they are risen, and though their white feet press the evergreen gardens of the gods, their souls still vibrate in sympathy with ours. Memory is undying. Spirits know little of time or space. Recalling the past and recounting the deeds of those old moral heroes and martyrs, my eyes moisten. And I almost impatiently await the summons when crossing the river with the boatman pale; I shall clasp their hands in that more radiant realm where death never comes, where flowers never wither, and suns never set.

THE SEPARATION.

The time has come, as I knew it must.
She said, when we should part;
For I ceased to love when I ceased to trust,
And you cannot break my heart.
Nay, I know not even if I am sad,
And it must be for the best,
Since you only take what I thought I had,
And leave to me the rest.

THE INGERSOLL TRIBUTE TO SHAKESPEARE.

A tribute to specific genius that deserves annual reproduction at least is that of Robert G. Ingersoll to Shakespeare. It reads as follows:

"If Shakespeare knew one fact, he knew its kindred and its neighbors. Looking at a coat of mail, he instantly imagined the society, the conditions that produced it and what it, in turn, produced. He saw the castle, the moat, the drawbridge, the lady in the tower, and the knightly lover spurring across the plain. He saw the bold baron and the rude retainer, the trampled serf and all the glory and the grief of feudal life.

"He lived the life of all. He was a citizen of Athens in the days of Pericles. He listened to the eager eloquence of the great orator, sat upon the cliffs, and with the tragic poet heard the multitudinous laughter of the sea. He saw Socrates thrust the spear of question through the shield and heart of falsehood. He was present when the great man drank hemlock, and met the night of death tranquil as a star meets morning. He listened to the peripatetic philosophers, and was unpuzzled by the sophists. He watched Phidias as he chiseled shapeless stone to forms of love and awe.

"He lived by the mysterious Nile, amid the vast and monstrous. He knew the very thought that wrought the form and features of the Sphinx. He heard great Memnon's song when marble lips were smitten by the sun. He laid him down with the embalmed and waiting dead, and felt within their dust the expectation of another life, mingled with cold and suffocating doubts—the children born of long delay.

"He walked the ways of mighty Rome and saw great Caesar with his legions in the field. He stood with vast and motley throngs and watched the triumphs given to victorious men, followed by uncrowned kings, the captured hosts, and all the spoils of ruthless war. He heard the shout that shook the Coliseum's roofless walls when from the reeling gladiator's hands the short sword fell, while from his bosom gushed the stream of wasted life.

"He lived the life of savage men. He trod the forest's silent depths, and in the desperate game of life or death he matched his thought against the instinct of the beast.

"He knew all crimes and all regrets, all virtues, and their rich rewards. He was victim and victor, pursuer and pursued, outcast and king. He heard the applause and curses of the world, and on his heart had fallen all the nights and noons of failure and success.

"He knew the unspoken thoughts, the dumb desires, the wants, and ways of beasts. He felt the crouching tiger's thrill, the terror of the ambushed prey, and with the eagles he had shared the ecstasy of flight and poise and swoop, and he had lain with sluggish serpents on the barren rocks, uncoiling slowly in the heat of noon.

"He sat beneath the bo tree's contemplative shade, wrapped in Buddha's mighty thought, and dreamed all dreams that light, the alchemist, has wrought from dust and dew, and stored within the slumbrous poppy's subtle blood.

"He knelt with awe and dread at every shrine—he offered every sacrifice, and every prayer—felt the consolation and the shuddering fear, mocked and worshiped all the gods, enjoyed all heavens, and felt the pangs of every hell.

"He lived all lives, and through his blood and brain there crept the shadow and the chill of every death, and his soul, like Mazeppa, was lashed to the wild horses of every fear and love and hate.

"The Imagination had a stage in Shakespeare's brain, whereon were set all scenes that lie between the morn of laughter and the night of tears, and where his players bodied forth the false and true, the joys and griefs, the careless shalows, and the tragic deeps of universal life.

"From Shakespeare's brain there poured a Niagara of gems spanned by Fancy's seven hued arch. He was as many sided as clouds are many-formed. To him giving was hoarding—sowing was harvest—and waste itself the source of wealth. Within his marvelous mind were the fruits of all thought past, the seeds of all to be. As a drop of dew contains the image of the earth and sky, so all there is of life was mirrored forth in Shakespeare's brain.

"Shakespeare was an intellectual ocean, whose waves touched all the shores of thought, within which were all the tides and waves of destiny and will, over which swept all the storms of fate, ambition, and revenge; upon which fell the gloom and darkness of despair and death and all the sunlight of content and love, and within which was the inverted sky lit with the eternal stars—an intellectual ocean—toward which all rivers ran, and from which now the isles and continents of thought receive their dew and rain."

IT IS NOT IMPAIRED.

Home Life Not Impaired Through Woman's Interest in Public Affairs.

The great fear that the participation of women in public affairs will impair the quality and character of home service is irrational and contrary to the tests of experience. Does an intelligent interest in the education of a child render a woman less a mother? Does the housekeeping instinct of woman manifested in a desire for clean streets, pure water and unadulterated food destroy her efficiency as a home-maker? Does a desire for an environment of moral and civic purity show neglect of the highest good of the family? It is the "men must fight and women must weep" theory of life which makes men fear that the larger service of women will impair the high ideal of home. The newer ideal that men must cease fighting and thus remove one prolific cause for women's weeping, and that they shall together build up a more perfect home and a more ideal government, is infinitely more sane and desirable. Participation in the larger and broader concerns of the state, will increase instead of decrease the efficiency of motherhood, and tend to dovelop that self-control, that more perfect judgment which is wanting in much of the home training of to-day.—From annual address of Rev. Anna H. Shaw, president National Woman Suffrage Association.

Fragments of Truth.

As Portrayed by a Master Mind.

Those that feel the most speak the most. Some men speak to a single class, or to a particular time, while others utter the thoughts, aspirations and desires of all classes and times. Through such men as Job, David, Homer, Dante, Shakspeare, we can read the spiritual and real histories, experiences, and conflicts of the men and women of the world;—they speak to the universal heart and mind of mankind.

Magpies chatter, parrots talk, bears can learn to dance, monkeys to gracefully lift their caps and bow their heads, and this is about all a large portion of mankind is ambitious to perform. The great body of the people take their opinions second hand and long years of submission to the will of others make them obsequious in thought and action. These conditions are transmitted from generation to generation. The son knows no more than the father. Illiteracy becomes chronic.

Some men are born to serve, others to command.

"Kings must have slaves;
Kings climb to eminence
Over men's graves."

You stamp a hundred years of servitude upon a race or any body of people and its effects can never be effaced. The African slave and the Russian serf are terrible examples. It takes courage to assert one's self. Hypocrisy is more acceptable to community than outspoken conviction. A man's associates are altogether a better index to his character than his talk.

If words were wisdom there would be no need of books or teachers. If protestations of honor and morality were the things themselves there would be no use for missionaries and preachers. If a person walks erect through this world, with an honest heart, speaks his own mind on men and things, and on all questions as they arise, he is ostracised, condemned, and forbidden the confidence of the people among whom he lives. Christ did this and he was crucified, and human nature is the same today as it was then.

We put too much stress on a high state of civilization. It is doubtful if the virtues and vices of barbaric life are not as evenly balanced as they are in civilized society. Life is dual; one condition balances another. As our enjoyments increase, so does our misery. There is nothing more contradictory than the forces at work in our own hearts. Our moods vary. The trouble that is a mountain today becomes a molehill tomorrow. The words we speak in one moment we cannot utter in the next.

It is the one-sided, unbalanced men that have accomplished the most in the great activities of life—men, often, whose lives would not square with the Decalogue, the Sermon on the Mount, or the Golden Rule.

Most of the great names in history would fall from the high pedestal on which mankind has placed them if their private life was as well known to the people as their public acts. Open up the hearts, unveil the words, thoughts and feelings of humanity for one day to the public gaze and society would fall to pieces;—the most sacred ties would be broken and strange alliances made.

We don't want human nature pictured to us in too angelic a form. It is said of Edward Everett that he "painted for us a deified Washington, passionless, colorless, bloodless, and possessing none of the human faculties or infirmities." The living are never appreciated; it is only the dead that receive their full meed of praise.

"Seven Grecian cities claimed great Homer dead
Through which the living Homer begged his bread."

The grandest things both in nature and art show best at a distance. The same is true in regard to the men who have helped to fashion and mould the destinies of the world. A man becomes the founder of a race, a hero, saint, prophet, god, and family fades into a myth. Adam, a myth; Odin, the Scandinavian god, a myth; Job, a myth; Homer, Buddha—all myths.

But does it matter whether or not such men as Job ever lived, or whether he was the author of the book bearing his name? The record is the same. The feeling, the sentiment, the history and experience are all there.

Carlyle speaking about the book of Job says: "I call that, apart from all theories about it, one of the grandest things ever written with pen. * * * It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending problem—man's destiny and God's ways with him here in this earth. * * * There is nothing written, I think, in the bible or out of it, of equal literary merit."

The fame of some men wanes, while others brighten,—but the end of all is oblivion. All things have their day and pass away. It takes long years, sometimes, to understand a man or an institution. The beauty of the gem cannot be detected if too near the eye.

Genius is always a puzzle, an enigma, an unknown quantity. What are called defects in a person's life may be the necessary accompaniments of his virtues. Again Carlyle says, "What are faults, what are the outward details of life if the inner secret of it, the remorse, temptation, true, often-baffled, never ending struggle of it, be forgotten? * * * In this wild element of life, he has to struggle onwards; now fallen, deep-abased and ever, with tears, repentance, with bleeding heart, he has to rise again, struggle again still onwards."

Every belief, custom and habit runs its course and dies. Saviors were born before Christ. Moses was not the only child that was miraculously saved to become the leader of a people. The world has always been trying to define God,—to locate Christ.

"What is the Christ of God?
It is his touch, his sign, his making known.
His coming forth from out the all—alone.
The stretching of a rod
Abloom with his intent.
From the invisible."

It has been said that at the head of every institution stands a man. All beginnings are natural and simple. Nations, governments and doctrines are not made to order but grow as naturally as any living thing grows. Whatever doctrine, sentiment or command that is false in spirit and essence cannot live. None of the great religions of the world have been intellectually reasoned out. Every condition of society in time loses its vital power and yields to superior force. Civilization derives its life and power from primitive sources, crude and rudimentary as they may be. Civilization and refinement enervate a race. The virgin soil is always the most fruitful. Physical strength and endurance in the end triumph over a weakened and a decadent people.

"Barbarians that could neither read nor write devoured Rome." It takes many words of polite language to express the same volume of truth that a single slang phrase will convey. But what are called slang words soon become common speech and good English and in the end are woven into the classics.

The foundation of every fable is truth. First hero worship, idol worship—were only paving the way for a higher and more exalted conception of man's relation to the Deity. Falsehood cannot forever last even in tradition. There are connecting links in all history. Is there no relation between Yorktown and Appomattox? Between Uncle Tom's Cabin and the Emancipation Proclamation? There seem to be order and method among the unseen forces of life as well as among the visible ones. Cause and effect keep even pace.

In the physical world some movements are so swift and some so slow that we fail to comprehend them. The vibratory movement of matter composing the stone is so slow that our sight cannot perceive it, and the stone appears dead and motionless, while the action of the gases is so rapid as to make us oblivious to their presence.

Except in the realm of religion man refuses to believe what his reason or experience cannot justify. Faith holds but small ground in the secular world; yet the time may come when many of the phenomena heretofore classified as miracles may be susceptible of scientific demonstration. Every day brings new light. Healing by the laying on of hands is not now incredible.

Life it is claimed has or will be produced in the laboratory, and who can say that it is impossible, under any circumstances, for the vital spark which apparently has abdicated its throne in the body to again take possession of its tenement of clay? The world moves slowly towards new ideas. After the circulation of blood was announced and demonstrated, it was fifty years before the scientific (?) world would accept it as a fact." A change of position on a religious, political or scientific question is often charged as evidence of a weak, erratic and vacillating mind. Webster once said, "Wise men can change their minds; fools never."

Noah Brooks speaking of the great political leaders says: "We recall, too, the fact that Calhoun was a protectionist in 1816; in 1831 he denounced the protective principle as unconstitutional and oppressive to the South. So, too, Clay, who had, in 1810, furnished Andrew Jackson with anti-bank arguments, found it convenient and consistent, in 1828, to make the cause of the bank his own. And Daniel Webster, on nearly every one of these burning questions of the time, changed his God-like front with equal ease."

To be consistent according to the popular interpretation is to hold always the same ideas; ignoring the fact that all knowledge is tentative and changing. Truth has no boundaries. "Man grows and his ideal grows. It is to-day's ideal that he cannot reach, and for the yesterday's he will not stoop." Onward, ever onward—are the watchwords of progress. Agitation, convulsions, revolutions purify society. Great souls are always restless agitated souls.

Those that feel the most speak the most. Some men speak to a single class, or to a particular time, while others utter the thoughts, aspirations and desires of all classes and times. Through such men as Job, David, Homer, Dante, Shakspeare, we can read the spiritual and real histories, experiences, and conflicts of the men and women of the world;—they speak to the universal heart and mind of mankind.

It is what a man represents that makes him great; if he stands for a principle that is incarnate in the hearts of the people—all minor differences vanish. Even his weaknesses, sometimes, assume a virtuous and blameless aspect. Whatever the faults of Napoleon were his life could not be omitted from the page of history without great loss to civilization. He filled the niche prepared for him. But he was neither the maker nor the instigator of the Revolution, only one of the consequences that arose from the conditions that produced it, and when the work that destiny had planned for him was accomplished, Napoleon as an actor upon the scene, sank out of sight but not the principle that had brought about this mighty upheaval of society.

Allen, in his history of Civilization, speaking of the events that led up to this "great conflagration," says, "In that lurid glare, how strangely stands out the figure of Napoleon Bonaparte! Look again, as the smoke of Waterloo clears away, Napoleon, the individual, has disappeared. But not so the idea leading up to the Revolution itself. The rights of the privileged classes received a blow, and scarcely fifty years later we see nearly every country in Europe wresting constitutions from their governments."

There are single moments in time that became historic.—Luther appearing before the Diet of Worms, John Brown standing upon the scaffold, Lincoln, pen in hand, signing the Emancipation Proclamation—transactions that mark epochs in history. "When the sun went down on Calvary," says the last-quoted author, "and the terror-stricken apostles sought safety in flight, bold indeed would have been the prophet who ventured to assert that in three centuries the Roman Empire would acknowledge the Christian as the state religion. Yet that is what came to pass."

I have read of a fabric in India woven of so fine and delicate a thread that the people there call it Woven Wind. History, character, all that pertains to our existence is made up of as fine a texture. Incidents which at the time they occur seem to come along in the natural current of events—as passing phases of life that would leave no permanent impression become indelible, and in time prove to be crises and turning points in one's career.

The panorama of daily cares, hopes, disappointments and fruitions, move so rapidly, the pictures pass before us so swiftly, we have opportunity for catching only a passing glance. It matters not what you have done to-day, new and greater things are expected at your hands to-morrow. No individual ever reaches the limit of his ambition. The promised land is always before us. Hope never dies. Yet happiness is only a dream, a vision, a mirage;—it looks real and tangible, but it is non-existing; it never exists except in the imagination. Out of the millions of people on the earth no two have the same hopes, desires and aspirations. Each is striving for a different goal; but amid all this diversity of thought, feeling and purpose there are above all these, common ties that bind humanity together as one.

"Flowers of all hue are struggling into glow
Along the blooming fields,
Yet their sweet strife
Melts into one harmonious concord."

BEAUTIFUL MARRIAGE CEREMONY

Spiritualist Twain Weds With Flowers—No "Obey" Was Asked—"Where Love Is There Is No Obligation," Said Minister to Youthful Pair, "Love Each Feels for the Other Is the Bond of Union"—Roses Vital on Bearing in Life.

Red Roses, signifying love, white roses, emblematic of purity, and the green leaves of the flowers symbolizing life, figured in the wedding ceremony that made Miss Grace Leonard Powell and George William Weinberger one at the Temple of Spiritualism, 3015 Pine street, Wednesday night.

It was the first time that the floral service had been used in St. Louis and the Rev. Will J. Erwood explained in the lecture preceding the ceremony that flowers should be made much more vital in their bearing on human life than is the case at present.

"The time will come," he said, "when refined and uplifted by gentler teaching, we shall hold converse with a rose and comprehend the message of the whispering forest trees. We are closer akin to nature than we have heretofore confessed, and all things are a part of our great family."

Therefore when the opening bars of the Lohengrin wedding march began to sound from the organ, their increasing volume filling the church by degrees, it was known that a wedding of peculiar interest was about to take place. Preceded by six little girls, who had until then been on the platform, and all of whom carried red and white roses, massed against green leaves, in their hands, the bridal couple came down the center aisle. They were a youthful twain, the bridegroom apparently not more than 20 years of age, the bride, all in white and with her bridal veil almost touching the hem of her gown, about 17.

The Rev. Erwood, himself bearing a red and white rose in his right hand, awaited them at the chancel rail. He too, was young, a boyish looking teacher of his creed, and the little group thus assembled was in striking contrast to the many white-haired folk appearing in the gathering assembled to witness the ceremony.

"George," said the Spiritualist minister, "I will not ask you to promise to to cherish, protect or obey this little girl, because where love is there is no obligation. It is not the ceremony that will unite you two, but the love which each feels for the other is the bond of union. I will only ask you to be true to yourself, to what is highest and best in you. Do you so promise?"

"I do," responded the groom.

"Grace," said the minister, "I will not ask you to obey this young man who stands beside you, because, where love is there is no obedience, and there is no master and no mistress and no slave in the relations in which you two will hereafter stand toward one another. But I will ask you, as I asked him, to be true to the best and noblest that is within your own self. Do you promise this?"

"I do," responded the bride.

"Then," said the minister, handing a ring to the bridegroom, who placed it on the bride's finger, "with the placing of this ring, whose circle to my mind means the endlessness of love, on the finger of the woman by the man, I, with the authority conferred upon me by the State and National Government, and with that further authority which I bear as a minister of the Spiritualist Society, do pronounce you man and wife."

And these words marked the conclusion of the ceremony.

For ten minutes afterward the young couple held a sort of informal reception in the Temple, the invited guests and members of the local Spiritualist Society crowding about them to extend congratulations, the newly married pair moving away from the altar along a path strewn with flowers by the little girls who had led the wedding march.

The marriage ceremony had been preceded by a lecture in which the Rev. Erwood looked into the future and told of the wonderful things that were to come. At the close of the lecture a number of persons were admitted to membership in the society, each being given a red and white rose by one of the little flower girls in token of full membership. Just before the congregation dispersed the Rev. Erwood spoke a word of farewell, as the lecture Wednesday night was his last for the season the society's regular minister, the Rev. Thomas Grimshaw, being due to return from Europe soon.—St. Louis (Mo.) Post.

THE GREAT STRUGGLE.

Christianity vs. Spiritualism.

It is said a majority of Spiritualists are converts from the churches, and many get the old religious ideas mixed and confused with their Spiritualism, in speaking and writing. This is expected. We concede to all the right and liberty to believe or disbelieve anything, and freely express their thoughts and sentiments on any subject. But when leaders and teachers of long standing reiterate false statements, in the name of Spiritualism, it is a shame, hardly tolerable.

I want to correct a few mistakes and convince them of the error of their ways, so far as fair and logical argument may be available.

It is said, "Christianity and Spiritualism must stand or fall together."

It is impossible to verify this sweeping assertion. No two things are more opposite, more unlike each other. They have never stood together and cannot fall together. One is based on faith, the other on knowledge.

Christianity teaches that only through grace, postulated upon blood atonement, can any person be saved. Spiritualism declares that position to be totally false, and that the future welfare of every one depends upon their own personal effort and merit—that no penalty is remitted, no benefit conferred, no evil averted by the merits of a savior.

Spiritualism and Christianity bear no relation, nor affiliation nor assimilation. Conversion to Spiritualism is not conversion to Christian religion. "Christian Spiritualism" is a misnomer. A "Christian Spiritualist" is a contradiction of words—an abnormal condition. Spiritualism is dependent upon mediumship and communication with the spirit world, not recognized by Christians, who charge it with fraud, delusion, witchcraft, work of the devil.

Christendom is comprised of creeds, sects, churches, laws, offices, accouterments, ceremonies, baptisms, reverends, priests, rituals, and the like. Spiritualism contains none of these. To place it on a par with Christianity puts it in a false attitude and sinks it to the level of superstition. It can never rank with the churches for its demonstrated facts destroy the basis of all church creeds. It stands before them as a fair and honorable opponent and proves that communication with spirits is a fact, which they deny.

Spiritualism demonstrates the continuity of life, spirit existence, spirit communication, knowledge of the spirit world through mediumship. Christianity does not and cannot do this. It has corrected false conceptions of a future life; destroyed the basis of religious creeds by substituting knowledge for faith; emancipates from fear; robs death of its terrors; opens the door that makes plain the mysteries of life—the key to the door of truth that sheds its cheering light over all races, for all. The difference between Spiritualism and any of the old religions is more pronounced than any one of them with another. They commence with God; demand unquestioning obedience; rest every doctrine upon Divine authority; teach miraculism—while Spiritualism begins with man; proclaims the largest liberty; relies upon scientific demonstration; denounces miraculism as the creation of ignorant superstition and in the nature of things impossible.

Christianity is what it is represented by Christian devotees, believers, adherents; by various sects; by what Christians say and do; by what they have said, taught, acted in the past—this is Christendom. Its fundamental principle is salvation by faith in a crucified savior and damnation in hell fire for all who do not accept this salvation.

Christian religion has been propagated by force and has the stain of blood upon its history. Spiritualism has no such record.

Belief in a god has led men to the most terrible crimes and diabolical deeds that history records. The war-like disposition of Christian nations is attributable to blood atonement. It seems strange that mankind should ever build a religious system upon an idea so horrible as that of murder.

It is lucky for civilization that Christianity is divided into warring sects. It is a solemn farce, an empty show, a delusion. It has set a tyrant on its throne and made religion slavish homage to what his chosen priests demand. It is for religious leaders a profitable fraud upon the credulity and infatuation of their victims.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE

The Belief in Woman Suffrage Rapidly Gaining Ground.

Those who have contended that woman suffrage is a dying cause would have had their theories somewhat shattered had they listened to the reports of the officers of the National Woman Suffrage Association at their annual convention which has just closed in Portland, Oregon.

More than 200 new societies have been organized the past year and 339 associations, outside the woman suffrage association, have either adopted woman suffrage resolutions, or given favorable attention to the cause in some manner.

The treasurer's report showed the total receipts to have been $28,622 the past year. The largest contribution from any one person was $500 from Mrs. Sarah L. Willis of Rochester, N. Y., and the second largest was $400 from Mrs. Elmira Springer of Chicago, Illinois.

The gain in membership has been 20 percent the past year, Kansas taking the lead in making the greatest percent. gain. New York state has the largest membership. Ten years ago the Association had only 30 life members, today it has over 230. In order to become a life member one must pay $50 dollars into the treasury.

The very fact that so many societies organized for almost every conceivable kind of work are giving favorable thought to the subject, shows that the idea is rapidly taking root in the minds of thinking people, who, when they come to work along reformatory lines soon discover that they are very materially hampered in their efforts, through the lack of influence which comes with the ballot.

SOME STRIKING THOUGHTS.

The Great Murderer's Record—When Trouble Comes.

There are, approximately, eighty millions of people in the United States. If one person is born each minute, and if one person "dies" each minute, 525,600 people pass out of this life annually; while an equal number come into this plane of existence.

Now, if we accept the statement of preachers that "man is inclined to evil as the sparks fly upward," at least three fourths of the 525,600 persons are theologically "lost," or sent to "hell" by the Great Murderer each year! What is the exact number of his victims? Let us see. Three-fourths of 525,600 is 394,200. Then this Great Murderer (the "kind father," the "merciful one," the "creator," the "lord," the "God" of the Christians) murders 394,200 persons each year in the United States alone!

Quite a record of red-handedness! Yet the Christians would wish us to worship their Great Murderer!

The theory that "the king can do no wrong" passes from men's minds when the sun of Truth rises over the horizon of Investigation and drives the miasmatic fogs of Ignorance from the Valley of Thought. We now know that murder is the same—a crime—whether committed by a so-called "Almighty Father" or by the most depraved criminals.

It is only when we have learned to discern truth that we fully realize the depravity contained in the worship of a murdering God, for such worship is the old the-king-can-do-no-wrong theory in its most pernicious form.

When Trouble Comes.

Is it the voice of the friend, to whom we gave our time and attention and perhaps coin of the realm, that speaks to us words of cheer when our material wealth, our houses and lands, have parted company with us? No. It is the voice of an invisible counselor which says: "Well, well! Here you are, lamenting the loss of your toys again! Why, I'm surprised! Have you not yourself? Well, then, you possess the key to wealth. Get right up and hustle. Many employers are looking for you. They are in need of an employe who can do the kind of work you know so well how to perform properly. Go! Why tarry here mourning when the world's work must be done? When you get that job, save your money. Yes, save it. That's the secret of success."

Young man, have you ever "been there?" The poet has said that "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," but there have been times in the writer's life when even hope failed, but at such times the words of the counselor always set matters right again.

Perhaps you call the counselor "Conscience." Well, that's all right, but isn't the voice real to you—are not the words spoken by this adviser just a shade wiser than you would think "Conscience" capable of expressing? Of course, if you are religiously inclined—a real goody-goody boy—you will think the voice is that of your favorite god. What's that you say? You have only one god? Well, that's what the fellow on the other side of the earth says, too. Religion is a matter of geographical location, you know. That's all the difference. The counselor won't be offended if you think his voice is that of a god—your god.

When your black brother in the jungle of Africa paints a stick with the blood of an enemy, and sets it upright in the soft mud of a river bank facing the rising sun, and then prostrates himself before it, that voice comes to him—his guide speaks to him—and he attributes it to his favorite god, the blood-besmeared stick, same as you think the voice comes from your god, whom you were taught to believe has his residence somewhere up high, so high and far away that you don't quite comprehend its location. The savage African is just as near correct in his views as you have been. Each of you two god-worshipers will discover the error of his ways later—much later.

In the meantinme you will think the writer is really blasphemous. So would the African if the writer were to kick over the blood-stained stick, for you must know these pet gods are to be treated with great consideration, especially by the skeptical persons who dare to be mentally free from the degrading fear-bondage which so retards the progression of you and the African. Yes, gods are back numbers now—all kinds of god's, yours included.

Yes, rely on common sense. Reason is vastly older than preachers and favorite gods. Let us seek to know ourselves and our capabilities; let us develop our powers of perception, that we may know rather than believe.

THE IMPORTANT QUESTION.

The Real Problem to Be Settled Concerning Women.

The question which confronts the modern woman is not what were the qualities which best fitted Eve for the Garden of Eden, but what are the requirements of a woman to meet and solve the problems of the 20th century. The presumption is always against the present fitness of the type which was perfectly adapted to the conditions which are obsolete or passing; therefore it is not by discussing the problem of whether women are fair or "unfair in judgment"; whether politics are pure or impure; whether women in the past were or were not satisfied with their position which will settle the question of woman's right to perfect equality in a representative government. The question is, "Does freedom tend to develop fairness, make humanity more just, develop character, give a larger, broader, saner view of life, and does responsibility which the ballot brings develop self-control, self-respect and a higher sense of justice in dealing with others? In a word, are the results of freedom better for humanity than those of slavery? If so, then there can be no question as to its effect in the development of women, and there is no class of citizens who need its power in the development of those characteristics which fit them for the high vocation and service of life to which the majority of women are dedicated, than the mother who sits in judgment more frequently than the judge on the bench that she may be able to render just decisions at a period of a child's life when lessons of justice and fair play are of greater importance than when rendered in later years.—From the annual address of Rev. Anna H. Shaw, president National Woman Suffrage Association.

Court of Inquiry.

The Court of Inquiry.

For a number of weeks we have convened the Court of Inquiry in these columns, and not only have we found each session of special interest to our readers, but there has been shown a great advance in the trend of feeling and inquiry regarding the phenomena of Spiritualism and more especially the phase known as materialization. We have found the key-note to be "Truth, Pure and Simple." Truth, be it ever so small, and only Truth. This is no "fraud hunt," but a calm, serious consideration of a vital question, and Spiritualism must profit by it.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

Radical Remedies

To the Editor:—Of all the good things that I have read in the Religio-Philosophical Journal and The Progressive Thinker, from your pen, I do not recall anything that has given me more satisfaction than your brave, just and encouraging declaration of war against spurious mediumship—that conscienceless desecration of the most ennobling emotions and sentiments of the human soul—the most outrageous, inexcusable and despicable crime ever committed in the history of man.

I earnestly hope and trust we may ere long be freed from this monstrous incubus, this hideous nightmare of fraud and corruption which has well-nigh taken possession of the entire field.

I sigh for a return of the good old days, when our public meetings had not been lowered in tone and weakened in ethical and inspirational effect upon the audience and public by the introduction of personal readings and more or less external, superficial and non-spiritual "test work" (including business movements and prophecies, and the like).

I do not think our cause has been advanced so much as it has been retarded, by having personal work presented as a part of our regular Sunday services, or in connection with the exalted inspirational and philosophical teachings of the lecture-room at any time.

We have given more and more prominence to the merely phenomenal aspect of the movement, until it has well-nigh usurped and displaced the true function and proper mission of mediumship itself—and reversed the natural order of importance as between the two departments, mental and physical.

The physical, material, outward form is but an outgrowth from the mental or spiritual; that is to say, all visible outward phenomena throughout universal nature are simply the resultant of the shaping and guiding powers of the invisible noumena, or causative soul-powers—the animating principle of universal nature. This being the case, mental mediumship should outrank physical mediumship. And since the highest phase of mental development and expression is inspiration, we ought to appreciate most highly inspiration trance-speaking, with its flood-gates wide open to the inflowing wisdom, truth and love of the celestial realms, where impersonal eternal principles are centered, and a sublime harmonial philosophy of life, death and immortality is fully actualized.

To drop from these lofty heights, where earthly shadows, griefs and trials cannot penetrate or exist, into the sphere of personalism and relative undevelopment, is a lamentable loss in several respects to all concerned; and I believe it were better far to separate the two conditions, by giving to each its own time and place, and having no personal "test work" in connection with the lecture.

This is not decrying any phase of mediumship. EACH IS USEFUL AND VALUABLE IN ITS PROPER TIME AND PLACE. But the lecture service should deal in principles, not personalities. The influences pervading should be of the very highest quality within the capacity of speaker and audience to receive; and the entire program, or service, should appeal to the philosophical, idealistic, spiritual and religious elements of our nature, and the occasion be replete with the sweetest soul-communion, with the ineffable glories of the inner light of the divine spirit.

Under this regime a spiritual Spiritualism is attainable, the lecture room attracts from other and higher considerations than curiosity to witness the latest sensational exhibition of some wonderful "test work" (for the benefit, very likely, of many who are already "convinced" but who hope to "get" something more without cost).

In the line of physical phenomena full form materialization ranks as in the "superlative degree" the finality, the ultima thule, the lowest (not highest) stage, the very bottom of the ladder of descent. Here we find spirit beings clothed upon with organized material substance and subject to its limitations—in active vital relation for the time being with the earthly state of existence. In this process and in these phenomena we have a downward movement, a descent from the established life in the spirit realm to the material—a literal (vitalic?) return to earth; whereas, reversely in the inspirational trance state the whole trend, and process is a spiritualizing one—it is an upward movement of the earthly or mundane life. In the one case the earth world is lifted up to higher conditions more spiritual; in the other the spiritual world is brought down to lower states less spiritual.

Still asserting the superiority of the mental, I now present a second proposition namely; that seances for any and all forms of physical manifestation should never be given in total darkness! A sufficient amount of light to enable the sitters to see what transpires, and to recognize distinctly any forms appearing, should always be insisted upon. A light may burn in the rear of the room, shaded and entirely surrounded by a thin paper, colored red or yellow. These tints give off no actinic or chemic rays, and do not interfere with the process of gathering, concentrating and condensing the auric emanations of the earthly members of the circle. This was the method of lighting generally pursued thirty or forty years ago. (The writer attended twenty or more seances given by Wm. Eddy of the famous Eddy family, at Ancora, N. J., over thirty years ago, took copious notes of all that transpired, and they were published in the Religio-Philosophical Journal. At these seances, and all others of those early days, before "fakery" had been invented, and got in its work, there was no effort or occasion to "protect" the medium with deadly weapons, no "business manager" to hold fast both hands of the sitter who might be called to the cabinet to greet the spirit! Many of the forms spoke aloud distinctly, came forward and mingled with the sitters.

I repeat, let us no more resort to total darkness, let us have no more unhygienic and abominable smotherations in air-tight rooms, if you desire or expect to accomplish a cleansing of our "augean stable" and a rehabilitation of honest physical mediumship.

One more proposition is called for, to complete our radical prescription for the serious malady now afflicting the heaven-born movement we designate as Modern Spiritualism.

No phase of mental or physical mediumship which occupies itself chiefly with personalities should entitle the possessor to ordination as a minister, public teacher of the Harmonial Philosophy and exponent of the gospel of Modern Spiritualism.

We have thus offered a radical remedy made up of three ingredients:

1. Personal readings and test work not to form a part of our public lecture service.

2. Test mediumship of any phase not to entitle its possessor to ordination [but it will be duly recognized and licensed by state or National association].

3. Abolish the totally dark seance.

If this medicine is taken faithfully according to directions there can be no doubt that the patient will rapidly improve, and very likely soon completely recover.

Let us in all seriousness and determination resolve that no deception shall henceforth be tolerated in our ranks; but that each and all our workers, whether teachers upon the rostrum or in any capacity helpers in the cause, shall be temperate and exemplary in their personal habits, and so conduct themselves at all times as to reflect credit upon the cause and command the respectful recognition of the spiritual movement from the general public and from the progressive element within the creedal churches.

JAMES MADISON ALLEN.

RETROSPECTION.

"I shall pass through this world but once. Therefore, if there is any kind thing I can do, let me do it now, for I shall not pass this way again."

Oh, Life, I turn on thee to backward gaze
Before the sun has set;
I mark the windings of a tangled maze
Of paths I'd fain forget.

I see my footprints in the tell-tale sand,
Nor time nor death may hide;
I see where straightest I my pathway planned,
There most I turned aside.

And, sharpest sting of my regretful pain,
What deepest I deplore,
The path I've made must ever so remain;
I'll pass that way no more.

Then dare I 'gainst a straying brother cry,
Or his intent malign,
When, gazing backward, clearly I descry
His path more straight than mine?

I may not over him in judgment stand,
Nor ask how he has striven;
I only clasp in peace his proffered hand
As I would be forgiven.

May there not be, hid by his smiling face,
A troubled heart and sore?
I humbly whisper, "Father, give us grace;
We'll pass this way no more."

Golden Links.

A Touching Record of True Humanitarian Work.

Whether done by Christian or Jew, by Orthodox, by Spiritualist or by Freethinker, by so-called believer or by so-called infidel, such work as is set forth in the following narration culled from a Salvation Army periodical, Golden Links, constitutes golden links binding earth to heaven, and linking workers of our sphere with angelic workers of the realms above. The story needs no labored introduction—it speaks for itself, in tones that will reach and find response in every heart that feels for human welfare.

The beautiful home at Glen Ellyn, opened by our beloved Commander, Miss Booth, on June 17, and set apart for the children of the poorest poor of Chicago's slum and tenement districts, will very materially help us in "getting hold" of many and many pairs of childish feet and starting them off upon the paths of righteousness and peace.

Lovely Glen Ellyn is such a contrast to their usual environment that the little ones will hardly know what to make of it all. Imagine fifty of them stepping off the electric cars after a delightful run of twenty miles through green fields and shady woods. Such a commotion getting off the cars, the dear little slum officer who attends them is like

"The old woman who lived in her shoe,
And had so many children she didn't know what to do."

But soon the merry party is scampering up the pretty country road and across the fields, tearing like wild things through the long grass and sweet red clover until they come to the house where on the broad veranda stands Mrs. Major Galley smiling her glad welcome.

Mrs. Major Galley is well known in Army circles as the friend of the children. As "Aunt Lizzie" she is known and loved by them all over the United States. Now that Commissioner Kilbey has entrusted to her and the dear Major this great responsibility and unique opportunity, Aunt Lizzie and Uncle John will soon be known and loved all through the Chicago slums.

THE MEMORIAL ROOM.

There is one room at GlenEllyn particularly sweet and dainty. Six white and gold bedsteads look inviting enough for six little children of fortune, but they stand in readiness for six little scraps of humanity gathered from the gutters of the slums. Six little chairs stand beside them, while a suite of bedroom furniture, also of spotless white, has been purchased to complete the beauty of this lovely room.

The whole is the generous gift of our dear friends, Mr. and Mrs. Fowler, and is given in loving memory of the precious little one who for eight years made sunshine in their lives and was then transferred to the beautiful city above.

The bountiful supply of linen for this room is all marked with the initials of little Charles, while upon the bureau stands a handsome frame containing the pictured face of the little boy who now plays in the streets of the spirit realms.

Surely many childish hearts will learn to look at it with loving gratitude, while his parents will take comfort in the blessed sunshine they are sending into little darkened lives.

What we need at Glen Ellyn just now are a few hammocks for the tired slum mothers to rest in, and also a baby carriage. If any friend can supply these needs we shall be most grateful.

A THRILLING RESCUE.

Her hat was lying on the beach and in it scribbled on a piece of brown paper, was the following pathetic little note:

"I have no friends, no relatives, no home. I am out of work and unable to pay for my board and lodging. As I do not wish to begin a life of shame, I have determined to take my own life. May the good God forgive me and look in pity on a poor girl who had drawn the short straw in the struggle for existence. I pray that my sainted mother will intercede for me. * * Good-bye,

"ANNIE."

And having pinned her little note to her hat, Annie walked into Lake Calhoon. The beach runs gradually down for some distance and then suddenly drops ten or twelve feet. Reaching this point, poor Annie screamed as she sank, and Mr. Clemmings, a Minneapolis business man, heard the scream, saw her head disappear, dived after her, and after a struggle succeeded in bringing her to the surface. She was unconscious when brought to the shore. Mr. Clemmings was in a quandary; what to do with his capture he did not know; but just then a wagon came along on which was painted: The Salvation Army Industrial Wagon.

The driver, in response to the gentleman's inquiry, said, "Yes, of course, I know what to do with her." Tenderly they lifted her in the wagon, and as quickly as possible drove the five miles to the Industrial Home, where she was intrusted to the kind hearted manager, Staff Captain Gooding, who soon furnished a complete outfit of dry clothing, provided a nourishing meal, and then Captain and Mrs. Miller took her to their own home. Her sad little story was quickly told. She had landed in the city only two months ago and soon obtained employment in a restaurant. But the restaurant was soon closed and she found herself upon the street without a cent. She tried again and again to find employment, but without success. She says she was approached by several women who offered to shelter her, but when she found that in return they asked her to lead a life of shame, she turned down their offers in disgust, until at last friendless, homeless, penniless, and turned out of the little room that had sheltered her starving body, she preferred and had sought death in the river, hoping quickly to end it all. God help and pity every poor soul driven to such extremity, and help us to reach and save them all. Poor little Annie (she is only 17 years) is now being cared for, loved, comforted, and will be trained for a position of usefulness.

DEATH TO DISHONOR

The Times, a Minneapolis newspaper, of June 16, speaking of Annie's case, says:

"A 17-year-old girl, just a child, awearied of the struggle, finding no helping hand stretched out to aid save that of the scarlet women (the bird of prey that is ever abroad on the city's streets), seeking oblivion in the spring-time of life and nature in death.

"Though a child, she was a true womanly woman, preferring death to dishonor. But the life-saver did more than save; he knew what to do and he did it. He intrusted the care of the child to the Salvation Army, the Good Samaritan of the Century. There is none so helpless as to be beyond their efforts, none so hopeless that the Army will not cheer and help."

A GLIMPSE OF CORPS WORK.

What stories could be written of the struggles that are covered by the ragged coat of the homeless and workless man. Mrs. Ensign Mac Laurie's work is at present almost entirely among this class and her sympathetic brown eyes are one moment sparkling with enthusiasm and the next dewy with unshed tears as she talks of their needs and their sorrows. "Give that to the lady that preached," said one poor fellow whose heart had been stirred by the memories of by-gone days as he handed a torn slip of paper to the doorkeeper. The handwriting spoke of education and refinement, the words told of a broken heart and bitter tears. What brought him there? Who can say? But the request, "Please write to Mr. W. Govan, nr. Glasgow, and tell him Bill is here," has been complied with, and the first steps taken toward reuniting severed ties. God bless Bill, and turn his wayward heart not only homeward but heavenward.

HOW WE VISIT.

In their house to house visitations two of our women officers found a woman drunk in bed, her five children dirty and unkempt, while her unfortunate husband was endeavoring to wash them and make them presentable. As it was almost time for their open air meeting to begin when the officers called, they could do nothing just then, but they were at the house very early on the following morning. They at once began to clean up, washed the children, and had everything "looking beautiful," to use the Captain's expression, when the husband came in at dinner time.

A PATHETIC LITTLE GROUP.

In one home we have a sad little group of four girls, each under 14 years of age. Upon each will soon be pressing the responsibilities of motherhood. Awful, you say. Yes, truly so, but listen to a more awful statement still: three out of the four were sinned against by their own fathers! One of these girls writes to her father, saying: "It is not a school that I am in; it is a Salvation Army home, and I have learned to forgive you for what you have done to me."

A GIRL MESSENGER BOY.

The police officials of Spokane, Washington, some time since handed over to the Salvation Army a girl of 16 who for nearly four months held position as messenger boy under the name of Charlie Scott, in the service of the Western Union. It has transpired that the girl never knew her real parents. She did not live happily with her foster parents and attempted several times to run away. Her last attempt succeeded because of her disguise. She learned to smoke cigarettes while thus disguised, but did not take to drink, and has apparently filled her position as messenger boy very well and to the satisfaction of her employes. Now that is all over and the poor child is heartily glad of it and settled down as an inmate of our Rescue Home.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. Colonel French tells of a tiny newsboy who came up to one of our western officers the other day, saying, "Lady, do you do anything for poor boys?" The officer naturally thought it was the boy himself who needed assistance and asked what she could do for him. He replied: "It's for a little chap ever so much poorer than I am. Will you give him one square meal?" He was assured that we would, and he soon turned up at the office with his friend. Poor, battered, ragged, half-starved mite! "Where do you live?" "Don't live nowhere," was the startling reply. A little kindly questioning brought out the facts. Father and mother both dead; cruelly beaten by stepfather; afraid to return unless he could beg or steal enough to appease his wrath; been sleeping in wagons, and the little fellow's eyes filled with tears as he said: "You know what that means, missis! You've all the time got to keep a sharp lookout for the 'cop.'" A square meal, a good bath, a few rags exchanged for decent, if patched, clothing, and our little waif hardly knew himself. Friends were made acquainted with his need, and soon little Jack was domiciled in a happy home and no longer fears the searching eyes of the "cop."

FOUR LINKS IN A CHAIN.

Some time ago a man tossed restlessly upon a hospital cot in Kansas City. For weeks he had hovered between life and death, but now life had conquered, for a time at least, and in a few hours he must leave the hospital to go—where? Ah, that was the rub. Those months of illness had robbed him of every penny he possessed, also of every article of value he had ever owned, and now, weak, despondent, friendless, penniless, and homeless, he must face the battle with poverty or die of starvation. What should he do? Where could he go?

The next morning with a stiff upper lip he walked into the office where he had been employed, but of course found that his place had long since been filled. But hope dies hard, and after a fruitless search for work he concluded to try another city. The ordinary tramp would not perhaps have found the task of counting the ties from Kansas City to Denver a very difficult one, or perhaps he would have found a more expeditious way of traveling than relying altogether on "Shanks' pony," but Harry was not a tramp; he was simply an honest, hard-working, competent workman "on his uppers," as he would have expressed it, through no fault of his own, and anxious only to find work to set him on his feet. So he tramped the railroad track until he found himself in Denver.

Had our friend been the happy possessor of a looking glass he might have hesitated before boldly walking into a gentleman's business place in search of employment. All he saw was the empty stool, the coveted instrument, the way out of the dark clouds that seemed to envelop him, as he eagerly pressed his application. Certainly no one could blame the gentleman in question or even wonder that he should so curtly turn the poor fellow down and hurry him out of the office. It was no place for such as he. Indeed, as the tall, gaunt figure passed through the streets, unwashed, unshaved, collarless, ragged, and dirty, every door of hope seemed closed, every avenue of escape cut off. Despair clutched at his heart. Where could he go? Should he choose death or a life of crime?

Only the banging of an Army drum, but it was a link which held him back from the dark shadows. The Army Captain, ever on the lookout for such as he, took in the situation very readily and marched him off to the S. A. Industrial Home, where a bath, a meal, and a bed quickly robbed life of its gloom. For a day or two he worked around the place, and the officer in charge, learning his story, resolved to help him. A hair cut, a shave, a decent suit of clothing, and, above all, the touching of a friendly hand, worked wonders and just one week from the day he landed in the city he walked into the same office looking for the same coveted position. It never dawned upon the gentleman that this clean, intelligent looking man could have anything in common with the poor hobo who had had nerve enough to visit him the week before. Pointing to the instrument, he said: "Are you competent? Let me see." And the nimble fingers soon convinced him that he had an expert to deal with. You know the rest, and with us thank God that at just the right moment the Army was there and one saved from sinking down into the dark waters of sin and death.

A WOMAN'S PLEA.

"Will you permit me," she writes, "to tender you my most sincere thanks for the kind consideration you are taking in my case? I have three children to support and have tried hard to keep the wolf from the door, but as I have now no cleaning or washing to do the misery of my children and myself is past description."

The officer who investigated the case found the poor creature just out of the hospital; sick, friendless, and forsaken she sat, with her children crying with hunger.

Her husband, after a painstaking search, was found in this great western city doing well in business, and was finally persuaded to assist his suffering family.

Seventy-six such cases are upon our books at the present writing.

And now, Spiritualists, what do you think of such work? Does it not appeal to your higher and better nature, your unselfish sentiments, your humanitarian instincts—and does it not make you feel ashamed that so little of such or kindred helpful human work is being done by Spiritualists?

This savingly helpful work, without reference to the peculiar religious views and performances of the Salvation Army, is worthy of emulation by all. It is in harmony with the spirit, the teachings, the philosophy of Spiritualism, and affords an object lesson in good works that will blend with pure spiritual life and thought.

THE WISE GUYS.

They Know It All Without Experience.

To the Editor;—It seems to be in the nature of things that we should, once in a while, come in contact with the wise guy. He is the fellow who knows more without personal experience than the other fellow knows from his personal experience.

These wise guys are lost in amazement that the other fellow should from his experience know so much. These are the wise guys, or wiseacres who ignore evil spirits, and spirit obsessions, and that, too, regardless of the fact that spirit obsessions had existed before they were born, in all countries, in all ages and among all peoples, just as among us here and now.

These are the wise guys, too, who love to fight with fine-spun theories, the products of the other fellow's experience, in favor of their own inexperience, or against anything not known in their experience, especially in experience of demonism or spirit obsession.

These wiseacres are everywhere. We meet them in the street, among the masses and the classes, the pastors and the sheep.

Nevertheless, we welcomed them to the Open Court, for we wanted to hear both sides of the discussion, for and against, and then judge. And here I will remark, that too much importance cannot be attached to the absolute value in the unusual originality of the Open Court.

The thorough and dignified manner in which the present discussion is being discussed, cannot fail to be of great interest in the enlightenment, not only of Spiritualists, but of mankind in general.

But say, Mr. Editor, why do some essay to reject the literal interpretation of Bible history, telling of spirit entities, and spirit obsession? Some there are who affect to ascribe all such to common pathological occurrences, and not to demoniacal possessions, as averred and verified by Biblical authorities.

For instance, Satan was the personal adversary of Job, and also the enemy of Christ.

Of Christ, too, it was said that devils—personal devils—were in constant degrading fear of his divine power to exorcise them.

When, too, Christ was accused of casting out devils, through Beelzebub, the prince of devils, he, instead of denying satanic agencies or spirit obsessions, simply argued as to the division of Satan against himself. If obsession was not true, he would not have employed such argument.

Then, again, Judas Iscariot, the original bribe-taker and betrayer, must certainly have been obsessed, for of Judas, it is said, that "Satan did enter him."

Thus your honorable court will see the falsity of these claims, that there were no evil spirit entities, and no evil spirit obsessions, that all such alleged obsessions were only another name for certain pathological conditions—or certain maladies.

But there is just enough resemblance between ancient and modern diabolism, to show that modern victims of spirit obsession are not mistaken, and do not therefore, falsify.

ETERNAL LIFE.

The Question Considered—In What Does It Consist?

The fact of the immortality of the soul is not in this case related to the foregoing question. To have eternal life is necessary to develop the spiritual part of the being, to overcome and outgrow the instincts and desires of the animal being, to obey the higher law of life. When the young man asked the Nazarene what he should do to inherit eternal life, he told him what he should do and what he should not do, and he replied that he had obeyed the law in that regard; then he told him what to do if he would be perfect.

Eternal life is an internal condition, a state of the spiritual being where it has outgrown the environments and attractions that held it to the external life, and that condition can be and has been attained by a few while here in mortality.

The law of use has been greatly misunderstood by a large majority of the human race, they looking upon external wealth as the end to be attained, and not merely as the means which they may use to advance the intellectual, moral and spiritual of themselves and their fellow-beings, and also to improve the physical status of life, making it correspond more perfectly with the ideal of a truly civilized condition of human society. Human life when not dominated by the higher spiritual forces is instinctively selfish. The law of eternal life is not recognized, and to acknowledge the fact that other fellow beings have the right to life, liberty and happiness, if it in any way restricts their ambition for wealth and power, is not admitted.

The remark of the Nazarene that "it would be easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," can be better understood when we recognize the fact that heaven is not so much a place as it is a condition and he alluded to the individuals who allowed external wealth to dominate their life to the exclusion of those gifts of the spirit which caused them to love their fellow beings as themselves. There are those who, while possessing external wealth, had also come into the law of eternal life, and strove honestly to use their possessions in a manner that the greatest good to the greatest number should result.

The accumulation of the enormous wealth that our multimillionaires hold in possession was not acquired by means that were lawful when using the higher law as a standard to measure them by. The methods of the oil trust and others of like nature illustrates the manner of procedure, and no rational mind would assert that such conduct would entitle the doer to a claim to eternal life, and open the doors to the kingdom of glory, allowing them to be admitted because of their wealth. There are some things that material wealth cannot purchase.

The dominion of the spiritual life over the animal instincts and passions, that is eternal life. The elements that compose the kingdom of heaven are not bought and sold on the stock market; they are only possessed by those individuals who have evolved from the lower elements of their life that spiritual state which enables them to comprehend the higher law, they becoming heirs of eternal life.

Every individual soul, when it comes into that phase of development where it realizes the necessity of unfolding the higher elements of its being and making them the dominant factor of life, knows there is a struggle between the two elements to decide who shall be supreme. Some through the law of inderitance have bequeathed to them a highly developed organism; to such it is comparatively easy to comprehend the law of eternal life and to obey its commands, to others the rising to the higher plane of their being is a more difficult one and the kingdom of heaven has to actually be taken possession of by violence.

The growth of the spirit at times is like our planet in its advancement from its primitive condition. There have been convulsions that seemingly would rend it asunder, but it was only preparing it so that higher forms of life could take possession; the more primitive types had their day and must retire, that is one of the laws of life that is irrevocable. Retrogression is more seeming than real. The mighty procession of all forms of life is moving onward and upward.

The spiritual philosophy informs us that the mere discarding of the physical does not admit the individual into the realm of the spiritual life unless he by development while in earth life had become spiritually unfolded, for all who enter what we term the spirit world take with them their individuality and are either carnal or spiritual-minded as they were while in mortal existence, they having an opportunity there to outgrow and discard the elements of their lower life, and the conditions there better enabling them to conform to the law of spiritual progress.

In an interview with a friend who passed over some twenty years ago, I asked him to tell me how it was "over there," inform me as to the conditions of life there. His final remark was pertinent. He said "it is different from the go-devil style here," and the experience of all who have held communion with the immortal shore can testify to the truth of the statement.

The ability to unfold the eternal life is a great blessing to the individual who possesses that power. Some are enabled while in mortality to make great advancement on that line, preparing themselves so that they can enter the higher planes of existence when they pass to the spiritual world. And some are bound by the conditions of their inherited and acquired life to that extent that they are held down to the lower levels of existence while here, and consequently are greatly limited there, they being obliged to make strenuous exertions if they would rise.

The law of spiritual progress can be used by all. There are none so advanced but they need to understand and conform to its requirements, and there are none so low down in the scale of spiritual development but that law can be to them a beneficent factor, by its influence they being enabled to rise to higher planes of being.

The more perfectly the individual comes under the dominion of that advanced spiritual state, the more fully is realized the truth of the fact that both heaven and hell are spiritual conditions and that they are graded according to the spiritual condition and development or lack of it in the individual. Eternal life is the result of the evolution of the soul to that plane where the instincts and desires of the earthly mind have ceased to have any dominating influence over the life. The glory and beauty of that life cannot be comprehended by those who are not on that plane of existence.

Spirit Charlotte Cushman.

Her Earthly Experience With "Materialization Mediums."

Good morning, Brother Hulburd. Let's get to work. I visit Searchlight Bower this morning to give expression to the thoughts and the reality that those contain of a large band of spirits including myself.

You know, brother, individuals living in physical bodies like to air their opinions. We as spirits have the same faculty.

It is our desire to acquaint the reading public with some facts known to them and I personally in connection with peep-shows, called materializing seances. Now, I will address Brother Francis, of The Progressive Thinker.

J. R. Francis, Dear Brother, and friend of Truth: It is the desire of a band of spirits that I should become their amanuensis or spokesman this this morning.

As you are clearing away the driftwood in order that the ship of Spiritualism may sail on a clear sea, I ask permission to be heard through the columns of your valuable paper once more.

It is my desire, speaking for others, that you grant me that permission.

Understand me, dear brother, I never flattered anyone. If they performed any work and that work merited praise, I gave it to them from my soul, as I do on this present occasion give it to you.

My soul desire is that the spirit world will assist you in clearing away the debris that lies in the path of honest investigators in your grand philosophy of Spiritualism or spirit return. You are the man at the wheel, or General—if you would allow me to call you such—bearing the grand triumph on your noble banner, "The Progressive Thinker." I am glad the cultivated and elevated Spiritualists have found a brave leader in you, dear brother.

On several occasions when living in the physical body I visited a number of those freak shows, I think seven in all, hoping there might be a possibility of finding genuine materialization. I never witnessed a demonstration that was genuine; all were frauds of the worst kind.

Maud Melville, a concert singer of high reputation, and myself visited a freak show called a materializing seance. The brazen star actor on that occasion looked like an individual about to enter a convict's cell. He stood there with all the brazen audacity of a low-bred cur. He offered up through the form of speech an invocation to the God of Truth to witness his manifestations that they were genuine. He claimed to have three phases of mediumship, materialization, impersonation, and transfiguration. The last I have no doubt was genuine, as the whole show given by that cur consisted of transformation that he misnamed transfiguration.

Dear reader, imagine the God of Truth would enter such a den of infamy where unmitigated fraud was performed before a class of sitters that were bordering on lunacy! It was cheap at a dollar a head to gain a little wisdom. That individual, the star actor of the freak show—for he was a freak, as there are many in the world like him, embalmed in pork grease, tobacco juice, whiskey, and other physical destroying drugs, created through the process of alcohol—with unblushing effrontery he asked the sitters present—or guests, if you choose to call them—to sing a religious hymn, that gave him a chance to arrange his properties and filthy trickery for the coming exhibition of degraded manhood whereby he played upon the feelings and sympathies of those present.

His representation of their loved ones in that low den was a disgrace to all manhood and womanhood, and should be punished accordingly.

Dear reader, there comes a penalty for all such deception. Permit me to inform you before I proceed any further that the star actor of the peep show is a judge of the human voice; through constant practice he learns to understand the articulation and pronunciation of a gullible individual by the sound of his voice; when he finds such an individual he preys upon his sensitive condition through a disease called credulity, the weak, credulous mind becomes his victim on all occasions.

On our visit to one of these vampires it shocked our sensibilities to witness such a degraded exhibition. The curtains of the Punch and Judy box parted and there stood a ghost-like individual. It was that barefaced male liar and hypocrite dressed up in the garb of a female. His face looked pale from common chalk used on that occasion to represent a—how shall I call it?—a visitor from the other side of life, a seeming shadow to the credulous visitors. As he stepped out of the Punch and Judy box a hushed awe of reverence passed over the sitters, a glorious shade came into their presence from the other side of life, the spirit world, as they thought. The manager of the show requested the sitters that each one in turn should ask if it was for them. They did so.

A woman present asked the monstrosity in disguise, "Are you for me?" The shade or spirit bowed and beckoned for that woman to come to the entrance of the Punch and Judy box. She did so, then she commenced to cry, while sobbing she made several interludes in which she said, "You are my darling sister that left your little body when only three months old; darling, I recognize you. You still have the features of that baby face."

Imagine, dear readers, an individual that was at least forty years of age still holding the features of a baby face at three months old!

My friend and myself were assigned to seats in the front room, and as this woman led the would-be spirit in front of us I smelt that filthy whisky breath of the star on that occasion. She led the degraded impersonation back to the entrance of the Punch and Judy box; there they kissed and hugged each other,—the woman saying to that low, beastly cur: "Do not forget me, sister dear, when you return to your heavenly home."

I became so disgusted that I wanted to break the show up. My friend squeezed my hand and whispered, "Keep quiet; let's see more of it."

There was a request given by the manager of the show that the sitters should sing. That gave the star a chance to change his wardrobe. He reappeared at the entrance of the Punch and Judy box as an old man with white hair and a long white beard. A rather fierce-looking ghost, I thought; possibly he'd had a quarrel with the manager about the non-payment of his salary. As he posed there a man in one of the back seats made the discovery it—the thing—was his grandfather. He was called up to have an interview with the denizen of the spirit world. Their conversation did not blend in harmony, and he that belonged to the mundane sphere was ordered back to his seat.

An old woman thought there was a probability and perhaps a possibility of its being her father. She was permitted by the manager of the peep show to hold an interview with her supposed father. Their conversation did not blend, and she returned to her seat.

At last the glorious light shone upon a young damsel present; her discovery was a most valuable one, her feelings told her that was her uncle George. She took a promenade up to the Punch and Judy box and there found her uncle in the person of that low-lived cur. They hugged and kissed, and he led her into the Punch and Judy box where so-called spiritual converse took place. She came out of the Punch and Judy box with a radiant expression on her countenance. One would have thought she had found a valuable gold mine, if a happy expression was any indication.

The searchers after their loved ones once more entertained us by singing a hymn. It was sung in a variety of keys. Such was the fact, as it sounded so discordant to my musical ear. Once more the curtains parted and one of the curiosities from Pandora's box stepped out into the room as a blushing female. The same order and condition was gone through of asking the blushing female, "Are you for me?" When it came to my friend she was the honored guest of that assembly. She stepped up towards the blushing female as if she was afraid to approach her ghostship. There stood the ghost dressed in a dirty white garb with some pink material that hung down from the shoulders. She said: "Dear spirit, you won't hurt me, will you?"

The angel said: "No, dear, come and see me."

She stepped up to look at the spirit, when lo, and behold! she made the discovery it was her mother. She laid her head on the spirit's breast and sobbed as if her heart would break; she patted the spirit on both cheeks and called it loved names. All of a sudden she snatched the blonde wig from off its head, threw it into my lap, and struck the scoundrel in the face. On her fingers she had four diamond rings. When she struck him in the face the diamonds cut the skin, the blood came forth marring the beauty of her angel mother.

We left the room in disgust, I carrying with me her mother's hair.

The name of the star on that occasion commenced with an S, it was either Sear or Sour, I don't remember which. We made the discovery that all the fools were not dead and we were two of them. We had the value of our money in the wig. P. T. Barnum spoke the truth when he said, "The American people like to be humbugged."

On one occasion in New York, Laura Keene, Blanche Harrison, Robert Meldrum, the leading man for Lucille Western, Sothern, the great Lord Dundreary in the American Cousin, and myself, one Sunday evening attended a peep show misnamed a materializing seance given by a man by the name of King. I was called up to the Punch and Judy box to look at the spirit of the beautiful Lizzie Weston Davenport, who was at that present time living in the physical body in London, England.

I said: "Dear Lizzie, when did you take to drinking whisky? I was not aware that you were fond of stimulants when living in the physical body. I suppose to give this manifestation you require a wee drop to brace you up."

Just then Robert Meldrum stepped to the curtain, caught hold of it, dragged it down. There stood poor Lizzie, an amalgamation of both sexes. She had on a dirty old silk waist, a light brown wig. That is all you could see at the aperture. The lower part of her body was dressed in black pants, low slippers and white socks.

Robert Meldrum demanded his money back, as he had purchased the tickets. The manager refused to return the money, and tried to escape. Robert grabbed him and pounded him good. The manager returned the money, then Robert Meldrum threw him into a corner, after which he spit in poor Lizzie's face—he was in the habit of chewing tobacco. We left the room in disgust, thinking, what fools ye mortals be—a fool and his money easily take leave of each other.

I visited another peep show in Philadelphia. I was prevailed upon by some guests stopping at the hotel to attend a so-called materializing seance.

During the evening I was called to the Punch and Judy box that went by the name of cabinet, to look upon the spirit of John Drew, the father of the present John Drew who lives in the physical body. I said to the individual: "Are you John Drew, the actor the husband of Mrs. John Drew the actress?"

The fat shade acknowledged to me he was the identical John Drew.

I said: "Mr. Drew, you surprise me; how you have shrunk in spirit life; the John Drew that I knew was a fine, manly-looking fellow; here you are a repulsive-looking creature. There is some mistake. Can't you walk out of this box and allow the people to look upon your form? No doubt you have several friends here that have admired your acting."

Just then a man stepped up and said, "Why, John, I'm glad to meet you," grasping the spirit's hand. The manager of the show was suspicious and jumped towards this man, it was too late, the man had dragged that low, degraded creature out into the room, there stood a low-sized woman with a man's coat and vest on, a curly wig and a black satin necktie.

The man that dragged her out of the cabinet said his name was Willis C. Daniels; he had been suspicious of her for sometime, that she had been committing fraud.

All the seven seances—so-called—that I attended were frauds of the worst kind, villains making money out of the credulity of weak-minded people.

Now, dear Brother Francis, I have described to you and the public three rank impositions forced upon the people through the stench of a degraded influence called materialization; so many individuals in the spiritual ranks have been attracted to that stench, the odor seems to agree with their olfactories.

I for one must say as a spirit I am ashamed to admit that I entered such dens of degradation to witness some of the most degraded performances ever given.

The power lies in your hands, and with your brain faculties you can clean the ranks of Spiritualism, make it wholesome and sweet to truthful investigators, when you get through with those vagabonds calling themselves materializing mediums you can sweep up what is left, throw it on a compost heap to fertilize imbecile minds that would really believe the moon is made of green cheese.

I hope those that use the power of reason will assist you, dear brother, in breaking up those shameful conditions. All work requires a leader, at the same time they must be assisted by others to carry on that work. I hope all truth-loving Spiritualists and Freethinkers will give you that support. No general can fight a battle without soldiers in the ranks. You are the general for this work; let other advanced thinkers take their positions as colonels, majors, captains and lieutenants, as their ability can adapt them for those positions. See to it, readers, that you rally to Brother Francis' support.

Your friend and well-wisher in all works of progressive thought and spiritual understanding.

CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN.

I thank you, Brother Hulburd for taking down my communication and hope Brother Francis will allow it space in his valuable paper. Good day, friend.

BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB.

Yet Highly Spiritual and Blessed With a Brilliant Mind.

Addressing herself "to girls who are going to college," Helen Keller, the famous blind, deaf and dumb girl, writes beautifully in the Youth's Companion. She says: "You have come up out of the primary school, through the grammar school, through the high school and this beautiful June morning finds us standing where the brook meets the river. The care-free days of childhood are past and the mystery of an unknown life awaits you at the threshold of the college which you will enter next September.

Pause and Reflect.

It is fitting that you pause, serious and thoughtful; for you have not passed this way heretofore. The time has come when you must put away, with loving hands, the playthings of your childhood, the familiar habits and immunities and companions of your protected girlhood, leave solicitous friends and guardians and enter, through the college door, upon the larger responsibilities and joys of womanhood. Your life is before you, "so various, so beautiful, so new."

It is often said that usefulness is the end of life and inspires; and so it is. But happiness creates and inspires usefulness. If you have many gifts and the power to understand, even if you meditate night and day how to promote the welfare of the world, it shall all profit you little if you have not joy. Take up joy, then, as you stand before the gate of your student life and enter fearlessly. Think that the college you have set your hearts on holds all good things in her hand. Believe that in her halls your higher dreams shall be realized. But do not forget that the great gifts which you are about to receive from your college bring with them great obligations.

In college you will be brought face to face with nearly all the fundamental questions of life, and you will learn how many men have tried to solve them. Hitch your wagon to a happy star, and you also shall help to solve them. The world needs your intellect, your scholarship, but most of all your hearts—hearts that are loving, brave, hopeful, happy.

A Vision in Your Souls.

Join the great company of those who make the barren places of life fruitful with kindness. Carry a vision of heaven in your souls, and you shall make your home, your college, the world correspond to that vision. Your success and happiness lie in you. External conditions are the accidents of life, its outer trappings.

Perhaps in college you may meet with books that suggest to you that it is noble and comely to be unhappy. Many clever people have found many reasons for unhappiness. Some learned men have peered beneath the curtains of life's tabernacle, found it empty and a cunning sham, and in the dimness of their spiritual sight they have gone away grumbling, never suspecting their own blindness. From their conclusions turn to Stevenson and Browning, read St. Paul's epistles, learn that the tabernacle is a temple wherein God abides.

Think, read, study diligently day by day and the severest tests of your knowledge shall find you prepared and confident. Do not lose sleep over the prospect of examinations, or fret above the printed page until you cannot read its lessons clearly. * * It is less important to do justice to books than to be honest and kind and generous in your relations to your fellow students.

From the Books.

Learn from your books not only the day's lesson but the life lesson. In all knowledge, in the classics, in science, in history and literature, and in mathematics you will see the struggle of man to get nearer to God. Resolve, then, as you stand on the threshold of your student days, with an enlightened optimism to consecrate your education to the service of others. When your thoughts become pessimistic, when it seems as if all men were deafened by the tumult of trade, blinded by self-interest and greed, turn the pages of your history of England, and you will find that the ideas which shaped the Anglo-Saxon race were not mean or sordid.

American history, too, is filled with heroes and martyrs who joyfully pushed aside ambition and gave their lives to the common weal.

"Are men blind?" they cried. "We will open their eyes. Are they deaf? We will unstop their ears. Are they hungry? They shall be fed. Are they cast down and oppressed? As God liveth, they shall be free!".

The world needs more of this spirit of service. There is still many a desert place where the sun of love and the light of truth have not shone. The occasion waits for every college graduate, in the joyous erectness of youth and vigor to answer: "Lord, here am I; send me."

SPIRIT PRESENCE.

Oh, our dear ones who have journeyed
To a country, strange and new,
Do you long for us, I wonder,
As sometimes we long for you?
Though that world be one of beauty,
Crystal streams and fadeless flowers,
Is a shade of sadness never
Mingled with the brightest hours?

Does the fond wife mourn her husband,
And the child its mother miss?
To that life does separation
Sorrow bring as oft to this?
Dwelling on the shores immortal,
Glad in hopeful thought and deed;
Is there still the old-time yearning
And the human love and need?

Why thus question, o'er death's river,
Comes there often to my side,
Puts his strong, true arms about me,
One who loved me ere he died.
Breathing low pure words and tender,
In the old familiar tone:
"Fear not, I am always near you,
You were never less alone."

Dear, brave hearts beyond the shadows,
It is sweet to know each day;
Though unseen, your silent footsteps,
Walk beside you all the way.
And when weary and o'er burdened,
Long we for that peaceful home,
I know beside the open gateway,
You are waiting till we come.

ALICE M. WARREN.

Proctorsville, Vt.

The People's Church of San Francisco.

To the ambition, energy and ability of a woman, the existence, and in large measure the growth and success of this little society is due.

To many readers of The Progressive Thinker the name of Anna L. Gillespie, formerly Anna L. Robinson, and that of her beautiful glude "Alice" must be familiar for their many years of work on the spiritual platforms of the middle west.

In 1902, Mrs. Gillespie, then a resident of San Francisco, conceived the idea that there was both room and need in that city for a new church, a church of the denomination of Spiritualism. In December, 1902, a meeting was held, officers elected, and a society founded to which the name "The Peoples' Church" was given, with Anna L. Gillespie as pastor. From this small beginning the society flourished mildly, and grew in membership, until it became necessary to secure more commodious quarters than they then occupied.

At present the meetings are being held in Elks' Hall, 223 Sutter street, one of the finest halls in the city, perfectly appointed in every way.

In 1903 the church affiliated with the California State Spiritualist Association as an auxiliary society, working under their charter.

The management of the church is in the hands of its officers, namely a president, vice-president, treasurer secretary and assistant secretary, together with five directors, all elected annually.

The church employs a regular musician, and has a choir of fifteen voices under the management of Mr. J. S. Gillespie, the musical director of the society.

From June to September of each year a summer vacation is taken to enable Mrs. Gillespie to fill her eastern engagements.

For the next three months Mrs. Gillespie will visit and lecture at the following places: New York, Albany, Buffalo and Port Huron in June; Lake Brady, July 2 and 9; Chesterfield camp, July 16, 23 and 30, returning to San Francisco in September.

In concluding the account of this prosperous little society, it may be stated that its members have the hope that the time is not far off when they will have their own spiritual temple, with the church motto, "May we so live that all the world is better for our living," over their own altar.

Poems by Miss Belle Bush.

The book of poems entitled "Voices of the Morning," written by Miss Belle Bush of East Braintree, Mass., gives in a preface entitled "Introductory Remarks," a very sensible and thoughtful analysis of what true poetry consists in. There is poetry, the writer contends, throughout all living things, and in the hearts and characters of the least interesting individualities which go to make up the whole of humanity. These "Remarks" make an interesting contribution to poetic lore, and are well worth reading. Indeed this "introduction" is an up-to-date essay which any aspirant for poetic fame would do well to carefully read.

Space will not permit of quotation from this writer's collection of uplifting, thoughtful verse. Suffice it to say that all are finely expressed, and adapted to inspire and bring cheering thoughts concerning the various phases of human life, such as come within the experience of most people. The book is handsomely bound, and would make an appropriate gift book for young or old.

Miss Bush is also the author of a smaller booklet of poems especially adapted to the reading of young people, entitled "Nature's Prayer, or What the Brook Said to the Little Girl," which is full of thought helpful to spiritual living.

The lady writes in a note accompanying her poems: "If health permitted I would tell you of some of my remarkable experiences in Spiritualism, but I have been an invalid for some time. Am now trying to get well, and be useful through my pen, and also to earn something to meet my necessary expenses."

LONG AGO.

Why chide me for loving the days Long Ago—
The scenes of my childhood days,
The peace-giving breath their presence bestows,
As backward my memory strays?
Tho' I walk in sorrow, weighted with years,
The dreams of the past oft return,
Dispelling the gloom and soothing my fears,
Tho' Time be fateful and stern.

The longing of the soul for the unattained
Lights up life's misty track,
But no worldly fame our efforts have gained,
Can those happy days bring back;
When our hearts were warm and free from guile,
With Love's undimmed power
With its charm of bliss and winning smile,
With Truth's sacred dower.

Our dreams are formed by an artist hand,
And orbed in a holy light,
Tho' their lessons we may fail to understand,
With our dull mortal sight;
Yet they solace the heart when bowed the head,
When life's energies decline,
When the night is long and the day has fled,
And we reach for the divine.

They are visions of the immortal sight,
And we feel their warm caress,
The touch of a hand in love's glowing light
With the soul's sweet caress;
We know 'tis a love faithful and true,
Penetrating the gloom of night,
Refreshing our hearts like morning dew,
Making our lives more bright.

All hallowed be my sunkissed dreams,
God's poems of unwritten lore,
As free as the music of crystal streams,
By banks and mossy shore.
O bitter would be my poor mortal lot,
When my dreams are no more
And the pictures and scenes of the past forgot,
That Memory holds in store.

FROM THE N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS

Closing Report of the Mediums' Relief Collection.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to submit to you and the readers of your valuable journal the closing report of the collection taken for the N. S. A. Mediums' Relief Fund. The thousand dollars called for has been secured, with additions, from the Spiritualists at large, and the thousand offered by our Washington friend has been paid to the treasury of this association. We herewith extend the sincere and heartfelt thanks of the N. S. A. officers and all concerned, including the medium beneficiaries, to the editors of the spiritual papers throughout the country for their unfailing help and invaluable courtesy during the collecting of this sum, to all mediums and public workers, including societies, who have given of the proceeds of their labors toward this worthy end, and to every donor to the Mediums' Fund; all are heartily appreciated and recognized.

The letters received at this office have been many, nearly all have been from donors to the relief fund and filled with sympathy and blessing for the needy mediums; a few have been dictatorial and critical—one dear lady, while sending her contribution, felt that the pensioners must have been intemperate or idle or extravagant in their earlier days or they would not now be needing aid. This may have been the case with some in our fold, but hardly so with any on the N. S. A. list, for we know them all, and that they have been unfortunate in health, have had losses and have been obliged to help infirm and deserving relatives. One of our beneficiaries is totally blind, her sister is a cripple whose health has been of the worst for many years—she is also on our list; these two were mediums when children and spent a lifetime in working for the spirit world. Another on our list is crippled, she has to care for a son who is a cripple and helpless.

And so we might go on in enumerating the needs and ills of our dear pensioners who are not worthless idlers, and never have been, nor are they objects of charity; they are getting from our Relief Fund a small stipend of what is their due from humanity—and anyone who begrudges it to them need not pay a penny towards their support. One of our beneficiaries—one of the oldest, best and most respected among the veteran workers for Spiritualism, one who has hundreds of times labored freely for societies and individuals, walked miles to fill engagements and borne the heat and battle of the cause in its early years, has recently received a most cruel and venomous anonymous letter from Chicago, signed "Our Committee." This letter accuses him of "shiftlessness" and a lot of other things, none of which are true, and is a scandalous attack upon him because the N. S. A. is paying him the small sum that he more than deserves—this dear worker who is so abused is loved and respected by thousands of Spiritualists and should I give his name here, a wave of righteous indignation would sweep over the battalions of Spiritualists against this "Committee" that hides behind a coward's defense. I venture to say that said coward never gave one cent to the mediums' fund or to any other worthy cause.

The following shows what can be done by earnest souls, with the aid of mediums and society workers. The sum of $64.25 was made up, from time to time, in the city of Wheeling, W. Va. Newark, N. J., also did well by the seances and efforts of Brother Dorn. Mr. Brunhaus and Mr. Way of Wheeling were instrumental in raising the aid in that vicinity. The following sums have been paid to the Relief fund since May 1:

Francis Nickerson, $100.

A Friend in New York, $52.55; C. L. Stevens, $25; Dr. Geo. B. Warne, $15; Mrs. J. W. Storrs, seance, $14; San Francisco Entertainment by "Bright Eyes," $13.50.

The following gave $10 each: Mrs. L. M. Delano, F. Crompton, A. B. Gleason, Ellen Munn, Dr. H. N. and Cora Forbes Brown, H. M. Edmiston.

G. W. Way, seance, $9.25; Mrs. Skogland and Mrs. Gott—on quilt, $7.23; H. C. Dorn seance, $6.50; A. W. Kaiser, seance, $6;

Avery, Ella Chute, A Friend of the Cause—Mellette, S. Dak., Mrs. A. M. Gifford, T. M.—Gottsville, Cal., Sallie E. Stiver, Mrs. C. E. H. Bowen, Gardner G. Eastland, John Brooks, Augusta Tripp, Mrs. A. L. Chapman, Effie I. Chapman, B. A. Montgomery, Aaron Bancroft, Mrs. W. H. Wakefield, Isabel Clark.

C. H. Leonard, 65 cents; Mrs. Lee C. Church, 50 cents Kate Stoddard, 50 cents; Martin Pierson, 50 cents; A. S. H., 50 cents; Mrs. L. D. Bunker, 50 cents; book of poems sold, 50 cents; Mrs. C. Flohr, 25 cents; Mrs. Shines, by sending to Mrs. V. Barrett for song of "Katydid," 25 cents.

The following sums were collected for the Relief Fund by Missionary E. W. Sprague: Collection Los Angeles, Cal., $12.93; Clinton Bayarth, $1; Mrs. C. Folth, $1; Collection at Leadville, Col., $8.60; Collection at Denver, $10.81; Mary M. Bennett, $2; Mrs. J. C. Smarlenskey, $2; Mrs. Mary E. Mutch, $5; May M. Dodge $10; Mrs. Jos. Rodes Buchanan, $2; Mrs. August Raht, $2; W. C. Marshall, $10; Mrs. Rachel Brauchcer, $2.50; Free Prof. Church, Farmer City, Ill., $1; Collection Peru, Ind., $3.45; E. W. Sprague, $1; J. H. Hoyles, $1; A. W. Thomas, $1; Clement Rockhill, $1; W. T. Spret, $1; Wm. Shem, $1; Harry Russell, $1.

The amount of foregoing list with amounts previously rendered make a sum of fourteen hundred and seven dollars and eighteen cents ($1,407.18); the thousand dollars paid by our noble treasurer completes a sum of twenty-four hundred and seven dollars and eighteen cents. All honor to our generous contributors, many of whom sent contributions over and over again. By their liberality the Mediums' Relief Fund will continue to care for its beneficiaries for some time to come. Anyone still wishing to contribute to the fund is welcome to do so as the drain of one hundred and sixty-five dollars a month, not including temporary aid, continues to go on.

With loving regards and thanks to all friends, we conclude this report.

HELENA PETROVNA BLAVATSKY.

An Interesting Point In Connection With Her History, Illustrating the Fact That She Was a Medium.

Mme. Blavatsky was born in southern Ukraine, in the heart of the Undine country, at midnight between the 30th and the 31st of July 1831. According to a time-honored legend in that part of Russia, persons born between these two days of any year have power over the Undines. A Cossack who must cross the Dnieper invariably prepares for death, but feeling certain of this power, Mme. Blavatsky, as a child, approached its banks fearlessly, and maintained that she was at that time and ever after attended by beings which she could see, though they were invisible to others.

At the death of her mother, which occurred when she was still a child, she was sent to her grandmother, who lived in a fine, rambling old castle where there were many subterranean passages and crypts, never used and rarely entered. In one of the crypts Mme. Blavatsky was wont to sequester herself, to be alone, as she said, with her peculiar people, and also to avoid her lessons. She loathed conventional instruction, though in her own way and when it suited her inclination she studied indefatigably.

After a time, being missed from her room one night, search was made and she was found pacing up and down her retreat conversing on an abstruse subject, quite as if some one was beside her, although there was no one visible to those who observed her.—Alice Boughton in the New York Sun.

LIFE'S TAVERN.

In this old tavern there are rooms so dear
That I would linger here.
I love these corners and familiar nooks
Where I have sat with people and with books.
The very imperfections and the scars
About the walls and ceiling and the floor,
The sagging of the windows and the door,
The dinginess that mars
The hearth and chimney, and the wood laid bare
There on the old black chair.
The dear dilapidation of the place
Smiles in my face,
And I am loath to go.
Here from the window is a glimpse of sea,
Enough for me;
And every evening, through the window bars,
Peer in the friendly stars.
And yet I know
That some day I must go, and close the door,
And see the House no more.

—Mary Burt Messer.

JUST TO BE OUT OF DOORS.

We are indebted to The Cosmopolitan and to Charlotte P. Gilman for the following delightful summer poem:

Just to be out of doors! So still! So green!
With unbreathed air, illimitable, clean,
With soft, sweet scent of happy growing things,
The leaves' soft flutter, sound of sudden wings,
The far faint hills, the water wide between.
Breast of the great earth-mother! Here we lean
With no conventions hard to intervene,
Content, with the contentment nature brings,
Just to be out of doors;
And, under all, the feeling half foreseen
Of what this lovely world will come to mean
To all of us when the uncounted strings
Are keyed aright, and one clear music rings
In our hearts, Joy universal, keen,
Just to be out of doors.

THE BUILDERS.

I dwell near a murmur of leaves,
And my labor is sweeter than rest;
For over my head in the shade of the eaves,
A throstle is building his nest.

And he teaches me gospels of joy,
As he gurgles and shouts in his toil;
It is brimming with rapture, his wild employ,
Bearing a straw for spoil.

So I know 'twas a joyous God
Who stretched out the splendor of things,
And gave to my bird the cool green sod,
A sky, and a venture of wings.

But why are my brothers so still?
They are building a lordly hall—
They are building a palace there on the hill,
But there's never a song in it all!

—Edwin Markham.

Religion and Science.

Lest they forget, it will be well to occasionally remind those ministers who are striving to bridge the chasm between religion and science, just about how wide the chasm is.

It is no new thing to read of an orthodox minister trying to harmonize religion as found in the bible, with science.

An occasional quotation will aid. For instance:

Religion in any form hates and fears Science.—Von Hartmann.

Religion deals in superstitions and faith, and science deals in facts.

Extinguished theologians lie about the cradle of every science as the strangled snakes beside that of Hercules.—Huxley.

The above from the eminent scientist is a pretty serious retort, but it is a matter of history how desperately the theologians have struggled with and fought science—strangling every scientist who dared to raise a voice against the myths of old theology.

The injury which the theological principle has done to the world is immense. It has prevented them from studying the laws of nature.—Henry Thomas Buckle.

Another unvarnished fact. The world for hundreds of years was a mere piece of machinery run by the "wise heads" of the church.

It will be seen by the following quotations that the truly unfolded minds are awake to the fact that religion and science is and ever has been at swords' points with each other:

Of all antagonisms of belief, the oldest, the widest, the most profound and the most important is that between religion and science. It commences when the recognition of the simplest uniformities in surrounding things set a limit to the once universal superstition.—Herbert Spencer.

The positive opposition which religion offers true or scientific progress is well known and consists in open hostility to the advancement of knowledge which threatens to explain away the necessity for supernatural powers, and thus to sap the foundations of religion itself.—Lester F. Ward.

As long as men refer the movements of the comets to the immediate finger of God, and as long as they believe that an eclipse is one of the modes by which the Deity expresses his anger, they will never be guilty of the blasphemous presumption of attempting to predict such supernatural apearances.—Buckle.

As long as abnormal and capricious phenomena are deemed the direct acts of Deity, all attempts to explain them by science will be discouraged; for such attempts must appear an irreverent prying into the divine acts, and if successful they diminish the source of religious emotion.—Lecky.

Mechanical science, after the classical period, shared the general fate of knowledge during the long dead time when so much was forgotten, and what was left was in bondage to the theology of the schoolmen. Physical science might almost have disappeared if it had not been that while the ancient treasure of knowledge was lost to Christendom, the Mohammedan philosophers were its guardians, and even added to its store. For this they have not always due praise.—Taylor.

The quackeries of miracle-cure and shrine cure wore destined to eclipse the genius of Hippocrates, and nearly two thousand years to intervene between Archimedes and Newton, nearly seventeen hundred between Hipparchus and Kepler. A dismal interval of almost twenty centuries parts Hero, whose first steam engine revolved in the Serapion, from James Watt, who has revolutionized the industry of the world. What a fearful blank! Yet not a blank, for it had its products—hundreds of folios filled with obsolete speculations, oppressing the shelves of antique libraries, enveloped in dust, and awaiting the worm.—Draper.

This subject has been dwelt upon in these columns at great length and with historical precision in the past, but when so much of an effort is being made by theology today to crawl under the big tent of undaunted and indomitable science, it is well, if not interesting, to know that the chasm, instituted by theology, has worn by the waters of time till its width and depth are almost too great to bridge. Time may do it, but not in a day.

Ignorance or Fraud.

In the letters I H S we have an illustration of ignorance or fraud, which? Their original were Greek, the I being iota in the Greek alphabet, corresponding to the Roman I, with the power of i or j, according to the letter following it. In the combination under consideration it has the power of j. The second letter is the Grecian eta, with the power of e long. The third letter is sigma, with the power of s. The three letters spell Jes, one of the some forty names by which Bacchus was known. The same letters, by adding to them the Latin terminal us, converts the name into Jesus.

The atttempt to derive the name Jesus from the Hebrew Joshua is an ecclesiastical fraud, as is the using the letters as initials for "Jesus Hominum Salvator," Anglicised, Jesus the savior of men.

Designing men, in an age of ignorance, took delight in falsifying everything they could torture into support for their religious faith. The priests, conscious of the fraud, first influenced, else directed the destruction of extant libraries, which would have exposed their guilt. Later they declared books obnoxious which betrayed their guilt, and by bulls from the pope of Rome prohibited their reading.

Non-classical scholars, and even thoughtless educated ones are constantly misled by these really successful attempts to deceive.

Taxing Church Property.

It is a good omen, a promising sign, when a secular journal speaks pointedly and justly on matters that bear directly upon evils and injustice that have so long been in vogue that they have become to be regarded as a fixed principle of moral and legal right.

Prominent among wrongs of this class is the matter of exempting church property, etc., from taxation.

Anent this subject the Chicago Chronicle has the following sensible remarks to offer:

Perhaps it is not a popular thing to say, but it is a true thing to say, that the concessions which are made to religious and charitable institutions, schools and hospitals in the way of remitted or reduced taxes are altogether unjust to taxpayers in general.

Such concessions are, in fact, a forced contribution from the great body of people who pay taxes. If a church or a school or a hospital does not contribute its share toward the maintenance of the water department, for instance, it is certain that the deficit must be made up by people who cannot escape the assessor. In effect, therefore, these people are paying just that much money to the church or school or hospital whether they want to do so or not. The money is contributed under duress, so to speak.

This custom of remitting taxes to religious and charitable institutions is, of course, a phase of legislative prodigality of the people's money. It is easy to be generous when somebody else has to foot the bills, and the average state or national or municipal legislature is fond of making benefactions with a free wave of the hand, ignoring the fact that the sweating tax-payer is the person who in the end has to find the money for these benefactions.

Churches and schools and hospitals are worthy institutions. They deserve support, but it should be free and ungrudging support, not the enforced donations of people who may have other and equally worthy use for their money.

People should be allowed to choose the charity upon which they wish to bestow their contributions. It is altogether out of the province of the city or the state to point out certain charities and say: "You shall contribute so much per year to the support of these charities, and to make sure of it I will collect the money from you in the form of taxes."

Strenuous Thought and Life.

It is a question worthy of consideration, whether the intensely modern appreciation of what is known as strenuosity—that is, the strenuous life—is not to a degree overwrought, and has become too strenuous.

The strenuous life itself requires thought—but the quality of one's thought has an immense bearing on the intrinsic value of one's intellectual exercises. There may be a strenuosity of thought and life directed toward ignoble and unworthy ends; and it must be admitted that much of the strenuous life of the present day is of this character.

The greed for money is the besetting sin of the modern age; to the end of absorbing vast moneyed wealth the strenuous efforts of mammon's worshipers are directed, and the cultivation of strenuosity of thought and life is upon this ignoble plane. Such a high value is placed upon the accumulation of worldly riches, that men largely ignore the purer and nobler ideals of that "sweetness and light" that enters into the composition of a life that, being lived on this earth, may be fitly termed sub-angelic, raised far above the sordid status of the mere money-getter grubbing in the muck of worldly greed.

Pure uplifting words and sentiments possess a value beyond computation in terms of gold coin.

Money is good in its place, but though lavishly bestowed upon colleges and universities, or given to found libraries, or even to "carry the gospel to the heathen," it will not give true nobility or spirituality of character, nor will it buy heaven for its donors.

A life, though mightily strenuous, devoted to the aggrandizement of worldly riches, will bring leanness of soul, and impart a tendency of thought and life that will cling indefinitely when the spirit shall have passed into the Beyond.

Spiritually, morally, right outward action is not of value to the doer unless it spring from right thought. The ideal strenuous life is that which harmoniously combines right strenuous thought and action, which, in the spiritual view, comprehends the high realm of the spirituality of humanity.

A Pious Canard.

It has been currently reported by the religious press that the government of Japan had in contemplation the acceptance of Christianity as their national religion, in place of the present Buddhistic. Investigation as to the truth of the claim reveals the fact that there is no foundation whatever for such representation other than the fact that some private persons, advocates of Christianity, possibly missionaries, have favored such a project; but it has received no encouragement from public officials. It has been asserted without any authority that an official proposed more than twenty years ago that the emperor be baptized, thus furnishing an example for his subjects to follow.

An educated Japanese, resident at Washington, has put a quietus on this pious canard.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. The World Is Aglow With Spirit Return.

Preacher's Spirit Converses With Affinity—Her Whereabouts Unknown, Yet Telepathy Furnishes the Means of Their Exchanging Messages of Affection—Spirit Communion Between Mortals.

That Spiritualism has taken a deeper hold upon humanity than even the most observing have surmised is proven by the daily records of occult happenings to be found in the secular press. Here is an account taken from a recent Chicago Examiner that will help to illustrate this fact:

"A story of first love and telepathy between a man and woman who had once seen, but never spoken to eachother, was learned last night in Newark, from the Rev. H. W. Bigelow, a Baptist missionary preacher.

"Seven years ago the minister saw a woman whose nature he realized at once was akin to his own. He did not speak to her and never saw her again, but during all the years of separation he has held converse with her, he says, and received greetings from her daily.

"'In June, 1898,' he said, 'I was in Philadelphia. While standing on the street corner I experienced a strange sensation, and when I turned, involuntarily, realized in a flash its cause. A young woman, about eighteen years old, was standing near me. She was remarkably beautiful, with flowing light hair, large blue eyes, a prettily moulded face and well rounded form.

"'I had scarcely rested my eye upon her when she turned and met my glance. There was an instant interchange of recognition, although we had never seen eachother before. I knew I had met my affinity, but my clerical garb precluded the possibility of approaching her and introducing myself. I boarded my car. So did she, and when I left her face was painted on my memory so brightly that nothing has been able to erase the lines.

"'I have searched for her seven years, never have seen her again in the flesh. We are not separated in spirit, however. Day after day she greets me by the telepathic communion of souls and assures me that we will meet. 'I am always thinking of you,' she says, 'and will always be yours.'

"'I simply say: 'I, too, am always thinking of you, dear, and I know we shall meet soon.' The greetings and assurances of love are all the greetings that pass between us.'"

There isn't a week passes but we publish some instance where persons outside of Spiritualism received conclusive evidence that their friends who have passed away are not dead.

It shows the universality of this great movement. It shows that the only limitation to universal communication between the two worlds is lack of knowledge of the spiritual laws, and that once understood, positive communication will be established as certainly as is the communication between mortals through the telephone, telegraphy and wireless telegraphy.

We have ever contended that Spiritualism held no title in fee, neither has it a mortgage on the spirit world. We might change the name to Humanitarianism and the phenomena would continue to occur, and if the institution called Spiritualism could be used to perform more humanitarian acts—such as relieving the poor, the homeless and the sick—instead of simply and solely trying to prove the possibility of spirit return, it would raise the standard of real Spiritualism to a higher altitude in the estimation of the thinking world, at least.

The infiniverse of spirit, the universe of worlds, the infinite aggregation of intelligence cannot be stilled or controlled by any organization upon this little planet.

If the door is open between the human spirits upon the earth and the spheres of intelligence surrounding it, they are not open to a few—an orthodox elect—BUT TO ALL!

IF WE CAN EDUCATE HUMAN BEINGS INTO SPIRITUALIZING THEMSELVES SO AS TO MEET THEIR FRIENDS UPON THE THRESHOLD AT THE OPEN DOOR, WE WILL HAVE MADE IT EASIER TO CONVERSE ONE WITH THE OTHER ACROSS THE LINE, perhaps, but to say the only source of communication is through our media would be but a delusive presentation of the fact as shown in these many records of spiritual events.

We have a cause that sprang up from the Rochester rappings and the philosophy as advocated through the books, originally, of Andrew Jackson Davis, and it was named, very appropriately, Spiritualism; but even in those earlier days, as records prove, the phenomena, the genuine appearances were more frequently occurring outside the unorganized Spiritualism of that day, and they have been appearing through outside sources ever since.

What matters it whether Spiritualism has all the credit to its name for the constant swinging to and fro of the great door or not? It has been the honorable office of organized Spiritualism, the speakers and mediums, and of the Spiritualistic press as one of the greatest of these factors, to educate the world into the light from the darkness of the past, and so long as that duty is nobly, unselfishly and well done, the cause has no reason to stoop to the narrowness of envy.

Let us all rejoice whenever the world receives a new light, and the truth finds another shining mark in the human mind.

A Much Needed Work.

Mrs. Virginia Bryan and Mrs. L. J. Jaquet, two excellent mediums and lecturers, will introduce on the rostrum an innovation that will attract attention everywhere, and which will bring their work prominently before Spiritualist societies, and promote the truth in reference to Spirit Return. It is too bad that the condition of our Cause is such as to Demand such action. Their course will meet, we are sure, the cordial approval of all honest Spiritualists. By placing genuine Spirit Phenomena in comparison with the subtle tricks of bogus mediums, they will interest all classes, and conserve the truth. Read carefully what they say.

To the Editor:—We, Mrs. Virginia Bryan and Mrs. L. J. Jaquet of your city, and our home city as well, do hereby agree and promise, as worthy and honorable workers to expose ALL FRAUDULENT PHENOMENAL WORKERS in our ranks. At the same time we do agree and faithfully promise to stand by all genuine phases, and the philosophy of our cause; to not only expose through exhibitions, but to follow said exposures by genuine demonstrations, BY VERITABLE SPIRIT MESSAGES, and as we go from town to town, organize local societies, and also state, where none exist; and we know by so doing, Brother Francis, it will meet with not only your and the N. S. A.'s hearty approval, but that of every true and honorable Spiritual society and single Spiritualist in our land. And with the sanction of your very worthy paper, also of the N. S. A., we can not know fail. And in our endeavor to cleanse our ranks of its fraudulent workers, we at the same time hope to place OUR GENUINE PHENOMENAL MEDIUMS so far above the fraudulent workers, that THEY MAY SHINE AS BRIGHT LIGHTS FROM THE LOWLIEST VALLEYS TO THE HIGHEST PEAKS, FROM COAST TO COAST.

In our exposing the fraudulent phases, we will take up the blindfold pellet reading, answer sealed questions, partial materializations, independent slate-writing, daylight and gaslight trumpet circles, and if necessary, full-form materialization, and we kindly ask of every true and honorable Spiritualist in our land and also foreign lands, to give us their best thoughts in this our ordained missionary work.

In the Streets of Baltimore.

A Remarkable Poem.

By request we republish the remarkable poem, "The Streets of Baltimore," which was given by Spirit Edgar Allan Poe, through the mediumship of Miss Lizzie Doten, at the conclusion of her lecture in Baltimore, on Sunday evening, January 11, 1863. The poem may be found in Miss Doten's "Poems From the Inner Life." The last three stanzas were omitted from the poem as published in the Sioux City Tribune.

To the Editor:—Some years ago I clipped from the Sioux City Tribune the enclosed article. To-day I came across the same among my clippings. Perhaps the verses have already appeared in the columns of your paper, but thinking that if they have, their appearance there again would very much please your numerous readers of to-day, I enclose them to you, hoping to see them again in The Progressive Thinker; and if you have the space to spare, should like to have the preceding remarks of the Tribune's editor appear, as published in the enclosed clipping.

DR. J. W. ANGELL.
Iowa Falls, Iowa.

A poem, written by Edgar Allan Poe three days after his death: This is the literary relic of exceeding rarity, which is treasured by a Sioux City man who might be styled a "literary crank" because of his love for poetry of merit, and who very recently came into possession of the production.

The poem in question is in seven stanzas, written in the meter of "The Raven," and tells in a mystical vein of the sad death of Poe. The explanation given of the claim that the poem was written by Poe three days after the poet's death is that the poem is purported to have been transmitted through a Spiritualistic medium.

"You need not look surprised and smile," said the literary man to a Tribune reporter. "I am not a Spiritualist; neither do I believe in the tricks of the 'cabinet,' but after I read that it set me to thinking.

"Where did I get it? Well, now, I can tell you that easy enough. I got it from a friend the other day whose home is in Baltimore, in which city Poe died. We all know that when Poe's health became shattered from overwork and worry he resorted to stimulants and that he could stand very little liquor. In 1849, after his first wife died, he became enamored of a Richmond widow, and the day was set for his marriage. On September 30 of that year he started out to make the wedding arrangements, but for several days after nothing was known of his movements. He reappeared on October 3 in Baltimore on the day of the municipal election in that city. He got in with a party of old military friends, was drugged and was taken around into the different voting booths of the city and voted twenty-one times. Before night of that day he was found unconscious in a liquor saloon used as a polling place, was removed to a hospital, where he died, it is reported, of delirium tremens.

"Of course, this is all history and long forgotten, but this is the point I am trying to get at: Just about this time Spiritualism, or what was then called 'Modern Spiritualism,' was finding converts and believers in a large number of the larger towns in the United States. It was about this time also that it spread across the ocean to England and created such an uproar. Meetings of Spiritualists were common about that time in Baltimore, and it is reported that the poem in question was transmitted through a medium from the spirit of the dead poet three days after his death at a private seance. That is all there is to it, and here is the poem, the literary merit of which you can judge for yourself."

Woman weak and woman mortal, thro' thy spirit's open portal
I would read the runic record of mine earthly being o'er—
I would feel that fire returning, which within my soul was burning;
When my star was quenched in darkness, set to rise on earth no more,
When I sank beneath life's burdens in the streets of Baltimore.

O, those memories sore and saddening,
O, that night of anguish maddening,
When my lone heart suffered shipwreck on a demon-haunted shore,
When the fiends grew wild with laughter and the silence following after
Was more awful and appalling than the cannon's deadly roar—
Than the tramp of mighty armies thro' the streets of Baltimore.

Like a fiery serpent crawling, like a maelstrom madly boiling,
Did this Phlegethon of fury sweep my shuddering spirit o'er,
Rushing onward, blindly reeling—tortured by intensest feeling,
Like Prometheus when the vultures thro' his quivering vitals tore—
Swift I fled from death and darkness thro' the streets of Baltimore.

No one near to save or love me, no kind face to watch above me,
Though I heard the sound of footsteps, like the waves upon the shore,
Beating—beating—beating — beating—now advancing, now retreating,
With a dull and heavy rhythm, with a long continuous roar—
Heard the sound of human footsteps in the streets of Baltimore.

There at length they found me lying, weak and withered, sick and dying,
And my shattered wreck of being to a kindly refuge bore;
But my woe was past enduring, and my soul cast off its mooring,
Crying as I floated onward, I am of the earth no more!
I have forfeited life's burdens in the streets of Baltimore.

Where wast thou, O, Power Eternal, when this fiery fiend infernal
Beat me with his burning fasces till I sank to rise no more?
Oh! was all my life-long error crowded in that night of terror?
Did my sin find expiation which to judgment went before,
Summoned to a dread tribunal in the streets of Baltimore?

Nay, with deep delirious pleasure I drained my life's full measure,
Till the fatal fiery serpent feeds upon my being's core;
Then with force and fire volcanic, summoning a strength titanic,
Did I burst the bands that bound me—battered down my being's door—
Fled and left my shattered dwelling to the dust of Baltimore.

Going back without lamenting, with no sorrowful repenting,
I can read my life's sad story in a light unknown before!
For there is not woe so dismal, not an evil so abysmal,
But a rainbow arch of glory spans the yawning chasm o'er!
And across that Bridge of Beauty did I pass from Baltimore!

In that grand, Eternal City, where the angel-hearts take pity
On the sin which men forgive not, or inactively deplore,
Earth has lost the power to harm me! Death can never more alarm me,
And I drink fresh inspiration from the Source which I adore—
Through my spirit's apotheosis—that new birth in Baltimore!

Now no longer sadly yearning—love for love finds sweet returning—
And there comes no ghostly raven, tapping at my chamber door!
Calmly, in the golden glory, I can sit and read life's story,
For my soul from out that shadow hath been lifted evermore—
From that deep and dismal shadow, in the streets of Baltimore!

A Backhanded Answer.

The Rev. S. R. Desha, chaplain of the legislature of Hawaii, lately importuned the Throne of Grace to forgive those members of the legislature who voted for a certain "Sunday bill" that was obnoxious to his puritanical sentiments, and passed the same over the Governor's veto. Now, it is said, these wicked legislators are going to oust him from his chaplaincy in consequence of his prayer. His pious intercession, however earnestly given, seems to have brought an answer contrary to the good man's desires.

His experience demonstrates the need, if one must pray, of praying wisely as well as sincerely, lest his prayer return him a curse instead of a blessing.

IMMORTALITY.

O ripest rose upon Time's topmost twig!
Most mellowed monarch of a wide, wide bloom!
Harvest is ready, and the yellow rig
Bends with each year a heavy quickened womb.
Why shouldst thou weep? A wiser from thee springs
To feather forth a more unerring dart.
Thy mission is accomplished, here is death;
Rest thou in peace, and bid young, brighter wings
Blaze forth another self, a stronger heart,
To hand to other years life's borrowed breath.

Occult Influence.

A Narrative of a Remarkable Happening.

DOMAIN OF THE OCCULT.

The Whole World Is Being Agitated by the Occult Influences That Are Exclusively in the Hands of Those on the Spirit Side of Life, and Which are Used by them as the Requisite Opportunity Offers.

Stuart Crane, traveler for a Cincinnati shoe house, is in a hospital at Youngstown, suffering from complete nervous breakdown, the result of a series of mysterious, inexplicable happenings which have driven him almost to madness.

Twice before in the last two years this man, who is renowned for his energy, his free and easy style, his "hustling" ability, has been driven almost insane by worry and the mystery that surrounds him, and to which neither he nor those with whom he is associated are able to discover the slightest clew.

The entire mystery—which may drive him to death unless it is explained—hinges on one thing. Sometimes once a week, sometimes every day for a week, sometimes once a month, the bedclothes from the bed in which he is sleeping mysteriously disappears, and, never yet has any trace of them—so far as he can discover—been found.

The repetition of the mysterious disappearance of the bed clothes has changed the man from a jolly, care free, hard working business man, intent on beating the other fellow making a sale in the face of obstacles, to a half insane, nervous, trembling individual. Yet the firm which employs him has insisted that he shall remain at work until the mystery is solved and the cause for the disappearance of the bed clothes is found.

When They First Disappeared.

The first experience Crane had in losing his bed clothes was in February, 1903, when Crane was selling goods in Hillsborough, a country town in Highland county, Ohio. Crane had sold a big bill of goods to Feibel Bros., one of the leading stores of the town, and, of course, went out in the evening with members of the firm. Harry Gordon and Irving Smith and Eli Hough were with him until late in the evening, when he retired to his room in the Parker house.

The night was bitterly cold, and he left the steam turned on in full force, yet, before daylight, he was awakened by a sense of chilliness and discovered that he was lying on the bed without a stitch of bed clothing. He was angry. He suspected that some of the crowd with whom he had foregathered in the evening had played a joke upon him, and he rang for the bellboy, demanding bed clothes. He left Hillsboro convinced that Smith and Gordon had played a joke on him—but he concluded that it would be wise to say nothing about it, for fear of arousing resentment and "queering" his trade in the town.

The next night he made Greenfield and stopped at the Parker house, forgetting all about the bed clothes. He sold a big bill of goods to Max Guggenheimer, and that evening "set them up" to the boys around Carruthers' place for a couple of hours, as was his custom. He retired somewhere about midnight, and before 2 o'clock waked up and found that all his bed clothes had disappeared.

Thought It Was a Joke.

This time he was puzzled. He rang for more bed clothes and denounced the fellows with whom he had enjoyed the evening. He believed, according to his story, that he had inadvertently mentioned his adventure at Hillsboro to the crowd, and that some of them had decided the joke was good enough to repeat.

He determined to have revenge in some way on the jokers, and filed the matter away for future reference in his mind, plotting to "get even" when he returned to those towns. He went his way in peace for several weeks, and had no more adventures until in March he stopped at the Arlington in Washington Court House. He arrived in the town late in the evening, stepped into the bar for a minute, after registering, and, being tired, went direct to his room. He waked up at 5 a. m. and the bed clothes were gone again. Astonished and angry, he demanded more clothes, and, receiving them, went to bed again and slept until morning.

He came down stairs and, taking the clerk aside, he made diligent inquiries as to whether any of his "friends" either from Greenfield or Hillsboro had seen the register and decided to repeat the joke. There was no trace of any person who ever heard of the two other adventures.

Possibility of Its Being Joke Removed.

Crane, on that trip, visited both Hillsboro and Greenfield and sounded out his acquaintances as to the "joke," but they were amazed at the idea of such thing, and declared they never had thought of playing any joke upon him, much less such a trick as exposing him to catching cold.

Puzzled and only half satisfied, Crane returned to Cincinnati and went to his home in Dayton street, where he lived with his mother and sister.

That night the bed clothes were stolen again. He waked up feeling cold and the clothes were gone. His sister and mother both looked suspiciously upon him when he told the story at breakfast, and gave him to understand that they thought he had stayed out too late and had hidden the clothes himself.

Crane was angry by that time, but his anger cooled and he commenced to worry. He could not understand it at all, because the stealing of the bed clothes off his own bed in his own home seemed to preclude the possibility of any outsider doing the deed. For several weeks he puzzled himself about the matter, then he half began to accept his sister's theory that he had been the guilty party and had hidden the bed clothes while sleep walking or while under the influence of undue stimulants.

He was extremely careful for several months about his drinking habits. He never had been a hard drinker, but he had been in the habit of taking a few glasses of beer before going to bed, and, because of the mysterious disappearance of the bed clothes, he stopped even that. Until September there was nothing unusual in his life, and he had one of the most prosperous seasons of his career. Sales were large and his commissions big, so he began to plan to marry a girl with whom he was in love, believing that his income at last justified the step.

On September 10, 1903, Crane was in Lexington, Ky. He had little business and met few people, as Lexington had just been added to his territory, and he retired, worn out, about 10 o'clock. Before 12 o'clock the bed clothes had disappeared. He confesses that on that occasion he was frightened. He did not ring for more bed clothes, as the night was warm, and he left the hotel without saying anything to the clerks. The loss of the bed linen and a handsome coverlet was discovered and Crane was charged with packing them in his trunks. He of course denied the charge, but offered to pay the full cost price of the missing articles, returning to Lexington from Frankfort to settle the claim and sleeping there. That night the bed clothes disappeared again. He invited the hotel people to search his luggage, and they were as puzzled as he.

Business required that he remain in Lexington for several days, and, after paying the hotel people for the two sets of bed clothes, he moved over to the Phoenix—and that night his bed clothes disappeared again.

Suspects a Mysterious Enemy.

Crane by that time was in a state of panic. He concluded that he was being pursued by some mysterious enemy. He even thought that there was something supernatural in the disappearance of the sheets and shams, and began to wonder about ghosts.

On September 15 he went to Louisville and put up at the Gault house. That night the bed clothes disappeared again, and he was thrown into a condition of terror. He left his trunks in his room at the Gault and went to sleep that night at the Louisville hotel, further down the street, and the bed clothes disappeared again. He had locked and barred every door and window of his room, and he found them locked and barred again in the morning—but the bed clothes were gone.

He was frantic over the mysterious affairs, but even his wildest imagination could not reach a satisfactory solution of the case. He was planning to be married in October, but, after much deliberation and consultation with the young woman who was to become his wife, and explanation of his strange case, they agreed to postpone the marriage until the mystery could be solved.

There were no further developments until June of 1904, and Crane was beginning to think of the matter as a freak of sleep walking on his part, when one night he stopped at the Warner house in Chillicothe, O. It happened that there was a street carnival on and the hotel was crowded, so Crane doubled up with his friend, "Bud" McKeehan, a grocery salesman. They retired at 11 o'clock, and at 1 o'clock "Bud" kicked him and accused him of pulling off the covers. They had an argument and finally both, fully awake, got up to search for the bed clothes. They had disappeared utterly. Not a trace of them could be found. McKeehan was mad, declaring Crane had played a trick on him, but when he saw the frightened condition of his companion he cooled down and tried to treat the matter as a jest.

Bellboy Frightened by Disappearance.

It was no jest for Crane, however. He worried over the renewal of the occurrence and could not forget it. Two nights later, in the Healy House at New Vienna, Ohio, the bed clothes disappeared again, and Crane, reduced to a condition of nervous excitement, was ready for anything. The next night he arrived at Blanchester a fit subject for a hospital bed.

He appealed to the landlord, Eddie Hawk of the Bindley House, to protect him, and to satisfy his guest, Hawk sent Ben Kent, one of the bellboys, to sit up in the room with Crane while he slept.

At 2 o'clock in the morning Kent rushed downstairs, frightened almost white, declaring that the bed clothes were gone. He vowed he had not fallen asleep, but that he had turned his head for a few minutes and shut his eyes, and, when he looked up, the bed clothes were gone.

That experience proved the undoing of Crane. He went home, and for weeks was sick with brain fever. When he recovered he told the entire story to the head of his firm—and because he was the best salesman they had, the firm requested him to resume work and try to solve the mystery.

In his efforts to find the key to the strange occurrences Crane wrote as much as he could remember of the details of his experiences during the first year of losing bed clothes, and the facts given herein are taken from his memoranda.

Since then there have been nine recurrences of the disappearance of bed clothes, but they ceased suddenly in October of 1904, and Crane had no more trouble until May 5 of this year, when he was stopping at the Clarendon in Zanesville, O. Then the bed clothes went away suddenly.

Pinned Them to Mattress in Vain.

Determined to solve the mystery, Crane on the next night slept at the Todd House in Jackson, O., and pinned the bed clothes to the sheet under him, with safety pins, crawling into a sort of sleeping bag. He remained awake, partly from nervousness, until after midnight, when he dropped off into a slight doze. He awakened again shortly after 3 o'clock and the bed clothes were all right. At 3:15, according to his watch, he wakened again and the bed clothes were gone—and he was lying on the bare mattress.

For the next three nights—in Caldwell, Cambridge, and New Philadelphia—the bed clothes disappeared, and he arrived in Youngstown in a condition of physical and mental collapse.

THE WEAKLINGS.

At the world's centers, dross and dregs collect;
There the offscourings of the intellect,
The scum of education, froth of schools,
The lees of culture—and the wit of fools.
There the dumb thing whose heaven's the sleepy bowl,
Possessed of body, but bereft of soul;
One in desire, man's bidden task to shirk,
To have the harvest, but escape the work.
The weaklings, tatters of past masquerade,
Cast by progenitors in lifelong shade;
Unequal to the strain, whate'er it be,
Foredoomed to cumber earth, by Fate's decree.
And the dense lubbards, inert, lumpish swine,
Content to slumber though the sun may shine,
Willing that feebler hands shall slave to earn,
The food to fatten, and the wood to burn.

The World Over Is Aglow With Spiritualism

To comprehensively Illustrate the fact that the world over is aglow with Spiritualistic phenomena, we reproduce from Light, London, England, the following, which will be read with deep interest.

THE JAPANESE SPIRIT.

The Japanese Are a Nation of Spiritualists.

Perhaps the most enlightening fact that is dawning upon us respecting the Japanese is that they are a nation of Spiritualists, and have been for centuries; and perhaps it is even more enlightening that to this fact may be traced the greater part of their puzzling heroism and patience, their beautiful dignity and their serene contempt for death. It is this fact which is most luminous in the latest book on Japan by "a son of the land," as George Meredith, who writes an introduction to the book, calls him,—one Okakura-Yoshesaburo—whose work on "The Japanese Spirit" is published by Archibald Constable and Co.

The writer is quite modest in his estimate of his book, and regards as very formidable any attempt to fully account for Japan, whose social structure is entirely unlike that of any other people. Its philosophy, too, in so far as it has any, is unique.

ITS RELIGION IS PRACTICALLY CREEDLESS, CHURCHLESS; AND, IN A BRITISH SENSE, GODLESS. ALL THESE AND MANY OTHER SUBTILE FACTORS IN THE CASE NEED TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT. It would be impossible to understand one set of phenomena apart from the rest. "One could as well cut a single mesh from a net without prejudice to the rest."

It must be frankly noted, however, that certain details concerning, say, "the standard of beauty" in Japan, for instance, do not help us much. We are told that, "in a lady, for example, mildness and grace are, generally speaking, preferred to that strength or manliness of expression which would be thought more becoming in her brother." We can assure Brother Okakura-Yoshesasaburo that this is by no means singular to Japan; that it is a mesh in our net—or, let us say, in her net. In other particulars we do not find this writer excittingly enlightening, but this is probably owing to the fact that he deals so much with wild old nature legends; the instructive fact here being that survivals of these appear to be more traceable in Japan than elsewhere, especially in relation to the highly important, the, in fact, vital matter of the Royal House.

The present Emperor of Japan is gravely described as "the hundred and twenty-first link in the eternal chain" which reaches up to "the divine ruler," the grandson of "the Sun-Goddess," who was sent down from heaven to earth to rule Japan. "On his departure, a formal command to descend and rule the land now placed under his care was accompanied by the present of a mirror, a sword, and a string of crescent-shaped jewels"; and, if we don't believe it, it suffices to be told that these treasures, which the grandson of "the Sun-Goddess" brought down with him from heaven, are "still preserved in our imperial household as regalia."

This writer tells the story gravely, but cautiously remarks that "subjected to scientific scrutiny the whole tale presents many gaps in logical sequence." "Still," he adds, with characteristic Japanese suavity, "it must be said that the divine origin of our emperors has invested their throne with the double halo of temporal and of spiritual power from the earliest days of their ascendancy; and the people, themselves the descendants of those patriarchs who served under the banners of Emperor Jimmu (the 'Sun-Goddess' grandson), or else of those who early learned to bow themselves down before the divine conqueror, have looked up to this throne with an ever-growing reverence and pride."

It is easy to see how this old legend, with its blending of spirits and people, has paved the way for the closer and larger spirit commerce of to-day. We are told that in primitive Japan ancestor-worship was the first form of belief. Each family had its own broup of spirits of forefathers to whom was dedicated a daily homage of ritual and offerings; the guardian ghosts demanding of their living descendants that they should be good and brave in their own way. Isolated for centuries, these families, gathered round the central ruling power, in whose divine origin and authority they firmly believed, contributed in their turn their own spirit relationship to the imperial ones, thus eventually forming and consolidating a national cult; and "it was but natural that the people's heart should come in course of time to re-echo in harmony with the key-note struck by the one through whom the gods breathe eternal life. The whole nation is bound by that sacred tie of common belief and common thought."

Hence, as we have said, the Japanese are a nation of Spiritualists. Here, in brief, is what this writer says of his people: The average Japanese does not imagine the spirits of the deceased to be something different and distant from our actual living self. THE DEPARTED, ALTHOUGH INVISIBLE, ARE THOUGHT TO BE READING THEIR ETHEREAL LIFE IN THE SAME WORLD IN MUCH THE SAME STATE AS THAT TO WHICH THEY HAD BEEN ACCUSTOMED WHILE ON EARTH.

Wordsworth's little child, who persisted that "we are seven," was right. The difference between the so-called dead and living is that of tangibility or visibility; nothing more. Hence, the fortitude, the calmness, even the joyousness, associated with death. "It is in the sunny space within the simple railing of these Shinto shrines where the smiling presence of the patron saint of a deified forefather or a great man is so clearly felt, that our childhood has played for tens of centuries its games of innocent joy. Monthly and yearly festivals are observed within the divine enclosure of a guardian god, when a whole community under his protection let themselves go in good-natured laughter and gleeful mirth before the favoring eyes of their divine patron. How different is this jovial feeling from that gloomy sensation with which we approach a Buddhist temple, recalling death and the misery of life from every corner of its mysterious interior!" Happy Japanese! "WHEN IT GETS DUSK," SAYS THIS WRITER, "EVERY BIRD KNOWS WHITHER TO WING ITS WAY HOME. EVEN SO WITH US ALL WHEN THE NIGHT OF DEATH SPREADS ITS DARK FOLDS OVER OUR MORTAL MIND."

CHRISTIANITY AND SPIRITUALISM.

"Death Does Not Change Us, and We Are Only in the Life Beyond, What We Have Made Ourselves In This Life."

A late number of "T. P.'s Weekly" contained a review of "Christianity and Spiritualism." Here is nearly the whole of it:

Among the theories most often brought forward to explain away the Spiritualistic phenomena, that of hallucination holds the foremost place. But this has ceased to have any foundation, in face of the photographs of spirits obtained by Aksakof, Crookes, Volpi, and so many others. A hallucination cannot be photographed. The invisibles do not only impress the photographic plate, but also instruments of precision, such as the Marey registering machines, used by English scientists in their experiments. They lift up material objects, they decompose them, and recompose them, they leave the impression of their hands, feet or faces in hot paraffin wax. All these are so many proofs against the theory of either individual or collective hallucination.

Certain people accuse the phenomena of vulgarity, or coarseness, of triviality; they consider them ridiculous. These opinions prove their incompetence. The manifestations cannot differ from what they would have been, coming from the same spirit, had he been living on this earth. Death does not change us, and we are only, in the life beyond, what we have made ourselves in this life. This explains the inferiority of so many discarnate spirits.

On the other hand, these trivial or vulgar manifestations have their use, for they more easily attract attention, and best reveal the identity of the spirit. They have convinced numbers of experimenters of the reality of spirit survival, and have brought them, little by little, to the study of the more elevated phenomena.

For long, Spiritualism was considered a ridiculous thing, for long Spiritualists were laughed at, mocked, and accused of madness. But have not all those who have brought forward a new idea or a new truth, been called madmen? "A madman" was said of Galileo. "Mad" were called Giordano Bruno, Galvani, Watt, Palissy, Salomon de Caus!

This is a striking instance of altered tone on the part of the press. Survivals of the old foolishness and ignorance occasionally appear, but the change on the whole is great.

SPIRIT CONTROL.

The Law Governing the Same Pointed Out.

Now that the subject of Obsession has again been raised in Light by the references thereto made by Dr. Colles in his recent address to the London Spiritualist Alliance, and reported in our issue of May 27 last, the following extract from the Harbinger of Light will be timely and of interest to our readers. The Harbinger of Light says:

"Where people of good moral tendencies are obsessed, it usually arises from unwisdom on their part; they are, as a rule, those who, being sensitives, have endeavored to develop mediumship without any preliminary study of the subject, sitting either alone or in a promiscuous circle, often at frequent intervals, inviting any spirit that chooses to come and operate upon them. Under these conditions the selfish and mischievous spirits who frequent the earth plane are more likely to respond than the more advanced ones who need higher conditions. Remember this: A disembodied spirit has less hypnotic influence over a mortal than another mortal of the same mental and moral status would have; hence the subject can, by the exertion of his will power, assert himself and throw off the influence. Individual spirits do intervene to protect mediums and those who earnestly pray for help, but not by force. The aura of a good spirit is like impenetrable armor against the attacks of a malignant one, and one or more loving spirits spreading it around the troubled friends in the body, effectually protects them, whilst the radiations of a highly advanced spirit, entering an apartment where undeveloped spirits were intruding, would have such a painful effect on them as to cause them to retreat in confusion. Mischievous spirits cannot intrude into a thoroughly harmonious circle; there must be some weak place for them to do so. Selfishness, expressed in a desire to be the medium or to get something personal, is usually the gap where they enter and the greatest bar to real progress."

TOLSTOY ON DEATH.

The Fear of Death Is a Terrible Superstition.

Some extracts from unpublished letters from Count Tolstoy, communicated to the "Deutscher Rundschau," are given in "Psychische Studien." The great Russian writer says:

"Death is a change of consciousness, a change of that which I recognize as myself. Therefore the fear of death is a terrible superstition. Death is a joyful event which occurs at the end of every life. Death is the destruction of the organs by means of which I perceive the world as it appears to me in this life; the destruction of the glass through which I have hitherto looked, and its replacement by another. Death is the transition from one consciousness to another, from one manner of perception to another. From one stage, with its scenery, we pass, as it were, to another. At the moment of transition it becomes clear that what we consider as reality is only appearance, for we go from one appearance to another. During this transition we get at least a perception of the true Reality. Therefore the moment of death is of high importance and value."

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH.

The Rev. J. B. Martin Barnes (Minister of the Unitarian Church, King's Lynn), Preaching on Whit-Sunday on the Above Subject, Made the Following Interesting Remarks, Which Go to Prove that Spiritualism is Finding Its Way Into the More Advanced Churches:

The Rev. J. B. Martin Barnes (minister of the Unitarian Church, King's Lynn), preaching on Whit-Sunday on the above subject, made the following interesting remarks, which go to prove that Spiritualism is finding its way into the more advanced churches:—

The account of the Day of Pentecost in the Acts of the Apostles is held by some to be a mere fiction with no foundation in fact. I do not acept that view myself, as I believe that all myths and superstitions are fundamentally related to truth, and that in this story in particular we have a REAL MANIFESTATION OF SPIRITUAL POWER, ALTHOUGH IT IS HIGHLY PROBABLE THAT THE EVENT DID NOT TAKE PLACE IN ALL ITS DETAILS PRECISELY AS RECORDED. Similar occurrences have been reported in the present day, of men being controlled by spirits to speak foreign languages which they have never learned; moreover, St. Paul, in 1 Corinthians, alludes to the "gift of tongues" as being one of the peculiar endowments of the Spirit, although he does not attach much importance to it unless there be an interpreter in the assembly or seance. The fact that every man heard the Apostles speak in his own tongue has been held by our orthodox brethren to have been a miracle; they read into the story the idea that although the Apostles spoke in their native language, yet all the strangers heard them in their own various tongues simultaneously; that is to say, the words of the Apostles sounded differently to different men, and, therefore, this was a striking evidence of "the wonderful works of God." Such a view is very far-fetched and irrational, and would be contrary to the science of sound. The human ear is constituted alike for all; if a sound is uttered all will hear that sound in the same way, although all might not be able to interpret its meaning. If all could understand its meaning, and yet each man among the foreigners only knew his own tongue, then it was not that a different language was spoken but that each stranger had suddenly the gift of interpretation of the same speech, translating it into his own familiar dialect. But that, to my mind, does not seem likely; these foreigners could hardly be in the psychic condition necessary for the sudden reception of the gift of interpretation. For each man to interpret the words of the Apostles in his own tongue would mean that EACH ONE WAS CONTROLLED BY A DIFFERENT GUIDE OR SPIRIT, AND IMPRESSED WITH THE CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE TRUE MEANING OF WHAT THE SPEAKERS WERE SAYING.

Now I do not say that this would be impossible under certain conditions, and I go so far as to say that if we today could enter into the right state of spiritual receptivity we might acquire, by our relationship to the Infinite Truth, a knowledge of foreign languages and science by psychic impression instead of by the slow and tedious process of education. It is possible that an age may come when psychic impression will supersede tutorial education, and that in order to acquire knowledge we shall not have to learn but simply to receive it by entering into spiritual harmony with the Soul of Comprehension. We shall gain knowledge not so much by tuition as by intuition, so that although in childhood lessons will have to be taught by tuition, intuition will later on have become so much developed by hereditary transmission that immediately a fact is mentioned it will be perceived by the pupil that such is the case, that he already knew that lesson before he was taught it, and has only needed a tutor to remind him of knowledge inherent in himself; and once reminded of what he unconsciously knows he will always consciously remember it, so that there would be absolutely no need for a repetition of the lesson. At the age of fifteen or before, the pupils might be in a position to acquire further knowledge by passing on to secondary schools established for the purpose of teaching or imparting science, art, literature, and languages by psychic impression, suggestion, and spirit control. Psychology will be found to include all "ologies," so that we shall learn not so much by study of external phenomena as by the unfolding of facts sown in the mind through countless generations, and it may become as natural to "grow" in wisdom and understanding as it is to grow in grace and character under equitable conditions. But all this belongs to the "Spirit of Truth whom the world cannot receive," owing to the "strong delusion" of the materialistic hypothesis.

To return to our subject, I do not think those foreigners could have heard the Apostles speak in their own tongues if they (the Apostles) spoke in their native language, because these listeners were not in a psychic condition to receive the gift of interpretation which would make it seem as though they heard "every man in his own tongue." But I think the real truth of the matter is that the Apostles themselves were CONTROLLED TO SPEAK IN VARIOUS LANGUAGES, NOT ALL AT ONCE, BUT AS ONE WAS SPEAKING, OTHERS WOULD INTERPRET WHAT WAS BEING SAID TO THE DIFFERENT GROUPS OF FOREIGNERS STANDING AROUND (see 1 Cor., xiv.), or else that each Apostle was controlled or inspired in turn, one after the other, to speak the same or similar words in a different tongue, so that all would be able to understand without the need of a special interpreter to each group.

That there took place a remarkable outpouring of spiritual power I am convinced, not as miraculous, except in the sense that it was of an occult order and proved, as many such cases do to-day, "the wonderful works of God." The world cannot receive this "Holy Spirit" by faith; to refuse to believe in it is like a man shutting himself up in a room almost air-tight, breathing the same air till it becomes foul, instead of opening the window and letting in the fresh breezes that blow gently outside.

Why does not the Spirit of God impress mankind to righteousness and bring about an end of evil and the triumph of good? Simply because the world has shut out the "Spirit of Truth;" it has barred the windows of love and justice, it has bolted the doorways of equity and righteousness, it has set up the iron shutters of mammon and capitalism, pride and greed; the still, small voice is the only spiritual breath it knows, but that voice it so often stifles, hearing just enough of it to be conscious of evil, but not enough to see that evil would not be there if it pulled those barriers down and let in the "mighty rushing wind," "the Spirit of Truth," which is even now ready to "guide the world into all truth," and prove a real Comforter in the end.

"Comfort ye, my people, saith the Lord"; but there can be no comfort to the soul that shuts the window against spiritual consciousness and bolts the door against faith and the divine influx of heavenly knowledge. But if the soul opens itself to receive this divine and angelic impression, if the world of humanity opens its mind to receive the presence and the power of the "Holy Spirit," then will evil cease to exist because its causes will evaporate; then God will be in all our thoughts and ways, and we shall fully realize that in Him "we live and move and have our being," and that the Holy Influence of His All-Embracing and All-Pervasive and Persuasive Spirit has been "brooding over the waters" right down the vast ages of the past, through all the stages of evolution, striving to be expressed in terms of man, until at length the world opens wide the window of love, and breathes the pure, fresh air of a "peace" which cannot adequately be explained and which "passeth understanding."

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

THE ACTOR'S STORY.

John McCullough as Man, Actor, and Spirit.

"John McCullough, as Man, Actor, and Spirit," is the record, not only of the mortal career of an eminent tragedian, but of the continuation of his conscious existence beyond the change called death. It is written by an earnest and convinced Spiritualist, Susie C. Clark, and published by the Murray & Emery Company, Boston Mass.

The first portion of the volume deals with the actor's earthly career as an Irish lad (born 1832) who went to Philadelphia in 1847, and ten years later found his vocation on the stage, being from the first almost exclusively the interpreter of Roman parts, such as "Coriolanus" and "Virginius." The first reference to occult influence is perhaps wide of the mark, but to us it is suggestive of spirit overshadowing:

"It were easy to believe that other and earlier experiences of the soul had enriched his powers, that, unconsciously to himself, he possessed an inuitive heredity. One might readily conceive that he had known the life of a Roman, he seemed to born to the purple. No one ever wore a toga so regally, so naturally."

Later, when he had returned to speak to earth through the mediumship of the Rev. F. A. Wiggin, lately a Baptist minister, and now pastor of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, he gave the following explanation of his powers:

"Clairvoyance is a feature of the perceptive organs which all mediums do not possess, and all spirits are not clairvoyant—I am not; therefore I cannot see your physical bodies. But one thing I did not knew when on earth—I was inspired as a medium. Forrest was my teacher, and when he went out he remained my teacher. The elder Booth also inspired my acting, though I held the people by my personal magnetism. But it all seems so far away I can hardly recall it in this life."

He gave a good test of identity by recognizing a former acquaintance who was unknown to the medium or to anyone else present, and by repeating the words that this gentleman had written on a slip of paper which had not been touched by the medium.

Extracts from his fine and uplifting discourses and "spiritual reveries" given through Mr. Wiggin, are quoted in the book, and the following words bear testimony on the subject of mediumship:

"Mediumship is universal; every one is a medium. In its perfect state it is the result of the individual's spiritual development and unfoldment. Mediumship depends on the organization, not on morality, but its value is enhanced by morality. The object of mediumship is to foster the needs of a spiritualized manhood. When mediumship is more intelligently understood, it will be a grander, more beautiful help to the world, and fraudulent mediumship will be driven from the world forever.

"The ability of a spirit to control depends on the sensitiveness of the nerve terminals at certain points of your body. Preserve your patience and passivity in your sittings. Make conditions and do not let conditions make you. Never aim to draw any spirit down to your plane of development. Bring your spiritual life up in harmony of vibration with the influences above. But remember, in your endeavors to unfold any phase of mediumship, that it does not consist merely in being controlled by a spirit, but it is the co-operation with spirits for wise and beneficent purposes. Mediumship is a beautiful gate leading through soul-unfoldment to the wisdom of the spheres."

SPIRIT MUSIC REALIZED.

Hearing on Every Side Strains of the Grandest Music Possible.

A few weeks since, when unfitted by mental worry and bodily ill health to deal with the subject, I noticed an article or letter in Light, on "Spirit Music," and I thought that when able to do so I would give your readers an experience which my people had when my second brother passed on. He was a beautiful boy, and very healthy and strong up to a certain time, when, sailing on a raft on a pond, he overbalanced and was precipitated into the water. Soaked to the skin as he was, even then all would have been well with him in all probability had he hurried home; but unfortunately another boy persuaded him to go to his home, and the mother allowed him to dry his clothes by the fire. Afterwards rheumatic fever set in, followed by a long, weary period of suffering from heart disease, terminating in consumption. Death (so-called) having taken place, and the whole household being utterly overwhelmed by the apparent ending of a young and beautiful life, what was their surprise on hearing on every side strains of the grandest music possible! My mother's first attitude was one of incredible wonder, and then she said: "It must be some of the neighbors—they cannot know he has gone," and she hurried the servants off to tell them, only to be answered that they all knew, and had lowered their blinds, and that they themselves had heard the mysterious music in my mother's house, and wondered at it. This beautiful, mysterious spirit music, which was wonderfully comforting and soothing, continued for three days and nights without stopping, and then ceased. Perhaps others of your readers may be able to add similar testimony.

IT IS DEMONSTRATED.

The Wonderful Power of Spiritualism.

Looking around our pretty little hall recently, wherein some eighty Spiritualists were gathered, I could not help wondering at the vast latent powers which exist in Spiritualism. Here were people drawn together from all classes, professions, trades, and sects. A former Roman Catholic sat amicably by a Baptist; a quondam Church of England man shared his hymn book with a once avowed Agnostic; a Salvation Army soldier chummed in with a strict Unitarian. What had drawn all these sects together? Why had they consented to throw off all the trammels of their old creeds and dogmas? I asked myself this question mentally, and the answer came, 'It is love.' They had sought their loved ones who had passed away from mortal sight, and had found them not. A beloved mother, a devoted child, a sweet wife, had been torn from their side by the ruthless hand of death, and love cried out for some positive evidence of their continued existence in the world of spirits. The bereaved ones in their anguish asked for bread, and their churches and chapels could only offer them a stone; and love had refused to accept it.

I gazed once more at my fellow-worshipers, and saw almost every profession and trade represented in that strange assemblage. I recognized Conservatives, Liberals, Radicals, and Socialists, and all met together in harmony and peace to offer up prayer and praise to the One Supreme Spirit of the Universe. "So many men, so many opinions," thought I, all viewing Spiritualism from their own peculiar standpoint. No two minds thinking exactly the same, yet all assembled for one purpose—to hold communion with those who passed to spirit life; induced by love to become Spiritualists.

How true is it that before a man can love his God he must learn to love his fellow-man. To me this little congregation was typical of the spirit world, where love in the higher spheres reigns supreme. If love could gather together that Sunday evening so many people of different occupation, temperament, mind, and social position, I argued to myself that Spiritualism must be the highest manifestation and fulfillment of love; and, therefore, a Spiritualism pure and simple was the real philosopher's stone—the elixir of life eternal.

What other religion can gather the children of earth under her wings like this beautiful Spiritualism of ours? Does it not dry the mourner's tears, give comfort to the lonely, knowledge and light to the investigator, hope to the despairing, and joy to the dying? Spiritualism is the only healer of this world's cruel wrongs and woes. It is a grand co-operative movement, and embraces every class. When it becomes universal, then, and not till then, will come the millennium. Fellow Spiritualists, every human being is but a link in the chain of universal brotherhood. Until that chain be riveted with the golden links of love, none of us shall become perfect spirits.

LINNAEUS AS AN OCCULTIST.

Several Instances of Warning and Prediction Are Given.

In "Psychische Studien," for February, Professor Max Seiling gives an account of an unpublished manuscript in the University of Upsala, written by the celebrated Swedish botanist, Carl af Linne, commonly known as Linnaeus, the orginator of the classification of plants which formed the basis of modern systematic botany. The chief idea set forth in this manuscript is the doctrine of a "divine Nemesis," and he gives many examples to prove that even in this life retribution overtakes the guilty. In one case, a man who had killed his father-in-law with three bullets, himself died some years later from three cancerous ulcers corresponding in position to the three wounds. In another, a man fell through a hole in the ice in the same place where, during a previous winter, he had killed another man. Again, three men were charged with a murder; as none of them could be proved guilty, lots were drawn to decide who should suffer. The man on whom the lot fell was afterwards shown to be innocent, but the king ordered the execution to proceed, saying that it was God's judgment, and the man must have been guilty of some other crime. Then the man confessed that he had committed a murder five years previously.

Several instances of warnings and predictions are given, one of which relates to Linnaeus himself:

"My brother Samuel was considered clever, but I was regarded as stupid. Everyone said that my brother would be a professor, and even called him by that name. A poor woman, who was asserted to be a clairvoyant, and who had never seen either of us, asked to see some of our clothes, and then said of my brother Samuel, "he will be a preacher," and of me, "he will be a professor, will travel far, and become better known than anyone else in the kingdom." My mother, to deceive her, showed her another garment, telling her it belonged to my brother. "No," she replied, "that belongs to the one who will be a professor, and dwell far away."

On one occasion Linnaeus' wife heard a sound as of heavy footsteps in the room used as a museum; she aroused her husband, who also heard them very distinctly, though the museum was locked up. A few days afterwards he heard that an especial and confidential friend had died at the same hour; the footsteps, he said, were exactly like those of his friend. On several occasions, when he was about to return home, his wife and other persons heard him enter the hall, go into his room, come out again, closing it behind him; and it was not until his wife had waited in vain for him to enter the room in which she was that she knew that it was not his real self. On these occasions she said to herself or her friends, "My husband will be home soon," which usually happened in about half an hour's time. This occurred not once only, but several times, and at different places where they resided.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

AN AFTER-DEATH MESSAGE.

His Spirit Voice Was Distinctly Heard by a Relative.

From South America there comes a good case of audible manifestation by one who had recently left this world, narrated by our wide-awake contemporary, "Constancia," of Buenos Aires. In the city of Trujilla, Peru, there died, on November 15, 1892, about 9 a. m., a well-known and highly respected doctor, Don Santiago Pacheco. During the following night, between two and three in the morning, that is to say about eighteen hours after the decease, his voice was distinctly heard by a relative, Don Jose Maria Rebaza, the owner of an estate situated about fourteen leagues from the city. This relative had not visited the city since the previous February, and knew nothing of the doctor's recent actions.

The message that was delivered was to the following effect:

"Don Jose Maria:—Tell my wife not to forget or overlook my biographical notes, or memoirs, or whatever you call them, which I have written during these last months, and which are in a book, in my letter case, among my papers. She will know my handwriting; will you see that Marquez has them printed without errors or omissions?"

A confused objection, "But, sir!" on the part of the astonished listener was cut short by the exclamation, "What! Don Jose Maria!" after which the voice was no more heard. The next morning this incident was related to many friends in the neighborhood, and to various officials. Senor Rebaza also wrote to his brother, and to the doctor's widow, who was so struck with the accuracy of the details that she at once searched in the place indicated, and found the book referred to, among her late husband's papers. The fact of the notes being referred to as in the doctor's own handwriting is important, because the doctor, as a rule, had all his writing or correspondence done for him under his own supervision, and it is certain that the existence of these notes was quite unknown to the gentleman who received and transmitted the message.

A VISION OF THE MASTER.

"I Looked Up and Saw a Vision of the Christ Over the Choir and in Front of the Organ."

My clairvoyant experiences on New Year's day and the following Sunday may interest the readers of Light: I was attending Church of England services in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and both visions took place during morning prayer. The first was very vivid. I looked up and saw a dove with spread wings hovering over my head. It was very large, of a delicate greyish white, with pink eyes. Proceeding from it and extending over the family (there were four of us) was a lovely radiance of irridescent light, pinky heliotrope and gold, which remained for some seconds and then faded away.

The second vision took place about the same time the following Sunday (the Sunday after the Epiphany). My husband and I went to Holy Communion at 8 a. m., and before going up to the altar I was thinking how many years I had attended church, and that I had never seen any phenomena, although I had recently developed clairvoyance, and then a thought passed through my mind that, although willing with all my heart and soul to believe in the Sacraments of the Church of England, I always felt a barrier between my Lord and myself. These thoughts passed away after I went to the communion table and partook of the elements, as I had ever done, in simple faith. We returned home and went to the 11 a. m. service. I was thinking of the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles when I looked up and saw a vision of the Christ over the choir and in front of the organ, which faces our pew. I can never forget the beauty and majesty of the Savior's face. No picture I have seen has been anything like it. A pale, oval face, with glorious blue eyes melting with love and pity, looked upon us. The face was surrounded with a lovely radiance, the figure in pale, light robes, with trailing clouds of glory, melting into rose color and gold. Then I noticed that He was holding a crown in His right hand and against His side. The face was living, moving, and gradually assumed a dying expression and faded from view. RESEARCH.

ARE THE BLIND CLAIRVOYANT?

Some Interesting Suggestions in Regard to the Matter.

A curious question is opened up by an article of Mr. Raymond Blathwayt's in "Great Thoughts," describing a recent visit to the Royal Normal School for the Blind. An essay was read by one of the boys, dealing with a recent excursion to St. Paul's Cathedral, and stating that the blind students "climbed to the highest point, and greatly enjoyed the magnificent view of London" spread out at their feet. The possibility of this apparently inexplicable fact was confirmed by Dr. Campbell, the principal of the school, himself perhaps the most remarkable blind man in the kingdom. Dr. Campbell said:

"Why, of course they enjoyed it. Their one great desire when they got to the top of the dome was to see the Crystal Palace in the distance. Do you think I don't enjoy views? I frequently go to Switzerland, and I have climbed Mont Blanc for the view. I have been to all the great picture galleries in Europe, and I can honestly say that no one appreciates the old masters more than I do."

All that Dr. Campbell could be got to say in explanation was, "Ah! that is the secret of the blind!"

It is pretty well understood now that the division of the senses according to the five recognized sense organs is largely an arbitrary one. Thus it is asserted that the canals of the ear act as organs of the "sense of balance," and perhaps also of locality and direction; we have also seen a "sense of posture" mentioned by a recent writer. Blind people are said to know, by a sense akin to hearing, when there is any person or obstacle in their way; but we should much like to have some elucidation of this "sense of scenery" in the blind. Can any reader throw any light upon this apparent paradox?

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, which eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Lyman C. Howe is open for engagements for September, October and December. During November he lectures at Pittsburg, Pa. His home address is Fredonia, N. Y.

Mrs. S. Garber writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "Mrs. DeWolf Kiser is our angel guide, and as honest as the day. Everybody loves her. She is located here and doing a fine work, and has spread the light of our much-loved cause, and has started many on the right road for investigation."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "The first of a series of summer socials given by the Rising Sun Mission was held on Saturday evening, July 8, at Sister Montgomery's home, 24 Jackson Place. The interest manifested in these socials was apparent by the large number who attended. Every chair in their home was taken, and our president had to send several dozen more chairs from his home to accommodate the crowd. The evening will be long remembered as an enjoyable affair, as the talent was of the best in solos and recitations. A goodly number of spirit messages were given by Sisters Trafton and Weaver, after which a very fine luncheon was served, such as only the ladies of the Mission can prepare. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend these socials as they are given for the benefit of the temple fund. Our next will be held on Saturday, July 22, at Sister Darby's 938 W. Van Buren street."

Capt. T. J. West writes from Brownsboro, Ore.: "I am now ready to accept any call to a spiritual church or society in Indiana or Ohio, after the first of September next. If any reference or recommendation is needed, I will refer such to Moses Hull, or the Spiritual Society at Ashland, Oregon. I was a Congregational minister for ten years, but grew out of orthodoxy some fifteen years ago."

W. D. Noyes writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "Our Spiritual service at Fraternal hall is largely attended. We will close meetings August 1. We would like to engage with societies for fall and winter, in Western Wisconsin and Eastern Minnesota. Our address will be 1134 Sycamore street, Milwaukee, Wis., until August 1; then Wonewoc, Wis., until the close of that camp, Aug. 27."

J. C. F. Grumbine will meet his old and new friends, and form classes and give lectures on development, at Freeville, N. Y., from July 30 to August 6, and at Lily Dale, N. Y., from August 13 to August 26. These are the only camps he will visit.

Mrs. Nellie S. Baade of 411 Vermont avenue, Detroit, Mich., has open dates for February, March and May of 1906. Anyone desiring her services for these months, kindly write to her as soon as possible. She will be at home during the summer months, and will officiate at funerals whenever called upon.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "Although raining Sunday evening, July 9, the attendance was very large at the services of the Rising Sun Mission held at the home of the President, 22 Jackson Place. Our sister, Mrs. Fravel was at her best, her guides selecting as their subject, "The Prodigal Son." We always welcome her to our platform, and she is always assured of a large audience. Our choir rendered some very fine selections during the evening which was a treat for all. Spirit messages were given through the guides of Mrs. Coombs, Mrs. Weaver and Brother Thompson, all of which were factors in convincing a number of skeptics that we all live afer the change called death. Quite a large number have joined our mission since we have bought our temple. We now feel that the spirit world is guiding us in our work more than ever. Our meetings will be held every Sunday night during July and August at our president's home, 22 Jackson Place. Our speaker for Sunday, July 23 will be Dr. Rowell, a very talented orator and a former Methodist minister. We welcome all to our services."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Her body apparently lifeless, and with the attending physician's assurance that life was extinct, Mr. and Mrs. Sampson Blake, parents of Miss Flossie Blake, of Torrington, Conn., set out to prepare for the child's burial. Three hours after her apparent death, and as the undertaker was about to commence his duties, signs of life were apparent and the physician was summoned. Within an hour the girl was conscious and spoke to those about her. Hopes are entertained for her recovery.

The Bangs Sisters will be in attendance at the Chesterfield camp. Their spirit letter-writings are marvelous spirit productions.

E. W. Sprague writes from Jamestown, N. Y.: "I met poor old Mr. A. C. Adams the other day, to whom you so kindly gave a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker last year. He is failing, but keeps his mind pretty well, and enjoys the paper very much. He gives them out to his neighbors after he reads them. He gets the 'great' sum of three dollars per month from the city to help support himself and wife. Last winter our Jamestown society voted $15 out of the treasury to help them. They are good old Spiritualists, and I do hope they may never be obliged to go to the poor house."

Mr. Hassman writes: "The North Star Spiritual Union, which has during the months of June, July and August, closed its Sunday meetings at the hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, will hold a basket picnic at Jefferson Park, on Sunday, July 23. All are invited and welcome to be with us, and have a good social time. At 3 o'clock there will be a spiritual service with lecture and test. The lecture will be given by the noted minister and doctor, P. M. Esser. Tests will be given by Mrs. Johanna Rennau. Good food will spiritualize investigators. Jefferson Park can be reached by the Milwaukee avenue car to the end, and there take Jefferson Park car to the end."

R. F. Livermore writes from Corry, Pa.: "A very large and cultured audience greeted Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond of Chicago, Ill., on Sunday morning, July 9, at the opera house, when her guides, after answering a number of questions, presented by the audience, delivered in their usual masterly manner a discourse on the subject (selected by the audience), 'What is the Object and Aim of Human Life on this Planet?' All present were highly entertained, instructed and pelased. Nearly all expressed a wish for more of such golden gains of wisdom."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, one of the best speakers on the rostrum, stopped in the city a short time last week on her way from Lake Brady camp to Chesterfield, Ind. She will remain at the camp there during its entire session, and take charge of the lyceum.

Wm W. Clemens writes from Marion, Ill.: "I noticed some time ago you published a little poem, each verse ending with the language, 'Nothing is ever settled till it is settled right.' You credited it to some weekly. This poem is one written by Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and is found in her book of poems entitled 'Poems of Power,' and is indexed as 'An Inspiration.'"

W. E. Hart, the trumpet medium, has fully recovered his health, and will answer calls to hold seances. Address him at No. 421 North 11th street, Richmond, Ind.

Mrs. F. F. Spangler writes from Pittsburg, Kansas: "The Pittsburg, Kansas, Spiritualist Society, organized January 15, 1905, has had well attended Sunday evening meetings. It has a charter direct from the state. Mrs. Nancy Coles of Wier City, Kans., has been ordained. We have the services of Mrs. Sara C. Scovell once every month as speaker."

Mrs. Nina D. Challen of Toledo, Ohio, leaves home for Canton, Ohio, July 16, and will be at Lake Brady, July 30, as message bearer, following the lecture of Cora L. V. Richmond. Mrs. Challen will be absent from home five or six weeks as she is engaged for that length of time at camp.

B. F. Seguin writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have made the acquaintance of a gentleman who, I think, should be known all over the world. He, during his sufferings, has composed some impressive poems. They are full of food for the brain, and illustrate both sides of one's life. As a sample I will call your attention to this:

It seems a great pity,
So many in a city
Who seem to be witty,
None are wise.

There is a fine thought in this."

Mrs. H. C. Webster writes: "I enjoy reading your paper, and feel that it is doing much good in the world, and I trust you will be fitted more and more for the great work that lies before you for humanity. We are on the eve of great events and time honored customs will pass away."

Mrs. S. D. Hoard writes: "On July 2, the Spiritualists of Wheeler, Mich., were fortunate enough to secure Mrs. Amanda Coffman of Grand Rapids, for two lectures. The lectures were given in a new barn recently erected on the farm of L. P. Mitchell. A large crowd of about six hundred listened to the lectures. Her blindfolded tests were appreciated by all. Three years ago Mrs. Coffman gave two lectures at Wheeler and we hope to have her lecture to us again in the future."

Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club, auxiliary to the Ill. S. S. Association, held its basket picnic on the Fourth of July at Lake Bluff, on the grounds of the Minnetonka Cottage. In spite of the rain a goodly number of Chicago Spiritualists were present. A delightful time was had, thanks to our charming hostess, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the I. S. S. A., who surely knows how to entertain and make people comfortable. After partaking of the good things carried with us, a large circle was formed under the trees and many spirit messages were given by the mediums present. The young people strolled to the lake and enjoyed the beauties there. The spirit of good time followed us all the way home. The influence was so strong that a song service was begun at the depot, and continued all the way to Chicago; the songs varied, from coon songs to doxologies, orations included. Every one feels better for having spent the day at beautiful Lake Bluff. The chocolate set was not raffled on this date, as all the tickets had not been accounted for, but will take place some time this month. Watch The Progressive Thinker for the date. Before boarding the train at Lake Bluff our good hostess invited our club and jolly crowd to hold such another picnic on the grounds of Minnetonka Cottage on Labor Day. Three cheers for Laura G. Fien and the W. C. T. U. home!"

J. S. F. writes from Pine City, Mich.: "The Woodside Spiritualist Society of Pine City, Minn., held its annual picnic July 9, at Mrs. Minnie Fritzen, Spiritualist Sanatory for the sick, on the shores of beautiful Lake Pakegama. It was well attended. The speakers and test mediums were the well known Mrs. S. M. Lowell, Mrs. E. P. Mannewell and Mrs. Paul Buehler, all of Minneapolis. The officers of the Woodside Spiritualist Society are: Mr. J. Weststrum, president; Mr. C. Gustafson, vice-president; Mr. C. Pool, secretary; Mrs. C. Gustafson, treasurer; trustees—Mr. Oscar Forsman, Mr. J. Pool and Mr. J. S. Fritzen. Our society is not large, but it has a good start and is chartered under the state association. With the help of good spirits and of good mortals, we hope to live long and do lots of good for our fellow-men."

Ella J. Bloom writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club held its regular monthly meeting at 1802 N. Ashland avenue. Four new members were added to our roll, and new names handed in for consideration. We now number 48 members. Our next regular meeting will be held at Mrs. E. J. Bloom's 892 Turner avenue, second flat, August 8, at 1:30 p. m. Take an Ogden avenue car to Turner avenue, walk half block south. We hope every member will endeavor to be present. A card party will be given for the benefit of the Sunflower Club, Saturday evening, July 22, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bloom, 892 Turner avenue. A pleasant evening is assured all. Light refreshments to be served. Game to begin promptly at 8:30 p. m. Take Ogden avenue car to Turner avenue; half block south; second flat."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be entertained on July 23, by Miss M. Burgess, sister of Dr. Burgess. Her subject will be 'Indians.' Having had some thirty years' association with them, she will undoubtedly give us some very interesting things in regard to them. If she is like her brother we will surely get something good. The Doctor has consented to be present that night and give messages. On July 2, we will give an ice cream social and dance at our hall. Something new will be introduced in the social part of it and all who come will have a good time."

Some one writes from Niagara Falls, N. Y., but does not sign name. That should always accompany the item. The writer speaks as follows of Mrs. A. G. Atcheson's work: "We closed our meeting last Sunday until the first Sunday in September, in order to give Mrs. Atcheson a little rest as far as her work as pastor is concerned, but as her private work is so extensive, I do not feel that she will receive very much rest unless she closed up her home, and seeks other apartments for a few weeks—say at beautiful, restful Lily Dale. As pastor of our little church, Mrs. Atcheson has certainly worked very hard and unceasingly for the past three years. Her lectures and communications are purely Spiritual, and are listened to by large audiences of cultured people who say they never heard better or more instructive lectures than those given through her. If all our Spiritualists were workers like Mrs. Atcheson for the cause, we would soon grow in great numbers. May her success for the coming years be still greater, and her path during life be strewn with roses, is the wish of her co-workers, and a reader of The Progressive Thinker."

The third annual bazaar under the auspices of the Lynn Spiritualists Association was auspiciously opened at Unity Camp, Wednesday, July 12 and continued through to Saturday. There was a large attendance for an opening day, and in the afternoon at 3 o'clock, the hour announced for Mrs. May S. Pepper to occupy the platform, the large pavilion was nearly filled with an audience of people eager and anxious to see and hear this wonderful test medium. Mrs. Pepper preceded her messages and tests with an able and interesting address, in which she presented some practical thoughts and good advice. She scored people who wear masks, and who greet their friends so gracefully and bestow compliments on them and the members of their families to their faces, and then behind their backs say unkind things about them. We should pray for a Spiritualism that will elevate as well as teach. Through Spiritualism our friendships in this life which have been broken by the passing on of our dear loved ones from the earth life will be united. So let us live not for ourselves alone, but for all humanity, and by so doing we will help to make our millenium while here in the earth life, that we are to enjoy in the hereafter. The speaker said that Spiritualism and all other beliefs and material things in this life are too often hindered and injured more by people within their own folds than in any other way, and that greater help toward our progress is being frequently received by famous men and women who are on the outside of our circles, and if religion and the uplifting of humanity are to progress as they should, we must try to eliminate this evil from them. The grounds of the camp were prettily decorated with flags and Chinese lanterns, and the various booths neatly arranged and loaded with a variety of useful and fancy articles, most of them the handiwork of the lady members of the association, while a number were presented by friends.

Ella J. Bloom writes: "A test circle will be given for the Sunflower Club, at the home of Mrs. Johanna Rennau, 1802 N. Ashland avenue, July 27. Many test mediums will be in attendance. A good spiritual feast is what we promise you. We will be pleased to welcome you all. Take a Lincoln avenue electric car down town to School street; walk one block east; it is the second door north of School street. A north Ashland avenue car can be had at the car barns at Wrightwood avenue, that will take you by the door. West siders might find it convenient to come by way of Belmont avenue, to Ashland avenue, and transfer; get off at School street."

Will C. Hodge closed his engagement with the Psychical Society of Oakland, Cal., July 9, and has taken his departure for Seattle, Wash. He can be addressed at 928 Nineteenth avenue. The Pacific Coast seems to agree with him and his lectures are well received.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

THE FOLLOWING PROGRAM constitutes the summer work of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond: Leaving their home in Rogers Park, July 2, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will be at Corry, Pa., July 3 to 14; Cuba, N. Y., July 14 to 21; Lily Dale, N. Y., 21 to 28; Lake Brady, Ohio, July 30, and Mantua, Ohio, Aug 1 to 6, inclusive; Onset, Mass., Aug. 7 to 14; Unity Camp (near Lynn, Mass.) Aug. 20 to 27; New York City and the Catskills, Sept. 1 to (about) Sept. 15. Services will commence at the Church of the Soul, in Chicago, Sunday, September 17, 1905.

HELEN STUART RICHINGS, who has been in the far Northwest for several years, is returning to the lecture platform, and desires to correspond with societies wishing the services of an inspirational lecturer, psychometrist and dramatic artist. Terms most reasonable, especially for long engagements. Address P. O. Box 115, Seattle, Wash.

D. G. Hill writes: "On Sunday evening, July 23, the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society will have for speaker that popular young man, Mr. Arnold, at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. Open door. All welcome."

"The Revue Spirite" of Paris, France, edited by Allan Kardec, reviews Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," in an appreciative style and in a manner to attract a sympathetic interest of the readers of that great spiritual magazine. Dr. Bland has recently received a letter from Paris proposing a French translation of his very interesting book.

Mrs. L. Wilson writes: "The White Key Spiritual Society of Bellaire, Ohio, held its first open meeting in the city hall on July 9. The O. S. A. missionary, Mrs. Anna E. Baird of Elyria, Ohio, gave two lectures which were well received and highly appreciated. She also gave tests which were readily recognized by those to whom they came, which gave great satisfaction to the society, and we hope to have the pleasure of having her return again in the future. This society received its name from the spirit side of life, and by this will be a guiding light in the Ohio valley."

A CONJUGAL PHENOMENON.

A lady and a gentleman among the upper ten,
Formed a conjugal attachment and concluded to unite
In the holy bonds of wedlock and announce it to all men,
At a brilliant Boston wedding where were bidden the elite.

They were both most highly cultured, and their heads completely crammed
With aesthetic education, such as may be gathered there.
Ere the honeymoon was over they were properly programmed
For the most unfruitful voyage that had happened anywhere.

He was strong as polished iron, she was strong as polished steel;
Both were cargoed with opinions not to be infringed upon;
Each was bound to give the other an entirely honest deal,
And be buried close together when the days of life were gone.

He a Liberal and Freethinker, pledged to progress and the New;
She a Baptist, staunch and loyal to the creed subscribed unto.
Two flags flew upon their frigate, ever equally in view;
His read "Progress," upon yellow, hers, "Conservatism," on blue.

How they ever could have done it I will not essay to tell,
But both held to their opinions, never giving up a point;
It may seem truth warped to tell it but they did not make a hell,
Nor did Love, their little cupid, suffer and get out of joint.

When they died the Baptist lady, robed for resurrection day,
Was interred in formal fashion, in a lot all fair and wide;
When he died he was cremated, floating in blue smoke away,
Save an urn of sacred ashes, which is buried by her side.

Don't you think if it should happen that the resurrection morn
Were a thousand years in coming, with its dead-awakening cry,
There would be as much confusion when great Gabriel blows his horn,
To collect the lady's body as her husband's? So think I.

FORM OF MARRIAGE SERVICE

Recommended by the National Spiritualists Association.

(Note of Advice to Ministers: All persons ordained or authorized by the National or State Associations of Spiritualists to perform the marriage service should always inform themselves regarding state and municipal laws where they are called upon to officiate, and comply therewith, thereby assuring the legality of the marriage.)

The following service is recommended for use:

Inasmuch as it is not meet in the infinite order of things that man should live alone, neither is it intended that woman should be companionless; as she is to be a helpmate unto man, so is man to supplement and fill her life, as her companion and protector. She is not to be given to him in ownership, nor is he to be subservient unto her. Each is to be the equal of the other and in all things share alike. Therefore is marriage made blessed, for it adds joy and strength to all who seek its holy estate. We are here assembled to witness the union of this man and this woman in the sacred bonds of wedlock.

Does anyone here present know any reason why this man and this woman may not be lawfully joined in matrimony.

You will now join your right hands. Do each of you solemnly promise before these witnesses here assembled and the angel world to take the other to be your lawfully wedded companion? Both answer, "I will."

As the ring, like the circle, is without beginning and without end, so is it a fitting symbol of the affection of the soul.

With this ring (handing same to man and he placing it upon the third finger of her left hand) as a symbol you pledge your faith and plight your troth.

And now in the presence of these witnesses, in accordance with the laws of the state of ——— and by virtue of the authority vested in me as a minister of the Gospel of Spiritualism, I pronounce you husband and wife, one in spirit, one in purpose, one in fidelity to the right. May the angels of peace, plenty, and harmony shed their benign influence over your united lives.

Follow with introduction and congratulations.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, July 23, 1905, S. E. 58: "Our Motto."

Gem of Thought:—

To leave undone the things, not one,
That fills a heart with cheer;
With thought and deed, to fill each need,
To win with love, not fear.

To do our best and trust the rest,
With strength and courage true;
To hold that right is surely might,
Our motto old yet new.

MR. GEORGE A. BACON.

His Severe Illness Still Continues.

The friends of Mr. Bacon, and of Spiritualism, will be pained to learn that his prolonged illness still continues despite the best medical efforts, nursing, and the constant loving care of his most devoted life companion and wife, Mrs. Louise L. Bacon. They have left their home in Washington, D. C., and moved north to Cliftondale, Mass., near Boston. They are now near their only child, Mrs. Belle Bacon Bond, and her family, besides other near relations.

Mrs. Bacon writes, July 2: "Mr. Bacon stood the journey better than I had expected, but he was taken most carefully all the way. I had a compartment, and he was carried and put into it by the physicians and me. His condition since arriving here is about the same; is slightly improved if there is a change. He sits up in a chair a part of the day and seems worse nights.

"We are living in the home our daughter came to when a bride, and in which four of her children were born. It is a large beautiful home—some 15 or 16 rooms in it, large halls, and is cool and comfortable. If my George can only get so he can be around, and enjoy life, we can be very happy. I am so anxious about him I can think of little else."

All readers of the Spiritual papers, to which Mr. Bacon has been a talented contributor so many years, will send him thoughts with healing on their wings. EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

A Surprise Party.

The ladies of the Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., gave Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harding a surprise on July 13. Sickness and other unavoidable causes detained many at their homes, but those who attended enjoyed the occasion. Many spiritual occurrences were related which could not be explained on any hypothesis but that of the spiritual. Mrs. Lovina Beldon told of wonderful materializations which she had witnessed, declared that she could not have been deceived because she recognized her husband, when he came so tangibly that she was able to hold his hand until it dematerialized and the form sank, as it were, through the floor, which was done in fulfillment of a promise by him previously made to her.

Mr. Harding told how he was convinced of the truth of spirit return by being awakened from sleep at midnight, and Mrs. H.—a conscientious church member was used as the agent of his convincement. He told of his having seen and conversed with his daughter at the deathbed of his son, seventeen years after her body had been buried in the ocean, and which like all the proofs which came to him in his own home, came unexpectedly and unsought. He told how his wife, when pillowed in a rocking chair (for she was very sick) was lifted, chair and all, into the air and held suspended there, while some fluid, which she described as magnetism, poured through her frame, entering at the crown of her head and passing out at her feet, and how after 15 minutes of such treatment the pillows and chair were lowered to the floor, and she found that she was cured. He said that it would take a large volume to relate all he had seen in his house of a Spiritualistic character, no medium being present, except his wife were one, or perhaps himself.

After tea, Mrs. Anderson of Sturgis, read a poem of Mr. Harding, entitled "A Wild Bird Caged," which represented the spirit as a wild bird and the material body as the cage, which had a large circulation twenty years ago and had been read at the funeral of a relative of Mr. Anderson (Mrs. Nathan poem of Mrs. Hemans, a poet of 100 meeting Mr. Harding recited an old poem of Mrs. Hemens, a poet of 100 years back, to represent the style in which boys "spoke their pieces" when he was at school 70 years ago.

The "presiding elder" of the Harmonial Society was represented by his wife, Mrs. Collar, and all who were present on the occasion enjoyed themselves immensely.

It is supposed that the report of the recent June meeting, which appeared in The Progressive Thinker, was what inspired the Harmonial ladies to the above "surprise." COR.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to the higher life, from the home of his daughter, Mrs. Viola E. Smith, at Sergeant Bluff, Iowa, on the 5th inst., B. R. Anderson, at the age of 76. He leaves two daughters to mourn the loss of his earthly presence, but both know he still lives.

MRS. CARRIE CONRAD.
Long Island City, N. Y.

Our dear old friend, Capt. C. H. Toler, is dead. As you know, he believed his spirit was immortal; as he expressed it, he knew it, because the spirits of those who have gone from this life came back and told him about it.

I thought he would like to have me write to you as The Progressive Thinker was his favorite paper. He thought it a great factor in the forward movement of the world, and was always alert in getting readers and subscribers. Indeed, I think him the best propagandist I ever knew, always keeping the cause in mind and always expressing his thoughts in the same mild, yet direct and sincere way.

His stately form and benignant face were familiar on our streets, and many of us thought it a privilege to know him well because of his honorable and humane character.

The same pleased look so habitual to him was on his face as he lay in his coffin. We can feel sure that all is well with our friend. H. M. LUCAS.
Marietta, Ohio.

Passed to spirit life, at Chagrin Falls, Ohio, June 26, 1905, Mrs. Lovina Holiday, wife of A. Holiday, aged 78 years and 7 months; formerly of Topeka, Kansas. A. HOLIDAY.

Parkland Heights, Pa., Camp Opens.

The second annual session of Parkland Heights Spiritualist Home and Camp-meeting Association opened on Sunday morning, July 9, 1905, at 10:30, at the auditorium which was gaily decorated with bunting and choice, fragrant flowers, while from a near-by pole, "Old Glory" triumphantly waved its colors.

Mrs. H. M. Shope ably presided at the organ, accompanied by Mr. H. M. Shope.

Services opened with singing by the congregation, after which the president, Richard F. Adams, in a few earnest words, gave the address of welcome, extending to all the freedom of the grounds.

President Adams then introduced Miss Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary of the society, who voiced an original poem entitled "Welcome," which embodied our aims and hopes for Parkland, giving to all a loyal welcome to come and join in this great work.

Captain F. J. Keffer, honorary president of the First Association of Spiritualists, was introduced and in an earnest, dignified manner spoke from the heart of the foundation work now fairly begun at this beautiful rural spot; how years ago this very location was designed by the spirit friends of progress for a camp ground.

Hon. Thomas M. Locke, president of the Philadelphia Society of Spiritualists and also one of the directors of our camp society, was introduced, and stated that all could see for themselves the needed improvements had been made since last season. The commodious tent in front of the auditorium, and the dining-room and kitchen adding much to the comfort of visitors. These we now desired to pay for, and he headed a subscription list with a bank note and so enthused the people that several others soon followed with their generous donations until a neat sum was raised.

An invocation was then given by Geo. W. Kates, followed by Mrs. Kates who delivered the address of the morning in a beautiful, impressive manner. Mrs. Kates never fails to command the close attention of her audience, for she always has something well worth the saying, then she puts her soul into what she says.

At the close of the lecture, there was a solo by Mrs. H. M. Shope, then Mrs. Kates again stepping to the front, gave names of spirit friends, with messages to several present, which were recognized as correct. After more singing, the morning session closed.

Shortly after 2 o'clock the afternoon services opened with the usual singing, after which President Adams announced that there would be one hour conference, and called first upon Captain Keffer, who responded in his usual heartfelt manner, dwelling upon the combination of Truth, Honesty and Justice as forming the basic principle of true living.

Mr. Locke being called upon, continued his talk of the morning by dwelling on our work.

Mrs. Kates gave an invocation, then came the lecture of the afternoon by G. W. Kates, who began by speaking of the amount of work which had been accomplished on these grounds since he was here one year ago. So much that he was almost astonished. Then, he had some doubts as to our succeeding, but now he no longer doubts; thought we would succeed even beyond our present expectation.

After a beautiful solo by Mrs. H. M. Shope, which was greatly appreciated, Mrs. Kates again gave readings in her usual pleasing manner; then came a little talk by Mrs. Augusta Volk, in a sympathetic manner which appealed to all.

The following mediums then gave readings: Mrs. Elizabeth Cutler, Mrs. Fannie Essinganger and Mrs. Mary Weber, which were well received.

The Ladies' Aid, pledged to work for the good of Parkland, with Julia R. Locke as President, Annie B. Fulmer, treasurer; Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, and 23 members, will this summer take charge of the dining-room, and provide dinners and suppers to those who desire such.

Next Sunday we expect to have with us speaker and medium, Samuel Wheeler and Mrs. F. E. Luce.

ELIZABETH M. FISH,
Secretary.

Onset Camp Notes.

The time is here again when the people are thinking of Onset and its beautiful bay and shady groves. The hot weather has driven the people out of the cities are many are found at Onset looking for a cottage or room. Almost all the cottages are let and the outlook is for a good season. The meeting will open Sunday, July 23 at 10:30 a. m., with Dr. Geo. A. Fuller, president Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists and chairman of the Onset meeting. He is sure of a large audience, as he is very papular at the camp.

At 2 p. m., Mrs. N. J. Willis will be the speaker, and her many friends will be glad to have the privilege of again listening to this grand speaker. Mrs. Willis always says something of interest to Spiritualists.

In the evening there will be a seance in the Arcade. Don't miss the opening meeting. You can always find for sale at the book store The Progressive Thinker. Don't fail to subscribe before leaving camp, so you can enjoy it during the winter. HATCH.

SUMMERLAND, CAL., CAMP.

The Summerland Spiritualist Association will hold its annual camp-meeting at Summerland, Santa Barbara county, Cal., commencing on second Sunday in September and closing on the following Sunday. The association has engaged celebrated speakers and mediums and is endeavoring to make this meeting especially attractive to visitors. A restaurant at hall to accommodate all visitors during camp-meeting. Inquiries for rooms and other information, address W. G. Hendricks, secretary Summerland Spiritualist Association, Summerland, Cal.

A WHOLESOME MEDICINE.

A wholesome medicine is Cheer,
And Hope a tonic strong;
He conquers all who conquers fear,
And shall his days prolong.

A happy heart, a cheerful lip,
Contagious health bestow
As honey-bees their sweetness sip
From fragrant flowers that blow.

Let cheerful thoughts prevail among
The sons of men alway,
And signs shall change to Love's sweet song,
And night to golden day.

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER —AND— ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Keller, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closser, 116 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1102 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 70 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Rosenstock: Q. What is the best Spiritualist paper in German in this country and where published?

A. Lichtstrahlen is the only spiritual paper in German published in the United States. It is now issued by Max Gentzke, 618 N. Robey street, Chicago, Ill. $1 per year.

Hiram McClellan: Q. My wife with whom I have been wedded 56 years, departed this life four months ago. I am very anxious to receive communications from her. Is it possible?

A. Quite possible if you furnish the conditions. You write that there are indications of her presence, yet you doubt. There is not the least reason in your doubting what you have received, and you would probably doubt if you received more.

You would not expect a message from a friend at a distance through the telephone, unless you employed a receiving instrument, and you cannot receive a communication from a spirit without a medium acting as such an instrument. You may have the essential impressibility, in which case its phase will be modified by your own personality, and the spirit desiring to communicate will use such methods as it finds possible. We are too demanding for startling manifestations, such as we read florid descriptions of, which if genuine must in their very nature be of rare occurrence, and many impossible, and we overlook the "still small voice," and the holy peace which falls on us at times, like a benediction. To be able to feel the uplifting of such influence, should, of itself, be strongest evidence, and is more desirable than any other phase.

Henry Voorhees: Q. Must we not conclude that although we exist as spirits in the future, such existence has an end, in accordance with the laws of life exhibited here, in the life and death of living beings? If all living beings existed always, the universe could not hold all entities for eternity.

A. A being in whom the forces of life are in harmony, and perfect balance, if such conditions can be maintained has the elements of eternal duration. In the evolution of living beings on the earth this condition is shadowed forth but never reached. For a time the forces of growth and renovation are stronger than those of decay; then the two remain balanced, and at last the forces of decay preponderate and old age closes the scene.

According to the theory we have constantly maintained, man is the highest physical expression of evolution, and through the spirit of man this evolution is continued on the spiritual plane. All living beings have a spirit being, existing in conjunction with the physical body, and so dependent thereon that it is dissipated at death like a cloud. But when a certain development is attained, it is possible for the individuality of the spirit to be preserved after the death of the physical body which has served as the scaffolding by which the spirit has been fashioned.

In other words, in the spirit, at a certain point of its advance, gains the perfect balance of the forces which enter therein, and is able to maintain this equilibrium. The answer to this question covers the entire field of spiritual science and in this connection only a statement of the theory is possible, without attempting proof.

Out of the seething cauldron of existence, there constantly arises the perfected spirits, while the yet imperfect sink back to be again and again assimilated; in each new form gaining strength and approaching the ideal type comparatively of all living beings only a minor part, an excessively small part, exist after the death of their physical bodies. There is no crowding in the spirit spheres, or prospect of the population becoming so.

Once a Church Member: Q. Why do not Spiritualists give more for the propagation of their belief? It seems to me that they are far behind church members in this matter.

A. Our correspondent forgets the difference in motives and incentives between Spiritualists and church-members actuating them. The latter give as a sin offering, and expect to be rewarded therefor in the next life. To give has been taught from the advent of Christianity, as one of the most acceptable things a sinner could do to propitiate the wrath of God, and gain entrance into heaven. The Jews gave a tenth of all they produced, and this was the law enforced by the church. Now the compulsatory giving is abolished, the hereditary mental bent remains, and is fostered by fear of consequences. To give has become a part of Christian faith. The giving is a kind of sin-offering, to atone for the manner the "tainted money" is obtained. As in old times, the best and most precious thing was given to the Lord, in this age money, the most coveted thing is sacrificed.

With Spiritualists, the reverse of all this is true. They do not believe that God demands sacrifice, or that the cause of humanity is advanced by theological schools, or missionaries. When they give, they must know the object and it must be worthy. They also know that people cannot be excited into a belief in Spiritualism by the means employed by the revivalist. Only by growth can a true and real Spiritualist become worthy of the name.

There are countless schemes put out in the name of Spiritualism, and because Spiritualists do not take the alluring hook, promoters accuse them of selfishly allowing great opportunities for good to go by with neglect.

My own experience has demonstrated to me that Spiritualists are as liberal if not more so, than any other class, if they understand and appreciate the object. In illustration, years ago, when Emma Hardinge Britten was lecturing in this country, the lyceum Mrs. Tuttle and I conducted decided to engage her for a grove meeting. There was a large attendance, but the committee neglected until the noon hour to collect the essential funds. Of course the lyceum was responsible, yet it did not seem right for it to meet the entire expenses.

At the beginning of the afternoon session, I said to the audience that considerable expense had been incurred, and I thought everyone would enjoy the lecture of the afternoon better, if it was paid for beforehand. "How much do you want?" asked a brusque man. "The cost of this meeting is $75," I replied. "Pass the hat," he called. It was done and nearly $80 was the result. Could that be possible in an orthodox meeting?

Many a minister after an earnest sermon on the blessedness of giving, has said in his heart as the old darkey did when his hat came back without a nickel, "Thank God, my hat was returned."

MAPLE DELL PARK.

An Account of Opening Day Doings.

Sunday, July 9, was this season's opening day of the oldest Spiritualist camp in the world, and before it became a camp ground for modern Spiritualism was also the camp ground of our red brothers, the North American aborigines. On this ground are many grand old maples, some fully three hundred years old, and many are the remnants, such as pottery, arrow-heads, cooking utensils, found here. The grandness of its situation inspires the soul of the sensitive, and a more delightful spot is rarely seen.

The exercises for the occasion were unique as well as instructive and beautiful, being given by the combined forces of the Spiritual Light and the East End Lyceums of Cleveland, Ohio.

The programme being too lengthy in detail for this report, suffice it to say, consisted of a flag and ribbon drill, making a most beautiful sight, gladdening the hearts of the parents as well as all others present. After these exercises many of the children gave recitations, some ludicrous, others pathetic, also songs and musical recitations, very creditable.

Now since Spiritualism has made for itself a place in the world it behooves every Spiritualist parent to see to it that their children attend these lyceums and not the Sunday schools of our youth. If Spiritualism is good enough for us it certainly is better for our children, for the reason they will be spared the unlearning we had to do. In these lyceums are taught only the best that is within us, namely: Do right for right's sake and not of fear or for remuneration of the harp and crown. Spiritualism has given the world this light and truth, and the whole enlightened world is hurrying to recognize it. If there is no lyceum in the neighborhood, hasten and form one. The lyceum teaching formulas are beautiful and can be had at small expense. The orthodox schools vie with each other to "gather the children in." Now let the Spiritualists do likewise—it is their duty. To see the beautiful work done at these lyceums is to see the good done to the coming generation, and again let me say to those of you who have no children, borrow some from your orthodox neighbor.

Through the kindness of a most generous friend of the cause of truth, it was made possible to many of the needy little ones to attend yesterday's outing who would otherwise not have been with us. On the platform were a number of prominent workers all of whom made short addresses.

Dr. C. W. Haynes, of Bedford, O., president of the First Spiritual Church; Thos. D. Bellois, president Progressive Thought Society; C. H. Figuers, president East End Society; R. D. Smeaton, pastor Second Spiritual Church; Dr. F. A. Wilcox, a veteran worker and speaker; Mrs. Jas. R. Knight, the oldest working medium and healer in the state, being 78 years of age, and still young. Mrs. Knight also gave us a short talk through her control. H. Stevens, president Spiritual Light Lyceum, acted as chairman of the day.

The musical selections given by Prof. Louis Quadenfeldt and his three sons, was excellent. Mr. Phillip Harder also gave us two beautiful violin solos.

Finally, as the day was drawing to its close we turned our eyes homeward and slowly wandered back to the station, a little tired, perhaps, but happy, at so well spent a day, leaving a pleasant memory to look back to for days to come. H. L TOBIEN.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Written Through the Planchette.

Cast from thy heart each evil
You find encrusted there,
And then the world to live in
Will be a palace fair.

Thy evil thoughts are raven,
That blot the light of day,
And to dwell in love's bright sunlight,
Thou must drive them all away.

Be faithful to thy guidance,
While thy footsteps linger here,
And when the sands of life ebb out
There will be angels waiting near.

Thy life well spent is golden grain
Which garnered at the last,
Will be free from tares of sorrow,
You need not fear the chaff.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

MEDIUMSHIP.

Medium Should Be Pure-Minded, Moral and Honest.

As a constant reader of The Progressive Thinker, and ever interested in the beautiful philosophy of life eternal, I grasp the pen and ask for space in the columns of the Court of Inquiry. If my article proves a benefit in any manner to a good cause I shall feel well rewarded. I desire to state that as a student of the occult I have found that the desire for more of the good is just what so ofttimes prompts fraud.

I must give my experience, and where justice is due, give it, having been personally acquainted with the noted C. E. Winans, and did sit in his seances at different seasons, and on several occasions. Personal experience taught me the truth and the untruth.

On one occasion I was asked by the cabinet control to come to the cabinet, and aid them. This I did, as he (the control) lifted the curtain back, I saw Mr. Winans sitting sewed to chairs (just as I had helped to so place him.) Then there was an Indian and the lady who needed my help. This spirit was coming to her daughter who sat in the circle. Thus aided by the Indian guide and myself she stepped out of the cabinet and conversed with her daughter, manifesting in broken English which was satisfactory. At this time the medium was sewed or bound to his chair.

On several occasions a colored gentleman who had long ago aided me in mediumship (but I never expressed publicly that I had an African guide) came to me; all saw him dance and heard him talk. He was robed in a thin white gown and lifted his robe that all could see his feet. His color, features and dialect were very distinct as one of his race. This very spirit has been a great help to the writer as a guide, and in the seance room of the writer's home, in the presence of a select circle, we have plainly heard his voice independently; also through the trumpet. He has sung for us, as well as played on the bajo. I have ever found his advice the best, his expressions ever truthful.

I do not write this to advertise for I am only acquiring these phases, but I am sure true materialization has come through the mediumship of C. E. Winans. I AM ALSO SURE THAT MATERIAL TOGGERY WERE USED IN SOME CASES. My understanding was (as I received from spirit side) that those things were used when needed. I conversed with the unseen on this point, and did believe, and continue to believe that this is correct. I was also able to detect the materialization from the impersonation. But when the medium was in the chair it was impossible for him to be in the circle impersonating—was it not? Have you considered a spirit can impersonate? Is this acceptable to the readers? I am sure that the guides of Winans did materialize on occasions which I witnessed.

But before going farther I will say we must be guarded in our acts and thoughts, give all justice where it is due. The great demand for manifestations has prompted no doubt fraud on both this and spirit side of life.

One who is acquiring the art of mediumship should be as honest and truthful in all senses as is possible. For, dear friends, the character of the medium will have much to do with the mediumship. Honesty, uprightness in all things, pure in thought and pure in deeds must be the foundation for the upbuilding of true mediumship and the proper position to place self as an instrument in the hands of angel friends.

Let our motto be for goodness, not for greatness; and one who is an instrument for spirit power must never hold to the individuality of self. And if my investigation serves me correctly, there is greater danger in the physical phases than in the mental. I consider mediumship sacred, and one who is so organized as to become an earthly instrument should by all means honor morality. Just so sure as the sensitive places self on a jealous, selfish or licentious plane, just so sure will the poor sensitive come to grief. A medium must continually stand negative to good forces and positive to all impure. Never—no, never, be led by foolish ideas and whims of ignorance. Whenever a medium attempts to deceive there are those immortal agents plenty, lingering near the earth plane and can and will aid in the deception. Be conscientious, be pure-minded, become able to see the good and shun the impure, live on a spiritual plane, be prepared. Prepare the spirit while in the physical to meet the spiritual on a spiritual plane.

For, to be a medium one must live under spiritual laws and be guided by spiritual guides. Otherwise mediumship will wither, for the sweet smiles of mortal friends and mortal assistance alone will not suffice for spiritual things—be spiritual.

A RAY OF SUNSHINE.

C. F. Short, a prominent Spiritualist, perpetrates the following. What sentence should be inflicted on him, we leave the reader to decide.

The Wooers of the Wood.

This romantic story may not be issued in book form, beautifully embellished, but if it should be, it would still be unfair to keep the reader in suspense, so we shall proceed at once to set forth the remarkable career of these (wood) be lovers.

This happy (Pear) lived in the (Buckeye) state, at (Mulberry) Grove, near (Ash)tabula. Mr. Henry (Hawthorne) was no common scrubby (locus-t), but was strong, tall and majestic like the (Oak), a very (Pop'lar) young man, and she, Miss Minnie (Myrtle) was a slender, genteel, (Willow)cy creature, whose very nature seemed to (Pine) for affection and (Wood knot) be denied. It was a lovely scene to behold them as they sat on the rustic (Elm) seat, under the (Chestnut) branches, or to see them as they wandered through the (Sugar Maple) groves, which they often did until they reached the (Beech).

The sweet scented (Peach) blooms, and the (Apple Tree) blossoms added to the joy of it all; now Henry was true as the needle to the (Pole); every time he gazed into her (Hazel) eyes, or looked on her (Cherry) cheeks, his heart jumped for joy, he loved her more and more every time he (Cedar), and she was equally devoted, in fact she was (Plum) gone on him, but he never tried to (Bamboo)zle her, or (Palm)-off any deception. "Will you leave all and (Gum) to me?" "I will truly, surely," she said. "I must first ask my (Pawpaw)," and here was the shadow, for he seemed set against it, firm and unyielding as (Hickory), but she did not care a (Fig) for this, for he soon relented and said, "Do as you think best, I (Walnut) farther oppose you," and now they will be made one, as soon as they can suitably (Orange) matters.

SUCCESSFUL WORK IN PITTSBURG

Lyman C. Howe Gives a Luminous Account of Past Progress.

On the 27th of April, 1904, I left home for Pittsburg, Pa., where I met a faithful and somewhat enthusiastic band of Spiritualists in their beautiful church, and shared with them the feasts of spiritual abundance and many luxuries served at their public table, the gusto of which was greatly intensified by the artistic environments. A sketch of that experience appeared in The Progressive Thinker, and that it was widely read, and appreciated, was evidenced by words of commendation that came to me across the continent, aglow with intellectual and spiritual delight. After the public associations I enjoyed a rich social feast at my hotel with Bro. C. L. Stevens, president of the Church organization.

My first work was at Grand Rapids, Mich., where I was ashamed to say, I was taken sick early in the month, and was barely able to keep up or walk, and to stand on my feet long enough to deliver a lecture required a determined effort of will. I was aware that I did poor service to the cause and poor credit to myself, and but very few had any idea of the struggle it cost me to even do what I did. But one poor effort of a speaker is remembered against him, while a hundred brilliant successes are forgotten.

Since that memorable visit to Pittsburgh I have kept in touch with Brother Stevens, and somewhat posted in the doings of the Church. By means of correspondence, and some things that I know, I am now able to write a sketch of the workers and their work, since the time I was there until the close of the season in June, 1905.

The Church is fortunate in having a body of directors free from extremes and extravagances, clear-headed, warm-hearted, earnest and true to the best interests of the Church and the cause, and no personal jealousies or bickerings to divide their strength, and their level-headed business qualifications are a guarantee of success in all they undertake; and they are not afraid or ashamed to be known as Spiritualists.

Highly valuing genuine mediumship and demonstrative phenomena, they are also capable of appreciating the educational and moral values of first class lectures, the children's lyceum, the co-operation of women and their efficiency, and all that pertains to human culture and improvement of character, and the inestimable value of the spiritual illuminations and helpful counsels of excarnate souls through reliable mediums.

Margaret Gaule Riedinger has long been a favorite in Pittsburgh, both with Spiritualists and the general public. Her public descriptions are so surprisingly original and accurate, and her earnest, tender sympathy with the bereaved and sorrowing so impressive that the whole audience is in a tremor of expectancy, and thrilled with tearful emotion, as she passes rapidly from one description to another, and rarely fails to get response of recognition from those addressed. It is in keeping with the method of the Church that this gifted medium and popular favorite opened the season's work in September and drew large and enthusiastic audiences at each meeting.

Following her, Rev. B. F. Austin had charge of the Church three consecutive months—October, November and December. He is eminently fitted for such steady work. No speaker can do justice to himself on the society in a single month. No one can determine by one month, or even two, whether a speaker will meet the needs of the Church and "draw" such audiences as may be regarded an idea of success, or not. Usually a speaker who presents no phenomena, and depends upon the value of sound lectures suited to the capacity and needs of the growing thinkers, will draw better the second or third month than the first, and audiences will increase for four, five and six months.

That Brother Austin is qualified for such continued work, no one who knows him will question. He fully met the highest expectations of the Church, and the public, making friends of all who met him, and giving the Church new life and inspiring the public with higher conceptions of Spiritualism, and respect for the Church. It is not talent alone that qualifies for usefulness. No one that is seriously deficient in moral qualities can succeed for any long, continuous work.

No amount of sensational genius can compensate for moral deficiency. Character adorned with intellectual wealth, and scholarship, is the safest guaranty of success in all public undertakings.

Dr. Austin is richly endowed with these high essentials; and the Pittsburg Spiritualists appreciate them, and hold him long enough to give his genius and moral worth fair opportunity.

Another advantage enjoyed by the Pittsburgh Church is the splendid home latent, that is not only competent but free and willing to take hold as the needs call them; and it is found that with them "a prophet is not without honor" even in his own country, and city.

B. F. Tischer is one of the rising stars whose light is likely to shine "from the East even unto the West," and his oratorial gifts are in a fair way to make him a favorite on the platform. He served the church for the month of January, 1905, and was followed by tests—or messages—through the mediumship of Mrs. Dr. Zophie, one of Pittsburg's trusted and beloved mediums, who adds to effective phenomena the supreme quality of sincerity and truthfulness. Brother Tischer is credited with clean character and devotion to the cause, and he and Mrs. Dr. Zophie donated their services for the entire month.

Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood followed in February, and all who know him can appreciate the rare scientific treat, and sound spiritual philosophy, that illumined the church and inspired the people during his stay in Pittsburg. Added to his public lectures on Sundays, he gave special instructions to a large class of students, and this, his scientific instructions, are fixing habits of clear thinking, and rational interpretation of nature, as the only reliable basis for a true and enduring spiritual philosophy that will bear the critical analyses of the world's thinkers, and grow stronger with the evolution of true science.

Following Prof. Lockwood, the church had the high spirituality and rare intellectual inspiration of Mrs. C. L. Stevens, who always gives her services to the church free of all financial considerations. Added to her fine intellectual genius which thrills and delights her hearers, she baptizes her audiences with a warm, sweet, personal sphere, radiant with the light of immortal worlds. She was greeted with large audiences and a warm welcome from her many admiring friends who love her as their own. Her presence is always a benediction.

A part of the month the people had the additional benefit of the attractive presence of Mrs. L. A. Griffen of England, and her work was highly appreciated and her personal qualities made her a popular favorite, and the earnest, soulful messages carried conviction and comfort to many hearts, and made her many friends.

Among the many gifted advocates, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates rank second to none in variety, originality, striking phenomena, and intellectual vigor, all sustained and illuminated with manifest integrity, earnest devotion to the cause, and perfect truthfulness in mediumship. Mrs. Kates is a fine singer, with a clear and powerful voice. Her trance lectures are a surprise to critics, as well as to her admirers.

Brother Stevens expresses his appreciation of the work of Mr. and Mrs. Kates in these words: These zealous workers closed our season, leaving our treasury with a neat little balance, assuring a successful opening of our fall meetings. They were enthusiastic in freely giving their time and talents to two very successful entertainments. One consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations and spirit messages. The other called a "tea party" under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid. Brother Kates and wife, assisted by about one dozen others of our local mediums, sitting at separate tables, devoting 10 to 15 minutes to reading at 10 cents each. The throng that came was a surprise to all. That feature alone netted us over $25. Then there were articles sold by chance and then an appeal to the gustatory pleasures in tempting ice cream, cake and coffee. Appetites will command the pocket, when all else fails. When cash and cream are in the balance, cream "takes the cake," and the pocket book loosens its grip on change. This successful entertainment was held June 6, in the lyceum room, on first floor of the church.

The Ladies' Aid.

What is religion without the inspiration of woman? What is science if she be ignored? What is home with only men? What is music without her refining shere blending in its echoes? The Ladies' Aid is not only a moral tonic and spiritual illumination to the church, but also a decidedly substantial backing to the financial success of the church. This is true of all churches in general, and the Spiritual Church of Pittsburg in particular. It is not alone because it is a "ladies' aid" a combine of the fair sex, but the individual members are each and all ladies, and moreover, they are ladies of first quality, and are earnestly devoted to the church and to the work they are doing for its support. Mrs. B. A. Pressing is the presiding officer, and her helpers are all eager to make her work their own, and add all they can to its success.

Spiritual Literature.

The importance of this cannot be overestimated. Each week The Progressive Thinker is loaded with a large variety of instructive matter from a vigorous corps of the ablest writers and profoundest thinkers on the continent. Besides the animated discussions, editorial analyses, and the strong variety of reviews, and able commentaries by Hudson Tuttle, Chas Dawbarn and others make each issue a veritable encyclopedia of spiritual science and moral philosophy.

The Banner of Light, Sunflower and Light of Truth each furnishes its quota of valuable thought and special information, and each has its favorites and admirers; and yet how small a per cent of professed Spiritualists read any of them! But they are all kept on sale at the Pittsburg church (and, I hope, in hundreds of other spiritual meetings) and Bro. M. C. Matthews attends to the wants of all comers who seek knowledge by reading, supplying them with books, magazines and spiritual papers, at the vestibule of the church. Besides serving up the best literature, Bro. Matthews is helpful and ready to assist, whenever and wherever called in any needful work for the church.

Brother Thomas Evans dispenses charming music, rich and sweet and full of soul-moving inspiration. He is blind, and this may accentuate his musical talent. His music adds much to the enjoyment of the meetings, and it is so full of the spirit, so perfectly accentuated, so strong and clear that with no other service it makes a good meeting, exalting to the soul and full of loveful worship. As a testimonial to his work and valuable services, a special quiet subscription was taken at the last service, netting about $28.

The following board of Trustees were elected April 2: C. L. Stevens, president; John Grayburn, first vice-president; W. H. Hammond, second vice-president; H. A. Meyers, secretary; H. A. Pratt, treasurer; Mrs. Sophia Meyran, Mrs. Catherine Maul, James Dixon and Philip Zeig, trustees. This board represents the best qualities that could be united for a common work. They are all thoroughly capable, and aglow with earnest interest and "sweet good will," and in harmonious accord.

The speakers engaged for the coming year to commence in September are Margaret Gaule Reidinger, George W. Kates and wife, Lyman C. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Oscar A. Edgerly, Mrs. Katie Ham and Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

When one looks over the field and counts the number of successful societies, and the splendid edifices that have been dedicated to Spiritualism in the past ten years, including the Morris Pratt school, it is decidedly suggestive of Spiritualism a growing science, and a widening influence in the affairs of this world. We may scold about frauds, shake before the ghost of obsession, observe the diplomacy and smile at the dogmas of theosophy; but, over all, the star of scientific Spiritualism rises and shines with increasing splendor, and its light grows stronger year by year, in spite of all fakes, hallucinations and superstitions that cast their grim shadows upon its progressive pathway. ANTIQUATED THEORY GALORE.

Let Us Move Up in Search of Nature's Facts.

Well, well, we have the Christian theory of a special creation all out of nothing by a personal God. We have the theory that each individual form of life, man, brute, bug, or worm, is a whittling off of said God, and that when the form dies the animating essence returns to said God; thus perpetuating his equilibrium. We have the theory, that away back in Earth's youthful days, the Angels gathered the eternal germ-seeds of all forms and species of life and sowed them broad-cast in Earth's atmosphere (just as though earth could not gestate her own germ-seed as well as some other planet could for her.)

Now let us lay all this antiquated rubbish back on the shelf along with the obsolete theories of a flat world, a revolving sun, a six-thousand-years-old earth with a firmament over it, and take a glance over the lessons that nature and psychological scientists alone keep spreading out before us. Enfeebled by years, humble and obscure by environments, the writer is becoming impatient to see your little army of able intelligent, progressive contributors, vacate the miasmatic swamps of antiquated theory, and move out along the foot-hills of nature's rational, evolutional, spiritual philosophy, and teach the world something of nature's immutable functional forces which gestate and evolute the intelligent entities that animate, vitalize and intellectualize every functional department of the universe; for then there will still be left a host of God-tainted fossils to keep threshing over these old antiquated straw-piles which science has long since threshed clean of everything except the lint and mould which time contributes.

Better for humanity they turn their investigations and teachings into the channels of nature's evoluting modus operandi, then the world will begin to realize that each higher functional department attained by life entities is one step higher in the possibility of attaining knowledge, grandeur and potency. Then man can look back from his evoluted eminence and review the long, patient, persistent struggle the life entities that now animate and intellectualize his being have had on their long and eventful march from vitalizing our elements to their organization in mortal form—the highest pinnacle attainable on our mundane plane.

When earth's children can realize that each department of the universe receives from the next lower department its graduated life entities, educates and drills them in the various arts and mechanism of that department, then passes them on up to the next higher department for further development, then the thory that our next department (the spirit realm) is a seething swarm of vicious demons, whose only aim and aspiration is to torment mortal beings, will pass into oblivion along with the flat-world theory.

Physiological scientists, with the aid of their modern devices of perception, have demonstrated that the human being is in reality a miniature world, endowed with similar functional forces, vitalized and manipulated by millions of infinitesimal living creatures, just as we see each of earth's functional forces vitalized and animated by their respective grade of entities. In man these millions of infinitesimal creatures have their functional departments of labor—one grade or gang circulates the blood, another the digestive functions, another assimilation; others the brain, and still others manipulate and dominate the mind forces;—all these functional departments being carried along without even a conscious effort from the compromised individual over-mind. Here we have found a miniature world, and we have found the life entities who organized it, and who manipulate its functional department, and who dominate its government. So we see the intellectual bearing of this miniature world must depend altogether upon the harmony and intellect of these little internal operators, on just the same principles that in earth's human bearing functional department, the intellectual bearing of each national government is the compromised mind expression of its individual units. We might extend this same principle into the next department, the spirit realms, and on and on.

We see this same plan of invisible, intelligent workers manifesting throughout earth's vegetable department, and who knows but their unseen mind forces combine to dominate earth's vegetable department?

We know that each individualized life form is a double electro-magnetic battery; the growth of a flower is proof positive that it is a battery of attraction, reception and assimilation, and its fragrance which fills the air is positive proof that it is also a transmitter. Just so with the human organism. The very fact that a man thinks a thought is positive evidence that his organic structure attracted and registered that thought from the passing thought wave, and the fact that man can send his thoughts to Japan or Russia as quickly as across the room is proof positive that he is also a transmitter. Wireless telegraphy is a crude material illustration of the principles.

In connection with this line of thought, nature teaches another very important lesson for occult students to study. In each department of earth's productive manifestation we find the life entities of each department are strictly sensitized and limited to their respective department. Who ever heard of the life entities that had attained the animal bearing department, dropping back into the vegetable-bearing department and organizing a sure living rabbit? Or to reverse, who ever heard of the life entities that manipulate vegetable growth reaching forward and organizing a sure cabbage-head as an appendix to an animal form? No, no, nature's laws do not permit of thus swapping and mixing department forces.

By virtue of the mortal organism being a product of earth's animal-bearing department in normal condition, mortals are sensitized strictly to the mortal thought-waves; and it is only the very few supersensitized who can attain the abnormal ground, and hold a moment's affiliation with those in the next higher department, and by virtue of these same laws the opportunity and ability are just as rare for those belonging to the next higher department to drop back and affiliate with mortals.

Student, stick a peg here, and occasionally revert to these immutable laws in nature, it will help to keep you lined up in your imaginary theorizing.

The writer has in mind a sensitive who has been a neighbor for the last forty years. She is a very worthy lady of some seventy summers, has been and still is a frequent visitor. On some of her visits she passes into the abnormal condition and gives us lengthy and interesting communications from spirit friends. On another visit it may be a very scientific talk from a nameless spirit. On still other visits, when conditions are different she passes into the abnormal condition and gives us a rehearsal of all of the secret town gossip; and much of it in sentiment and language that is as foreign to her in her normal condition as day is from night.

Again, almost every week (but always at her home and alone) she, under the abnormal condition, gathers up her colored pencils, or oil-paints, brushes and paper (which are always kept at hand) and paints the most artistic pictures which the invisible artist claims to be charts of different functional forces of the universe. While making these pictures her hand moves so rapidly that one can scarcely catch a glimpse of hand, pencil or brush. I have known this lady while sitting in a room in her normal cheerful condition, to be seized with demoniac conditions and rehearse in passionate terms the duplicate of an angry quarrel that had transpired therein several days previous.

Now I do not offer these facts as being anything new or strange; for almost every old occult investigator has witnessed similar phenomena; but I do wish to suggest that the lingering aura and mind force of those recent disputants projected a connecting "wire" to her sensitive brain and caused her to give forth this seeming demoniac phenomena.

Yes, I wish to go one step further, and suggest the probability that a mere aggregated and prolonged exposure to similar adverse aural and mind-forces, would project hallucinate forms which would be mistaken by clairvoyants for genuine spirit forms.

DOGS CAN THINK AND TALK.

The query as to whether the dog [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune], in his long period of association with man as the companion of shepherd, huntsman, artist, and dog lover, has forwarded his development, we have not the means at hand to answer. However, we may instructively compare the behavior of the dog reared in the country with that reared in the city and notice their relative acuteness in translating appearances. The wheelman cycling through the village is bellowed upon from every kennel and corner, and, whenever possible, he is nipped in the leg, but when he reaches a large town he may pass by ninety-nine out of every hundred dogs unmolested. The city dogs have learned to suppress the stimulus to bark which the swiftly moving wheels of the bicycle excite.

The faculty of relating cause and effect and to guide their actions by the knowledge thus obtained belongs to many dogs. As examples I will cite but two instances which have come under my personal observation. A watch-dog that lay chained had had his plate of food so placed by the maid that he could reach the rim with his nose but not the food with his mouth. Presently he had the sagacity to discover the means of his deliverance. He stood up, gathered himself together, turned around so that his hind legs were turned toward the plate, stretched them out until they touched the dish, and thus drew it is to such a distance that he could eat with comfort.

One day I shot a heron. It fell into an open stretch of water. My dog naturally plunged in to fetch it to me. But the bird defended herself against his approach with fierce snaps of her sharp beak. The dog swam around without crossing the danger line until suddenly he ducked under and grasped the heron from below and then, with a swift twist, secured hold of her back and bore her into shore. There was absolutely no better means for avoiding a gouge in the eye than that which he employed. Was it instinct do you ask? Where was the instinct, then, that came to the same dog's rescue one day when I shot a serpent in two and sent the dog to recover the head portion? The serpent had sufficient strength remaining to bite the dog in the face, so that the faithful beast returned home with a sadly swollen head and was subjected to a severe sickness. Ever after that experience she approached a serpent in a wide bow which prevented any repetition.

The soul experiences which we term our emotional life are to be observed in nearly all the higher animals. Parrots and canary birds form attachments for some particular person, the sight of whom gives them the most marked joy. With equal clearness these and other animals give evidence of anger, pain, and sorrow so that we cannot doubt their meaning.

The greatest faculty for expressing his feelings I would ascribe to the dog; we scarcely know another beast so well, yet hold his faithfulness all too lightly and speak in jest of his fidelity. And this incorrectly. For a dog remains true to all who use him well. If the friendship, however, be broken it is a difficult matter to reinstate oneself in his regard.

It is a fact that all the little dogs, whose existence seems to have no especial object or reason, regard me with the utmost dislike. And they are right; they reward like with like. On the contrary, I can approach all large dogs without the least danger, be they as ferocious as they may, and can stroke their backs from the first moment of my acquaintance with them. They seem to know that I hold them in high esteem. It is perhaps for this reason that I have been able to study the language of the large dogs rather than that of the small species.

Dog language is of course largely gesture. But the gestures are so significant that we cannot mistake their meaning. One pointer I owned spoke so clearly to my father and myself without language that we could understand all that she said. When she came into the room and did not find my father she would first go to the corner where his hunting outfit was kept and then raise herself to the closet, open the door, and look in to see whether one of the guns was missing. Were this the case she gave clear expression to her dismay and whined, howled, and bellowed until hushed.

I have seen tears in a dog's eyes, which were beyond all question to my mind flowing as the result of pain and yearning. A homely little mongrel was the darling of my aunt's heart. He was taken with her everywhere. But one day he had to stay at home. He went alternately from one to the other, pecked us with his nose, and then ran rapidly to the door, where he awaited us with expectant eyes. As we did not heed his silent yet eloquent pleas, he finally dropped his head, while one tear after another flowed from his eyes.

An acquaintance of mine owns a fine old dog that says "mamma" plainly. The thing is most simple. The dog gives an angry snarl, the master with his hand, closes the half open mouth twice and sharply, and the word "mamma" is plainly intonated. That was the beginning. Now the dog says mamma without aid.

The ordinary barking of dogs may be cultivated to resemble human articulations and to use their bark at special specified occasions.

MODIFYING NATURE.

The Process of Evolution on the Material and Spiritual Sides of Existence—The Wonderful Transformations Made in Butterflies—The Lower Spheres of Spirit Life—An Important Lesson Imparted.

To create butterflies of new and gorgeous colors in a city flat is the hobby pursued by Dr. Otto Seifert at his home in East Eighty-fourth street, New York.

It was in his boyhood home in Hanover, Germany, that he first became interested in butterflies. His father didn't want him to play in the streets, so he sent him to the woods and fields. And the lad speedily became a student and collector of butterflies. He came to America in 1878 and was in the drug business for thirty-five years, but continued his collecting and his experiments with butterflies.

Now he has butterflies by the thousands and is raising more all the time. Caterpillars are coming to him from friends in all parts of the world. They restrict him in his movements.

"I want to go to Europe this year," he said the other day, "but I have now so many caterpillars that I could not leave them."

Dr. Seifert is now making experiments of special interest. By means of application to the extremes of heat and cold to the caterpillars, butterflies of more gorgeous or more sober colors, as the experiment may result, are being produced, and some entirely new and more picturesque species may yet be forthcoming from the freezing out or the incubating process which Dr. Seifert employs.

In doing this he is following out the discovery first made by George Dorfmeister, a Bavarian schoolteacher, and since followed up by August Weismann, Dr. Standfuss in Zurich and W. H. Edwards in this country. Dorfmeister discovered that by putting the pupae of the butterflies belonging to the family of Arctiidae away in the cold of the cellar for a certain length of time he secured a modification in form and color which made the resulting butterflies resemble a butterfly of a more northern clime.

Dr. Seifert has taken a butterfly coming from Labrador to Cape of Good Hope, and by the icebox or the incubator method he has achieved specimens which have an individuality of their own. He has taken butterflies familiarly known in the fields around New York and by subjecting the chrysalids to extremes of heat and cold has obtained forms that would properly belong to both Canada and Florida.

The pupae from which it is desired to secure a more northern form of butterfly is put as soon as its shell is hard into the refrigerator or icebox for two hours before it is consigned to the freezer for its long sleep, to accustom it to the freezing temperature. It is subjected to the same treatment when taken from the freezer before being exposed to a regular temperature.

Not only will the effects of extreme cold eliminate the brilliant eyes upon the wings of brilliant butterflies, such as for instance, the common "Painted Lady," but it will also have an effect upon the shape of the wings of the insect, the wings most approaching the triangular in shape appearing in the modified form as more forked.

The females in general are far less inclined than the males to yield in regard to color and design to the stimulating influence of temperature. While heat and cold usually act as stimulants in different degrees, in some cases almost the same modifications are obtained by extreme heat as by cold.

Extreme heat seems to retard development just as cold does. Freshly formed pupae of the Arctia age exposed to a temperature of about 100 Fahrenheit for 100 hours gave after six days an extreme southern form of this butterfly. In general the effect of the cold is found to produce northern forms with more sober coloring, while the heat brings out gorgeous colors even more brilliantly.

The apparatus employed in these transformations is exceedingly simple. It is an ordinary icebox, or freezer, where the chrysalis is kept so fast asleep that a little matter of temperature does not in the least trouble it, and it is prepared to assume the colors which it would assume in an extreme northern clime. From the freezer it is transferred to a pasteboard box in a living room until the butterfly appears.

The incubator, if such it may be called, is made from a square tin or sheet iron box. The oven of a gas stove would do. Lamps are placed beneath the box, and inside are a series of horizontal shelves upon which the chrysalids are placed. The temperature has to be regulated carefully.

In cases in Dr. Seifert's flat are displayed his collections of butterflies and also the butterflies he has created. All the world is represented—butterflies from Tibet, rare and hard to get; butterflies from Japan, with mottled wings that in coloring resemble the Japanese tea boxes; immense steel blue butterflies from the Indies and Borneo; gorgeous flowerlike insects from South America and queer ones from Mexico.

One case is full of butterflies from Florida. Dr. Seifert went to that state to raise and experiment with butterflies, because he could not get here the feed they needed. Caterpillars are fastidious and won't eat everything. Many of them only eat one thing and there is one tropical species that will only feed on the leaves of the passion flower.

Dr. Seifert has had many queer things to contend with in his pairing and rearing of butterflies. His care of his caterpillars alone is no sinecure. Each day of his life he has to make an excursion to get food for them.

One species will feed on nothing but the leaves of the witch hazel, while another will die if fed on anything but the twigs of the weeping willow. Some of them are very fond of dandelion leaves. So his shopping for caterpillar food often extends far beyond the limits of New York.

As an instance of the experimental nature of some of his work the doctor a few seasons ago found a rare green moth in the Bronx. From it he raised families from it for two seasons, but each season they died. Their food was investigated, and the third season the family grew to maturity. Dr. Seifert had been feeding them on the female blossoms of a certain conifer when they needed the male blossoms of the same tree.

In the above narrative, as set forth by the New York Sun, a grand lesson can be learned. It gives one a hint as to the varied processes of evolution such as the change in the form and mental status of the unborn child by impressions made on the mind of the mother. A fright may change its form into that of a monster, or pleasurable spiritual emotions may make an Angel of Light out of it. There is some change worked by darkness in the process of evolution of a depraved spirit out of its deplorable conditions. His debased state may be such that he is in almost total darkness in spirit life; but in the course of time a change is wrought, and a desire most earnest, is manifested to advance. L. C.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send In Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. For full programs address the secretary, Onset, Mass.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

Begins July 15 and ends August 27. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp commences July 30 and closes August 27. Address Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

Commences July 30 and ends August 20. For full particulars address Geo. E. Knowlden, Tacoma, Wash.

CENTRAL OHIO CAMP.

This camp opens Sunday, June 4, and closes Sunday, June 25, at Bueleh Park, eight miles southwest of Columbus. For particulars, address the secretary, 55 McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 21, 1905, and closes Aug. 21, 1905, with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly as presiding chairman. For full information address J. W. Ewing or W. R. Divine of Grand Ledge, Mich.

THE ASHLEY, OHIO, CAMP.

This camp opens August 6 and closes August 27. For further particulars address Will Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

OCEAN GROVE CAMP.

This camp is located at Harwich, Mass., and opens July 9, and closes July 23.

WINFIELD (KANSAS) CAMP.

The Winfield Camp Association will hold its twelfth annual camp-meeting, commencing July 15, and ending July 25. Address Mrs. Maud K. Gates, 807 North Manning street, Winfield, Kans., for programs.

UNITY CAMP, MASS.

Opens on Sunday, June 4, and continues every Sunday until the last of September.

LOS ANGELES CAMP, CAL.

To be held at Mineral Park, commencing June 25 and ending July 25. Mrs. Nettie Howell is in charge.

VERONA PARK CAMP.

The Verona Park camp-meeting, Me., will open Aug. 13 and close Aug. 27. A. F. Smith, president, Bangor Me.; F. W. Smith, secretary, Rockland, Me.

MANTUA CAMP, OHIO.

This camp located at Mantua Station, Ohio, will open July 9, and continue to August 27. For further particulars, address F. H. Sherwood, Secretary, Mantua Station, Ohio.

CAMP PROGRESS.

Camp Progress, Moreland Park Grove, Upper Swampscott, Mass., opens Sunday, June 4, 1905.

LAKE BRADY, OHIO.

The fourteenth annual session of this camp will be held during the months of July and August. For full particulars address A. G. Keck, Akron, Ohio.

FOREST HOME CAMP, MICH.

Forest Home Spiritualist camp-meeting begins July 30, and closes Aug. 20. For full particulars address the secretary, Mrs. Ruth Eastman, P. O. Box 69, Mancelona, Mich.

ISLAND LAKE CAMP.

Island Lake Camp, Mich., opens Sunday, July 23, extending until August 28. For programs of information write or call on the secretary, H. R. LaGrange, Brighton, Mich., Island Lake Box.

ROLLING ON THE FLOOR.

Religious Fanaticism Run Wild in California—Actions Displayed That Border on Insanity.

At this writing the Free Methodists of Los Angeles, are holding a camp meeting, and according to the newspapers of that city are acting like a lot of lunatics. The Los Angeles Times of a late date gives a detailed account of the meetings. The Times says:

The meeting of yesterday evening was the most remarkable of the series. The sermon was delivered by Rev. M. M. Downing, district elder. His theme was "Salvation," and with emphasis the speaker drove home the lesson, while the big barracks echoed with the hallelujahs of the mass of listeners jammed among the benches.

Dramatic in delivery and showing the intensity of his thought in his every action, the speaker thrilled the throng with the pathos of his utterance, arraigned the willful sinner and deplored his sin. These are some of the striking paragraphs of the remarkable sermon:

"When I received the regulation dose of gospel ipecac, I vomited up the world," said Rev. Downing. "The best recommendation to Jesus Christ is a broken-down, half-damned, repentant slave of sin who comes for pardon.

During the sermon, one woman stirred to the depths of her feelings, arose and placed the floor, with her hands clenched. Another jumped and yelled aloud, while a third stood in her seat and stretching out her arm, held it extended toward the throng. Without speaking a word, she stood thus for more than an hour.

The after-meeting brought the tide of feeling to the highest pitch and many rolled on the floor and shouted their petitions prostrate before the rostrum where the leader conducted the service, which proceeded in spite of the strange interruptions.

During the closing hours of the conference a total of $2200 was realized for the Free Methodist Seminary, $700 was raised for foreign missions and $200 for camp meeting expenses and helping preachers to their circuits. A total of $1600 was realized for home missions.

It will be noticed that a total of $2.300 were raised for missionary purposes. Now I am free to say they would better expend that money on themeselves in an honest effort to learn some common-sense things. In what part of the world may be found a people who are so ignorant and deluded as to believe that God is pleased to see his children rolling on the floor, and shouting, and screaming, and frantically yelling their prayers to him? What do such people as these Methodists intend to teach in their Seminaries for which they raised $2,200? Now I am very tolerant in my views touching the honest religious faith of my fellow men. I have pity for these fanatics above referred to. I sometimes contribute to carry on the work of the Salvation Army, and the work of orthodox churches, although I am not orthodox in my religious beliefs, but I could not contribute a nickel to these Los Angeles Free Methodists,

Why?

My answer is, they are religiously insane, and the money that is given them to be expended in teaching "the heathen," by the missionaries, and the children in their Seminaries, would be worse than wasted.

Of course I know that not all Free Methodists are as fanatical as these described above. There are "cranks" in every church; even the Spiritualists have their quota of them.

It seems to me that the time has come for mankind in civilized countries to abandon the idea that there is a God up somewhere in the sky, who demands that every man and woman shall importune him, entreat him, coax and flatter him, and promise to do nothing else through eternity than to fall down before him and tell him how great he is, and worship him, and sing his praise, and constantly remind him that if he had dealt justly with them they would be in hell.

Here I am reminded of the story of the Methodist and the Quaker who, stopping at a farm house, were asked to sleep in the same bed. The Quaker disrobed and jumped in. The Methodist kneeled down and prayed. He told God "how he had been conceived in iniquity and born in sin; how prone he was to do evil, and that if God had dealt justly with him he would have been in hell long ago where mercy could never reach him."

The Quaker quickly sprang out of bed and began to put on his clothes. When asked what he intended to do, he replied: "Friend, if thee is half as bad a man as thee has just told the Lord thee is, then I will not sleep with thee, for I am afraid thee will rob me before morning."

That there is an "Infinite Intelligence" I do not doubt. That this "Infinite Intelligence" is the life of everything in the universe, I believe. This Infinite Intelligence, I call God. My God could not have been frustrated in his plans by a devil, an inferior being. He could not "repent" that he had made man. He could not be so malignant and savage as to establish an endless hell and send unnumbered billions of men, women and babies to that place of eternal torment, because one man, Adam, ate a forbidden fruit. My God could not make so bad a job of work in creating a world and peopling it, as to require that his only son should come to earth and be cruelly murdered in order to give God an excuse for keeping a part of the human family out of hell on condition that they spend both time and eternity in flattering him by telling him how great and good he was, for inventing "his great plan of salvation." My God would not be delighted at seeing men and women rolling about on the floor, shouting their petitions and yelling like a lot of ignorant savages.

May that day hasten when people will learn that right living is the best religion; the doing unto others as we would that they should do unto us, and that no rolling on the floor, nor yelling and shouting to a supposed God up in the clouds asking him to enable us to escape some merited punishment "for Christ's sake" will change the laws of our being.

PRIMEVAL MAN.

A Giant in Size, But Not a Savage—The Views of a Minister of the Gospel, in the Chicago Record-Herald—Interesting Particulars.

Much speculation has been indulged in as to the mental, moral and physical character of the first members of the human race. A comparison of the findings of natural science with the teachings of Genesis is interesting.

The book of Genesis tells us "there were giants in the earth in those days." Who were the Nephilim, or giants, mentioned in Genesis? Sir J. W. Dawson says the answer is furnished in the skeletons found some years ago in the cavern at Cromagnon. This cave is a shelter under an overhanging ledge of limestone, and was excavated originally by erosion. It fronts a little stream to the southwest, and having originally been eight feet high and twenty feet deep, must have formed a very cozy retreat from the elements, and with a pleasant outlook.

The "Man of Cromagnon" must have been of huge frame, for he was 6 feet 4 inches in height, and his bones prove him to have been of the most powerful and athletic mold—a Samson in strength. The bones of the limbs have the peculiar form characteristic of athletic men, accustomed from childhood to the most violent walking, running and leaping. This is indicated by the enormous strength of the thigh bones and the flattened form of the leg bones in this as in all other paleolithic skeletons. The skull presents the evidence of advanced age, the teeth being worn down to the sockets, though without being lost.

Superiority in Earlier Race.

The skull proper, or brain case, is very long, much more so than in ordinary modern skulls, and has great breadth. The brain was of greater size than in the average man, and the frontal region was largely and well developed.

The face, however, presents peculiar characters. It is extremely broad, with projecting cheek bones and heavy jaws. It resembles the coarsest types of American Indian. The eye orbits are square and elongated laterally, the nose large and prominent and the jaw projecting.

The skeleton of the woman which was found beside him, presents similar characteristics of stature, structure and cranial form, only, of course, modified somewhat by sex. Their ornaments, consisting of perforated pieces of shell and ivory, were found with them.

Professor Broca thinks the great volume of brain and the general form and profile of the brain case are undeniable evidences of superiority, which are met only in the civilized races. On the other hand, the breadth and form of facial features, and enormous development of the jaw, and the size and roughness of the muscular insertions suggest to us a violent and brutal nature. The god and the devil seem to have been combined in that race—though there was nothing of the mere brute.

Mighty Men of Other Days.

The first members of the human family were doubtless of stern and muscular form. This gigantic paleolithic man was probably a representative of that powerful race who filled the antediluvian world with violence and who appeared in post-diluvian times as the Anakim, and the giants of early history.

Probably nothing is more interesting and curious in the discoveries among the ancient cave men than that they confirm the words of Genesis, "there were giants in the earth in those days." Light has been thrown upon the subject also, by a discovery made near San Diego, not many years ago, of the body of a gigantic man, in a dry cavern. The shriveled form measured eight feet in height during life. This man belonged to a race unknown to historic times. Yes, those were "mighty men of old, men of renown."

But were the first men paleolithic savages? The critic of scripture would have us think so, but his contention falls to the ground. While the race of men dwelling in the land of the mammoth were in the paleolithic, or rough-stone-age, there were races inhabiting the vallies of the Nile and Euphrates in advanced states of civilization. The archeologist, with pick and shovel, has uncovered the path of civilized man back more than 7,000 years, but the geologist and paleontologist trace paleolithic man back to the same era.

Words of Genesis Confirmed.

Civilized and paleolithic men have been shown to have flourished on earth soon after the end of the glacial epoch, and the beginning of the Champlain period—about 8,000 years ago, as shown by Dr. Alexander Winchell. The sciences agree very remarkably with Genesis in establishing the age of mankind on the earth.

But what was the character of the first members of the race? Were they savages or civilized? Genesis attributes knowledge of morals and religious truth and duty to the first family of man. It attributes to man an awakened conscience, and strong emotions. It points out the possession of genius and skill in music, metallurgy, agriculture, architecture and the love of flocks and herds.

Notice another and very important fact: The true principles of evolution must be, and are, in accord with the facts of paleontology that science teaches us that at the introduction of a species during geologic time its first members were perfect representatives of the species. Species have persisted or degenerated. Species do not improve. This law has prevailed from the beginning to the extinction of many species.

If man, therefore, is the creature of evolution—and Genesis does not say he is or is not—then the first men must have been perfect representatives of mankind. They must have been perfect mentally, morally and physically. We do not mean by this they were perfect in their knowledge or skill, but, rather, perfect in their capacities for knowledge and achievement.

The evolutionist errs in looking for a connecting link which is half-man and half-brute. Paleontology, and evolution based upon it, conclusively prove this.

The first man was not a savage, but a perfect specimen of manhood. But physical, mental, and moral degeneration have occurred. The facts of savage and civilized life prove this. Evolution confirms the perfection of primeval man, and requires that man be first normal in mental, moral and physical character, before he becomes degenerate.

The teachings of Genesis, therefore, find ample support in the testimony of science, and in the much dreaded theory of evolution.

MEDIUMISTIC DRAWINGS.

A Student Takes Lessons from Mother Nature.

I seem impelled to write of an experience that came into my life, of a psychic nature, a few years ago.

I was calling on a medium, and in our conversation she stopped short, looked at me earnestly and said: "If you take some paper and a pencil down by the water where you go to sit sometimes, you will get some drawings."

I had not mentioned to her of my fondness for a certain tree down by the lagoon in Washington Park which was a few blocks from where I live on the Midway. It was a favorite place of mine, so one bright June morning, with pencil and a block of drawing paper I started for my first "sitting" with Mother Nature, and how kind she was to me you can see at my first "seance."

I reached the spot where the sitting was to take place, without much hopes of its outcome, as I have had many spirit promises that have never been fulfilled.

I sat idly watching the boats pass. I guess their passing made me passive; suffice to say I soon felt a desire to do something. My hand vibrated and passed over the paper several times in a caressing way as though it wished to give a magnetic treatment before proceeding.

Then I drew some sharp lines quickly, wondering what was coming next, hardly realizing that I was being controlled. Next a foundation horizontal to the diagonal lines was made, but still I remained in doubt as to its finish, but seeming to divine my thoughts, I then drew some circles around the tops of the stems, and then I saw I had a little etching from nature—not a very elaborate one to be sure, but a surprise and wonderment to me, as I had never done anything in drawing. They resembled a few daisies. Then I was assisted in printing this explanation, "A study from nature." I was well pleased with my first morning's effort.

At my next sitting my drawing improved, and developed quite a marine scene, representing a lighthouse on a cliff at the right, to the left a bold projection of land with an open waterview between, with a ship in the distance. A surprise came to me as I noticed that as I widened the water scene, it sent the ships farther from the land. This was a new idea to me. I arose, thinking I had finished my lesson, when I reseated myself and drew a perpendicular shading below the bluff, which made it change its perspective and I could almost see it rise to a new height.

Each time I went to my drawing lesson I got better results, and surprises to me in effects.

I next drew the likeness of what seemed to be some seer of the olden time with long hair and beard.

It wrote, "We are trying to make a picture of your musical guide."

I drew the picture of a horse, but at first the head looked more like a goat, but it grew to be quite a well-developed animal. Then I sketched its rider, an Indian chief, who claimed he was helping me.

After that I drew a wigwam with scalps and skins hanging in decoration.

Next came an Indian maiden with a couple of arrows as ornaments in her hair.

I drew many designs during the summer. One day I started on what seemed to be the tail end of something. I thought of Hamlet's soliloquy, "I could a tale unfold." Well, I unfolded it, and it proved to be the tail of an elephant. After outlining it and attaching its trunk I drew the full face of a Hindoo on the side of the elephant, wearing his native cap. He claimed to be one of my helpers, and wrote that this was a picture of his elephant.

One day I got the front face of a young lady with long curls—a bust likeness. I thought I had completed it, but was impressed to return to my work and then drew a stem and petals of a lily, so as to form a fitting frame to the face. As I have a spirit that claims to be helping me, and also a dear sister on this side of life who is an angel in flesh, both bearing the name of Lillie, I thought it very symbolical.

There is one thing about developing along with Mother Nature: You don't have foolish question asked as to whether a person is to get married or a better job.

There is nothing to break conditions, or disturb the medium—only an occasional ripple of laughter from some happy boat-load of pleasure-seekers gliding by, and that is only harmony. This brings me to recall one of my pictures which has a tragic feature about it. One day I had started on a picture which gave me the impression it was to be a man, as I commenced by drawing a sailor straw hat, but I soon saw by the bangs, collar, and shirt waist that it was designed to be the picture of a lady. It finished as a bust picture and then wrote underneath the following: "I was drowned in the lagoon." Then I remembered the drowning of three young persons, two young ladies and a young man, that had occurred some time previous to this, and the spot was opposite where I was sitting, near the bridge that spans the lagoon.

I will leave these experiences to the reader to explain whether it was an awakening of my own powers, or done by those who claimed to be with me. Suffice to say, it was for a good purpose and brought me in harmony with nature and myself.

One day in the early fall I went to my drawing lesson, but found no desire to do anything, and concluded the object had been accomplished, and that object was to benefit my health.

BYRON D. STILLMAN.

Chicago, Ill.

SOME COMPREHENSIVE REMARKS.

God and the Constitution of the United States.

The National Reform League is at its old work of "reforming" the Constitution.

This immortal document [as set forth in the Chicago Examiner], drawn up by Thomas Jefferson, debated for months in the historic convention and finally ratified by the states, the document which was pronounced by no less a personage than the late Hon. William Ewart Gladstone to be the "noblest piece of work that ever sprang from the mind of man," is, according to the teachings of the National Reform League people, a very poor affair after all.

It is imperfect in the worst possible sense of the word—it is IMMORAL.

In his address before the National Reform Convention at Boston the Rev. J. M. Foster said:

"Since the Constitution is the nation's sailing chart, fixed for all weathers, it ought to bear the mark of the bright and shining light by which we steer. God should be recognized in the instrument as the source of authority and law."

Like Abraham of old, the Rev. Mr. Foster is "the friend of God," and he is greatly distressed lest God should not get what belongs to him. He wants us to "recognize" God in the Constitution.

Let us imagine it to be the radiant Summer time (as it is), and ourselves to be out in the midst of a rich country meadow, which meadow shall be full of grasses, flowers, crickets, grasshoppers, ants and various other kinds of bugs and insects.

The sun, lifting itself above the Eastern hills, strides along like a god toward the throne of its meridian splendor, and by and by the world is flooded with its glory! The heat penetrates every nook and corner of the meadow, the glory crowns every clod, and grass-blade, and flower, and the whole scene seems to be one grand symphony in honor of the resplendent thing up yonder in the zenith!

And now a most extraordinary thing happens. Near by us a few hundred crickets, grasshoppers and other bugs, suddenly raise a great commotion.

They are holding a convention, it seems, to protest against the criminal negligence of their fellow crickets, grasshoppers and other bugs in not formally "recognizing" the SUN.

We recognize it at once as the National Reform League of bugdom. They are "friends of the Sun," just as the Rev. Mr. Foster is the "friend of God," and like the Boston preacher, these crickets, grasshoppers and other bugs are afraid that the great source of light, heat and life will be neglected and suffer!

But the Sun does not ask any recognition at the hands of the insects, nor does God stand in need of any favors from the American Constitution. He can get along fairly well without that Constitution.

And—truth compels me to say it—the Constitution of the United States can get along very well without God.

The CONSTITUTION, I say, not the people. The people of the United States, or at least a great many of them are religious; but the Constitution is purely political.

It is the instrument of government, not the instrument of religion. It is primarily designed to regulate the civil, temporal, earthly affairs of the "people of the United States of America," and was never intended to be used as an arm of the church. It neither affirms God nor denies Him, but strictly confines itself to its legitimate business of maintaining government throughout that part of the earth over which it has jurisdiction.

The Rev. Mr. Foster says: "This is a Christian country, and the Lord Jesus Christ is its king, and we should acknowledge the fact in the constitution."

But Mr. Foster should know that both his premises and his conclusions are wrong. This is NOT a Christian country, nor is the Lord Jesus Christ its king. POLITICALLY SPEAKING, we profess no religion in this country. As Americans, we are neither pagan nor Christian, Catholic nor Protestant, Jew nor Mohammedan. Religion is free, optional, at the discretion of the individual, and not dictated by the government. The majority of the people in the country are indeed Christians, but the Nation, the State, the Government, is religiously neutral.

It is entirely true, that Jesus is, spiritually speaking, the king of a large portion of the American people; but the American Constitution, as a Constitution, knows nothing about Jesus or about any other religionist.

In other words, the Government of the United States is a civil, not an ecclesiastical affair, an earthly democracy, not a heavenly theocracy.

Our fathers concluded to separate the state from the church, and if we are wise we will see to it that the separation is made perpetual.

Under the starry flag of the republic a man may worship as he pleases, or, if he is so inclined, may worship not at all; but Old Glory shall not throw its protecting folds over the fanaticism which would kindle anew the inquisitorial flame.

Spirit Photography.

To the Editor:—My attention has been called to an article in The Progressive Thinker of July 15, under the heading, "How It Is Done," in reply to which I desire to say, neither Mr. Wm. E. Robinson's (whom Mr. Jensen quotes) first or second propositions would be permitted by any sensible person who was having a picture taken under "test" conditions. Secondly, Mr. Robinson's "microscopic picture" business is a fake pure and simple, and evolved wholly from his (Robinson's) prolific(?) brain. As to Mr. Wylie, Mr. Jensen may be right, I do not know; Mr. Jensen should not, like some would-be prominent Spiritualists of Illinois, condemn the whole thing because of his experience with one individual. I have been a medium for spirit photos for nearly twenty years, and would much like to meet Mr. Jensen and convince him that, at least to myself, no transparencies, "microscopic pictures," etc., are used, and thereby renew his failing faith in spirit photography.

DESTINY.

In spite of the intense heat, a large and enthusiastic audience assembled at the hall of the Manchester Central Spiritualist Association, Bow Chambers, 55, Cross-street, Manchester, on Sunday evening, June 25, to hear the Rev. Thos. Grimshaw, of St. Louis,, U. S. A., lecture on "destiny." Mr. E. Pleasance presided.

In his opening remarks the lecturer said that ever since man first learned to think, he had been thinking about himself, wondering and speculating as to whether he was controlled by chance, by fate, or by destiny. Science had declared in unmistakable language that there was no room for chance, that the universe was governed by immutable and unchangeable law. The question was, whether the laws of nature were blind, mechanical, consciousless laws, or whether there was a purpose behind them—

A divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

The speaker was committed to the latter view. Science had presented to the world an almost complete story of the evolution of the planet upon which they lived, and reason would not permit him to believe that the progressive steps from the mineral up to man had been taken haphazard and without purpose. They saw evidences of the existence of a purposeful power in all the phenomena of nature. He was not attempting to defend the anthropomorphic God of orthodox Christianity. A man's conception of the Infinite represented his own particular development, and he (the speaker) contended that the broadest measure of liberty ought to be extended to every man and woman to form his or her own conception of the Deity.

Proceeding, the lecturer contended that the laws of nature were the expression of perfect wisdom, and could not possibly be improved upon. Someone might ask whether he affirmed that storms, earthquakes, disease and death were expressions of infinite wisdom? Yes, he did. The spiritual philosophy enabled them to gather a simple and plain conception of the cause of those strange phenomena. Science declared that a planet, like a flower, and a human being, was subject to the law of growth. The work of building a planet, like the work of evolving a perfect man, took a long time. Therefore whilst they looked upon the universe as an expression of the Divine, still they looked upon different parts of the universe as different channels through which the Almighty was seeking and obtaining a manifestation. It took thousands of years before this planet was capable of bringing forth and sustaining human life. It was not in the very best condition for the sustaining of human life today, but every storm that swept the plains, or caused the waves to beat upon the beach; earthquakes which brought death and destruction, were necessary, in that they were the means whereby Nature was attempting to gain her equilibrium, and the result following in the train of those calamitous phenomena was that the earth was being made a better place for human beings to inhabit.

The evil consequences of storms and earthquakes, said the lecturer, lay not in the phenomena themselves, but in the ignorance of man. Man as a result of his ignorance would go and build for himself a city at the foot of a mountain that was subject to volcanic eruptions, and when Nature attempted to relieve herself and poured forth her streams of lava upon the houses of men they cried aloud against God. Whereas if man had had sense enough to build his house in a more favorable place for human occupation the phenomena of a volcanic eruption would not have been fraught with the evils which followed in its train. With the unfoldment of intelligence man became free to a larger degree. Men once stood in awe as they listened to the rolling thunder and watched the lightning flash, but today they have chained those forces, making the electricity flash convey their messages around the world. They were by no mean the slaves their ancestors were, because they had obtained a larger degree of development.

Continuing his lecture, the speaker exhorted his hearers not to look upon themselves as helpless creatures of heredity and environment. They must change their environment and overcome their hereditary failings; look the world and God in the face and be not afraid of anyone, neither demon in the body or out of it.

In closing, he spoke of war as a crime, and held that it was not compatible with twentieth century intelligence, Neither was it right for one man to have innumerable acres of land and fine mansions here and there; and told his audience that by their acts more than by their words they could do something towards leveling up the masses—not down. They did not want to level down; they wanted every man and woman to have a fair share of this world's goods; to have an opportunity to work, They had a right to the legitimate fruits of their labors, but they had no right to that which they had not earned. That was his gospel, a gospel that made brothers of men.

At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Grimshaw expressed his thanks for the hearty reception he had received while in Manchester, and tendered his best wishes for the success of the Association in the work in which it was engaged.

SYMPATHY.

Sad lot is theirs whom cruel fate
Inflicts with pain, then shuts the gate
To all which gives to life delight
And dooms them to eternal night.
Excluding sunshine, stars and sky;
All that could charm the longing eye;
Shuts out the song of singing bird,
Restrains the sympathetic word
Of those whose presence were a balm
To soothe our sorrow into calm;
And yet 'tis sweet to feel and know
That in affliction (even though Fate shuts the gate) our friends without
In spirit linger round about,
To lift the gloom which overhangs
The couch of pain and mortal pangs.

SPIRITS CONTROL.

Contributor Asserts That Manifestations From Those in the Other World Are Made Known to Each One in Present Life.

For more than half a century [as set forth in the Record Herald] modern Spiritualism has been known among the people of this country. But is it really modern, or is it only this latter day recognition of phenomena that is modern?

Personally, I take the latter view, because, accepting the phenomena as proved, it must also be true that the phenomenal fact must have commenced with the death of the first human body upon earth.

I am positive that the phenomena existed with all forms of life upon earth previous to the appearance of man as a sentient mortal being. But obviously this data is farther back than can be quoted now, and also is not necessary.

My purpose can be met by a record that is accepted by very many and which purports to be of reliable data, though of nearly twenty centuries ago. I will turn to that wonderfully useful book, the bible, wonderfully useful because ever since it was compiled it seems to have suited every man's purpose for a time.

Let us refer to the twelfth chapter of I. Corinthians, commencing at the seventh verse:

"7. But the manifestation of the spirit has been given to every man to profit withal.

"8. For to one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit.

"9. To another faith by the same spirit, to another the gifts of healing by the same spirit.

"10. To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues."

In connection with the phenomena of modern spiritism, I have proved all of the foregoing to be true; therefore I consider myself competent to express myself upon the subject.

Further, there is not a phase of mediumship of to-day but is there set forth in plain and terse English.

What is "the working of miracles" but our physical manifestations of this day, such as raps, table-tippings, moving of solid bodies, independent or slate writing, and—grandest of all—materialization?

What is "discerning of spirits" but our clairvoyance and clairaudience; also impresions, inspirations finally developed into telepathy? By the way, there is where telepathy belongs. It is impressions developed to recognized inspiration, followed by the ability to mentally converse with a spirit—this is telepathy.

Now, mark the statement of the first verse quoted, this manifestation "is given to every man." There is no exclusion, or seclusion. Also, I know this to be true; every human being can be—and I believe is—used by spirits; but not all can be used alike. Physiologically this should be expected, as no two men are alike of all earth's mortal inhabitants.

So it is possible for every one who desires to have his own phenomenal experiences, and from such to know for himself. Knowing himself he will be more charitable in judging of the phenomena through his neighbor.

For this great truth so long plainly recorded let us reverently thank the good God that at last, after all of these centuries, we are beginning to understand in this latter day.

But surely the biblical record is plainly of phenomena. It is not presented as a form of religious worship. These phenomena, from the data quoted, were evidently in those far away days a common thing, and well known.

Then why has there been such an eclipse in this knowledge for so many centuries? Why has every man turned from it for so long a time and taken the bare statements as to his future spirit life made by those who confess that they do not know, when he had the recorded warrant and of such authority, too, to find out and know for himself?

Above all, why have not our authoritative priests and religious teachers held forth upon this, and with proofs? Is it because they have betrayed their trusts? One may well think so. I most certainly do. But that is another story.

PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH.

'Tis easy enough to give advice
And of deeds, tell and teach;
But oh! the hardest part of all
Is to practice what you preach.

You chide the one who was tempted,
And has fallen deep in disgrace.
Would you have done any better,
Had you been put in his place?

In search for faults in others
You forget to look at yourself.
If you do, you'll find plenty rubbish
Stowed away on life's shelf.

When life is as bright as a sunbeam
And things run smooth for you,
You will tell your discouraged brother
'Tis foolish to feel so blue.

You say to a weeping mother,
As they lay her dead to rest,
That it is wrong to grieve so,
For God knows what is best.

But when death calls your loved ones,
Can you sit beside their bier
And smile when your heart is breaking,
With never a sigh or a tear?

How easy it is to mix the dose
For some other person to take,
But if the cup is passed to us,
'Tis then our weak hearts quake.

O, this old world would be brighter,
And wonderful things we might reach
If we had the courage to practice
One half of what we preach.

MATERIALIZATIONS.

A Woman's Experience in This Phase.

To the Editor:—I have seen so much in your valuable paper about frauds, I wish to say a few words concerning them. I have no sympathy with any one who makes up things. If the medium is genuine, the spirits can materialize the clothing as well as the medium could, and far better. I know they do materialize. I am a medium myself and often hear raps on my pillow and loud raps on my door, like some one walking with a cane. They also touch my head and forehead in the daytime, and all over my body. I have seen Wm. Eddy go into the cabinet in front of an audience, with nothing but overalls and a dark-colored shirt on, directly out of the hay field and alone; in a second the curtain dropped, and out came a form of a woman dressed with a black skirt and white waist, walking across the platform. She had long black hair and was recognized by a number of friends and others present.

George Dix always came with a black suit and white bosom. There was no chance for fraud. The people could go in and examine the small 8x10 solid masonry cabinet, and my husband built and plastered it. There was one light of glass with netting over it, and nothing in it. I told Mary Eddy I would like to hear the bells and instruments played on in the light. She said we could try. She set a table in the middle of the front room, raised the two leaves and covered it over with a bed quilt to the floor, and put the instruments under the table. I helped, and we formed a circle around the table, not near enough to touch the table. Bells and all instruments were played upon, and I am sure no hand touched them. It was in broad daylight, and we saw many more things.

I have often seen spirits not yet out of the form. R. V. Allen went thirty miles to Castleton. My husband, his wife and I all went to the Eddys and staid until 11 o'clock at night. The moon shone brightly. We saw a man apparently rise up from the ground and come directly toward us and he passed by. He did not seem to notice us, although so near we could have touched him. All three of us spoke. My husband ran back over the hill but could not see anything of him. I have since seen my daughter and my grandson. One night I had gone to my room and saw a spirit come up the stairs and disappear in the floor. I saw him as plainly as I ever saw him on earth. He had a package in his hand.

MEANING OF SPIRITUALISM.

No Generous Impulse, No Kind Word Spoken, No Good Deed Is Lost, but Its Influence Will Live After the Action in Life's Drama Has Passed Away.

Spiritualism is sympathetic for sisterhood. There is implanted in every human heart the desire for fellowship. We depend in a large measure upon our fellow men. In the struggle for life there is nothing like human sympathy. The touch of a sister hand has in it a magnetism that soothes the tender chords of the human heart.

The strongest factor in the world today to increase the enjoyment of the human race, and to diminish the quantity of human pain and misery, is true Spiritualism. Spiritualism knows no creed, it is the one great feeling of unselfishness exemplified in our own life and extended to our fellow men. The underlying principle of all spirituality is ever present in the Golden Rule. Woman's work in Spiritualism is readily conceded. Who can deny her influence in all social functions? Who can relieve the sick, console the bereaved, or care for the orphan better than woman? And woman, urged by the necessities of the age, has shown that her powers are the same as her brother's, and that like encouragement and fostering care may develope her to an equal degree of usefulness. When the spark of true Spiritualism is once kindled in the soul it will never cease to burn. Beautiful are the admonitions of those whose lives are in accord with spiritual teaching.

Every human struggle, every human sacrifice, every act of justice, of mercy or of love has been woven into the fabric of the past. No generous impulse of the heart, no kind word spoken, no good deed is lost, but its influence will live after the action in life's drama has passed away. Let us remember that all that is noble and beautiful in human nature is secure from the mouldering touch of time. Let us hope that Spiritualism with its charity for all, now harmonizing and blessing communities, will some day bless the whole world. MRS. JOSEPHINE THIELE.

HOW TO EXTERMINATE CRIPPLES.

Some Pointed Suggestions in Criticism of Mrs. Eddy.

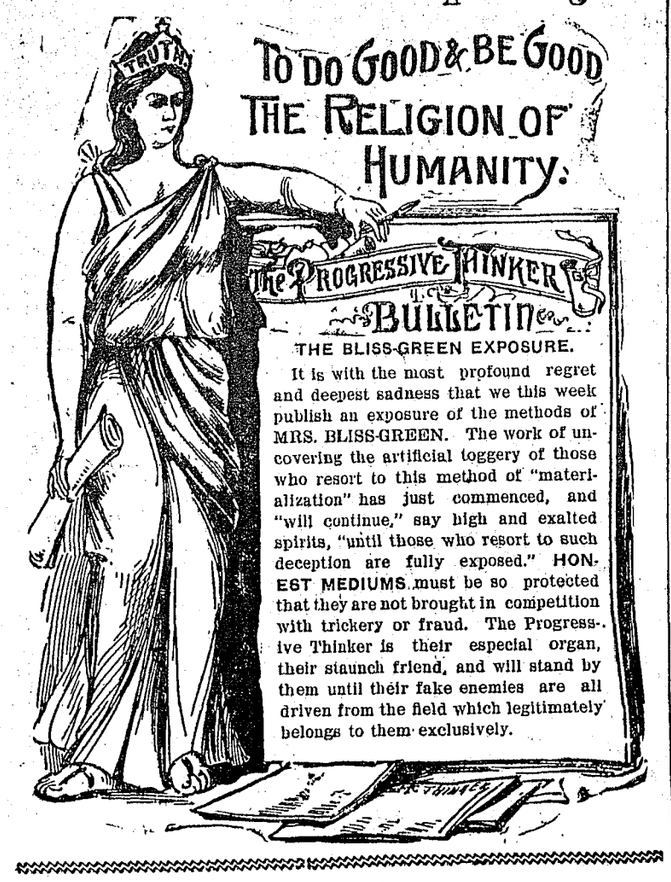
"If the world would abandon the study of disease and crime, and devote itself to the study of wealth, health and love, would criminals, cripples and poverty cease to exist?"

"They would."

Thus saith the Christian Science savior, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, in one of her latest fulminations, according to The Progressive Thinker of June 24, 1905.

The foregoing information is so startling that it seems to me it ought to stagger the most faithful.

Suppose the people of the world should abandon the study of disease and crime, and devote themselves to the study of wealth, health and love, they would still have to travel on street cars and railroads, would they not? If so what would prevent a few thousand of them yearly from being smashed and crippled in collisions and other accidents?



Would not tornadoes and earthquakes cripple hundreds each year as they now do? Would not men be caved on in excavations, blown up in explosions of powder and gases? Would they not fall from windows, stagings and precipices? Would not horses run away with them and the automobile get in its crippling work as of yore, and so on to the end of the chapter? If not, why not?

It strikes me that a few more such utterances will entitle Mrs. Eddy to a commission "de lunatico inquirendo."

THE BLISS-GREEN EXPOSURE.

It is with the most profound regret and deepest sadness that we this week publish an exposure of the methods of MRS. BLISS-GREEN. The work of uncovering the artificial toggery of those who resort to this method of "materialization" has just commenced, and "will continue," say high and exalted spirits, "until those who resort to such deception are fully exposed." HONEST MEDIUMS must be so protected that they are not brought in competition with trickery or fraud. The Progressive Thinker is their especial organ, their staunch friend, and will stand by them until their fake enemies are all driven from the field which legitimately belongs to them exclusively.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

The Bliss-Green Exposure.

Another Object Lesson for Spiritualists to Calmly Consider.

(Published at the Earnest Request of Prominent Spiritualists and Mediums of Chicago.)

Although we have a large amount of manuscript on hand, from various parties, touching on the exposure of Mr. Winans at Hot Springs, Ark., we have discontinued the discussion in his particular case, it having received a most thorough ventilation, and little new can be said. And now comes the alleged exposure of Mrs. Bliss-Green at No. 523 Belmont Ave., on the evening of June 27. We publish this exposure as another object lesson for Spiritualists everywhere.

Is it true, as some assert, that all mediums use artificial toggery?

Is it possible that during these long years of Spiritual expansion and enlightenment, materializing mediums have used artificial draperies of various kinds to carry on their methods of deception?

Every medium—no exception—thus far exposed, has had on artificial toggery, made by material hands and so deftly manipulated and concealed that those in attendance at the circle thought they were direct from the hands of the spirit chemist?

If this is true, if this practice is along the line of strict honesty, then the decent Spiritualists want to know it.

There is a place in this city that does a thriving business in selling various kinds of garbs and dresses for materializing purposes, and in a dim light they shine forth most beautifully with their phosphorescent paint, making an ugly person appear like an Angel of Love, so impressive is the phosphorescent glow emanating from the gross fabrics.

Dr. Warne on the Exposure of Mrs. Bliss-Green.

"Truth Will Be Uppermost One Time or Another Like Cork, Though Kept Down in the Water."

Three weeks have passed since the Chicago Inter Ocean published an expose of a materializing seance given by Mrs. C. Bliss-Green in this city. Many times have Spiritualists in the metropolis asked one another how much of truth is there to the charge, after the reportorial love for sensationalism has been thoroughly squeezed out of it.

The victims of the imposition forwarded the president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association the appended statement of the affair. He at once forwarded Mrs. Green a full copy of their statement and said to her: "You are invited to send your version of the Belmont avenue seance so that both sides may be considered at the same time by the public. I am told The Progressive Thinker refused to print this matter until your side was at hand. Kindly give this prompt attention."

Although known to be in Chicago when the request reached her, she has not chosen to make one word of response. After Brother Norsted's communication was received I had the opportunity of talking with some of his associates of that eventful evening and was told of minutiae in the happenings there which were omitted from the formal document, such as: After seizure of the medium and securing light, a lady sitting next to the cabinet rose and exhibited Mrs. Green's skirt and petticoat, which her hand found pinned to the inside of the curtain while the medium was outside of the cabinet; there were pockets at the bottom of her dress skirt such as custom house officers are trained to watch for. Mrs. Green was deposited suddenly in the lap of Mrs. Schwahn, at whose home the seance was held, to that lady's surprise and great grief; Mr. Schwahn coming in answer to his wife's excited call suddenly transformed belligerent Mr. Green into a peaceful wall flower; before going into the cabinet Mrs. Green kept a camp chair in front of her all of the time, presumably to keep attendants from noting her skirt pockets; on Friday following this Tuesday night seance, Mr. Green called on Mrs. Schwahn and handed her nine dollars taken in at the seance held there a fortnight before.

The standing, character and intelligence of those at the seance is unimpeachable. It is only the stock trick when caught to howl about the low plane of development of those whose patronage was eagerly welcomed and try to reflect upon the "ignorant Dutch," when at the close of the first seance in the same home, Mrs. Green was effusive in expressing her admiration for the Germans.

The president of the Ill. S. S. A. has several times referred inquirers for materialization to Mrs. Bliss-Green, asking that his name be not given so as to save the visitors from suspicion, but assuring them that medium's work ranked as the most reliable in this city. Very recently a gentleman expecting to visit Chicago wrote him from Arkansas for address of a genuine materializing medium. That officer does not know of one such in this great city who is peddling that phase for dollars. The phase is so rare it cannot be made a merchantable commodity. Look for the genuine of it only in family seances, or in circles of harmonious and trusted friends.

Where in the United States is there a materializing medium who works under the same conditions Prof. Wm. Crookes was given by the mediums who satisfied him there was a genuine materialization?

"Continuity or Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. H. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

A STATEMENT:

In reference to the Exposure of Mrs. Bliss-Green of Chicago, Illustrating Bogus Spirit Phenomena—Respectfully submitted to the National Spiritualist Association, H. D. Barrett, President, and also to the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, Dr. G. B. Warne, President, to the Spiritualistic Press, and to Honest Spiritualists Everywhere who are Seeking the Truth.

Spiritualism during its long and eventful career has had much to contend with. A few years after the tiny raps at Hydesville, N. Y., commenced, the phenomena assumed sufficient importance to bring to the front those who could closely imitate or simulate the same, and thus make money by presenting the spurious as the genuine result of spirit influence and power. Bogus materializations, the exchange of tests, and otherwise deceiving the public became quite a prominent factor in our ranks. At camp-meetings, at promiscuous gatherings and other places, imitation of the genuine spiritual phenomena became a merchantable commodity, and so disgusted did many Spiritualists become that it resulted in the publication of a pamphlet known as the "Vampires of Onset," the details of which are enough to sicken any Spiritualist who has not got a cast-iron stomach or a hardened conscience.

Among the many materializing mediums who have figured prominently and successfully before the public, there stands out in bold relief Mrs. Bliss-Green. The manifestations that have occurred in her presence, supposed to be genuine, have attracted attention in nearly every large city in the country. But there have been many who have regarded her spirit manifestations as wholly of earthly origin, and in no sense spiritual.

The writer of this was an innocent believer at first in her genuineness, and attended her seances with the expectation of seeing someone from the spirit side of life whom he could recognize as a dear relative or friend. A circle was organized to convene at No. 523 Belmont avenue, on June 13. That evening everything went off very smoothly, and the seance was closed without any trouble whatever having arisen. I afterwards learned, however, there were grave doubts in the minds of some of those in attendance, in regard to the genuineness of the phenomena. On this occasion, however, she departed with ten dollars as a reward for what she presented as genuine phenomena, but which in reality was the result of GROSS DECEPTION ON HER PART, as the sequel will prove. But dissatisfaction on the part of those in attendance seemed to grow, and finally assumed such prominence that we arranged for another seance to be held at the same place, resolving to thoroughly test the spirits, and determine without a shadow of doubt as to whether they are the genuine article or spurious.

Again at 8:30 o'clock we entered the seance room and Mrs. Green went into the cabinet without anything in her hands, and no artificial paraphernalia in sight with which to carry on any deception. Soon strange voices were heard talking in the cabinet, preparatory, apparently, to bringing out the spirit forms. The medium in plain words stated that the conditions this evening WERE EXCEPTIONALLY FINE—WHEN, IN FACT, THERE WAS A SECRET INTENT ON THE PART OF SOME TO FULLY EXPOSE THE GROSS DECEPTIVE NATURE OF THE SPIRIT MATERIALIZATIONS, THUS SHOWING THAT THE "SPIRIT"—VERY HUMAN—OF COURSE DID NOT KNOW WHAT WAS GOING ON IN THE MINDS OF THOSE PRESENT. A battery of four was formed in front of the cabinet for the purpose of giving strength to the forms. What a contemptible farce this was, as the result of the seance fully shows. Several Indian spirits appeared one after another, and they seemed willing to smoke the pipe of peace with all those in attendance. Then appeared a tall, beautiful form of Miss. Brooks; she came in a shining white robe, with an electric light in her bosom. She shook hands with several whom she thought most worthy of her heavenly blessings; she even gave her kisses freely away from her "rosy" lips; but those who had hold of her warm hand had their suspicions aroused that all was not as it should be. This form gave way and Billy, the cabinet guide, then came. This form, it is said, has remained the same for several years. After passing some funny remarks, he vanished from view. Then there was singing, followed by an elderly woman emerging from the cabinet, and standing between the curtains. I happened to be sitting very close to the cabinet, and I said, "It looks as if it might be my mother." She beckoned me in come to her in the opening of the cabinet. And here was the chance of my long years of prayers to see my mother appear before me in her beautiful spirit form.

I afterwards realized that the form looked as if it recently had GOTTEN OUT OF BED TO GREET ME, so extremely thin was her dress, and as I bent to receive her parental blessing, I could not resist putting both my arms around "my mother's" waist, and force her out among the visitors. Of course, then there was great excitement. One lady tried to turn on the gas, but it went out. A gentleman present tried to strike a match, but it was put out of his hands. Now could be heard the cry of my supposed-to-be-mother, "Let me go!" Mr. Green shouted, "For God's sake, be human." "She is my wife." "Let her go back into the cabinet!" Then a light came, and, being a bachelor, I had good reason to blush. THERE IN OUR MIDST WAS STANDING—NOT THE HOLY FORM OF MY DEAR MOTHER, BUT MRS. BLISS-GREEN DRESSED IN A MANNER ONLY SUITABLE FOR LADIES TO LOOK AT, WITHOUT A WAIST OR SKIRT ON, WITH A WIG ON HER HEAD, PRESENTING A MOST SORROWFUL PICTURE OF TWENTY-NINE YEARS OF WORK, A PITIABLE, HEARTLESS, CRUEL DECEPTION PRACTICED ON THOSE SEEKING TO HAVE AN INTERVIEW WITH THEIR SPIRIT FRIENDS.

The exposure was complete. There Mrs. Green stood as described, presenting a spectacle bad enough to make the angels weep at the deception practiced on us who were so honestly, so sincerely seeking the truth, and receiving nothing but deception! What a sad picture! What deplorable state of affairs in the ranks of Spiritualism.

But Mrs. Green was allowed to go back into the cabinet to escape the glare of the light, and readjust her clothing. A lady who took her chair during the exposure will testify that HER SKIRT WAS WELL STUFFED WITH VARIOUS ARTICLES ALL READY FOR USE IN THE MATERIALIZING CIRCLE. I carried away with me three yards of thin cloth which she had used in "making up" my mother. She was caught fair and square in her deception—a gross deception!

There seemed to be considerable amount of white face powder used by her which was scattered about the room, on our clothes, the carpet and curtains. It was evidently used to give a ghostly appearance to the "materialized" forms.

A demand was made for the return of the money given at the previous seance. It was returned by Mr. Green. Other demands, it is said, will be made for money at other seances where the same methods of deception were no doubt practiced.

A VENERABLE POET.

Gerald Massey and the Christian Myth.

In a recent article in the Daily News by Mr. W. B. Hodgson was enshrined a conversation with the veteran poet and Egyptologist. Those who have read Massey's "Beginnings" will well understand the enthusiasm of the erstwhile poet—who has written no poetry for thirty years.

"Here are the hieroglyphics,' said the old poet to the interviewer. "I have learned to read them in thirty years?" And he produced the Book of the Dead, beautifully printed in colors. And there was the serpent and the tree of life, Eve plucking the apple for Adam, Moses coming out of the bulrushes—all the old bible stories, painted on stone ages before Moses was born.

To restore religion to its place as a myth, or allegory, is Mr. Massey's consuming passion. He has even, through a friend, approached the Pope, begging his Holiness to promulgate the doctrine that Christianity is a myth!

"I have the ambition," said Mr. Massey, "that in death my grave may be found cut right across that pathway of error and delusion first trodden by the misinterpreters of mythology, who falsely founded the Christian creeds. I mean to pile the barrier of my grave-mound high as ever I can with my books, sold or unsold, and shall be glad of every stone flung at it by the enemy, after I am gone, to pile it still higher."

And that is why Mr. Massey has not written poetry for thirty years! He has gone over to the Egyptologists.

Gerald Massey has published, says the Freethinker, four big volumes on the Egyptian origin of Christianity, and "now is preparing one big book that has taken twelve years to write, in which he hopes finally to explain his views." A brave work for an old man of seventy-seven, and this brave old man is a Spiritualist.—The Two Worlds, London, Eng.

THE HUSHED HOUSE.

I who went at nightfall,
Came again at dawn;
On Love's door again I knocked—
Love was gone.

He who oft had bade me in
Now would bid no more;
Silence sat within his house,
Barred its door.

When the slow door opened wide
Through it I could see
How the emptiness within Stared at me.

Through the dreary chambers
Long I sought and sighed,
But no answering footstep came;
Night replied.

Then at last I entered
Dim a darkened room;
There a taper glimmered gray
In the gloom.

And I saw one lying
Crowned with helichrys;
Never saw I face as fair
As was his.

Like a wintry lily
Was his brow in hue;
And his cheeks were each a rose
Wintry too.

Then my soul remembered
All that made us part,
And what I had laughed at once
Broke my heart.

What Is Materialism?

A Comprehensive and Scientific Analysis of the Same, by Prof. B. F. Underwood.

Materialism is a word to which so many definitions are given and to which such various meanings are attached that one can never feel quite certain when it is spoken which of its several connotations the speaker has in mind until the speaker distinctly states the ideas he associates with it.

A popular conception of materialism is that it is simply disbelief in God and the immortality of the soul. Yet many thinkers who are not materialists, whose philosophy indeed is popularly believed to be, and in some respects certainly is, the antithesis of materialism, accept neither of the doctrines named; while, on the other hand, many who are or have been classed among materialists accept both. John Locke thought it not unreasonable to hold that God has endowed matter with the capacity to feel and think, and he was and is now sometimes called a materialist. Priestly, with the same belief, avowed himself a materialist. The same is true of Thomas Jefferson.

The author of the article on materialism in Johnson's Cyclopedia says that "nearly every materialistic school has had its Christian advocates endeavoring to reconcile it with the spiritual doctrines of the Holy Scriptures." As Mr. John Fiske says, "It might forcibly be argued that denial of personal immortality has by no means been proved to be an inevitable corollary from the assertion of materialism although it may be freely admitted to be a probable corollary." Many of the adherents, including leading representatives, of modern Spiritualism, declare that "spirit is refined matter," and claim that they are true materialists, in support of which claim they adduce the testimony of spirits who have left the form and return to their friends by "materializations."

Strauss, in The Old Faith and The New, goes so far as to say that the difference between materialism and idealism is simply one of terminology, or, to use his own language, is a "mere quarrel about words"; for both, in comparison with the dualistic conception of a creator and a created universe of body and soul, are, he says, monistic systems. One constructs the universe from atoms and atomic forces, the other from ideas and idealistic forces. Each of these modes of conception leads to the other. both agree in ascribing all the functions of our being to one and the same cause. In Germany, idealism has not been less atheistic than materialism; and it is not strange, therefore, that Strauss declares that both systems "should reserve their weapons for that other veritable and still formidable foe, dualism, while treating eachother with the respect or, at least, the politeness of allies."

But Prof. Haeckel, who is commonly regarded as one of the most materialistic, as he is certainly one of the ablest of living naturalists, objects to materialism as well as to Spiritualism, because he thinks they have dualistic implications. In his "Evolution of Man," he says: "The real materialistic philosophy asserts that the vital phenomena of motion, are effects or products of matter. The other opposite extreme, spiritualistic philosophy, asserts, on the contrary, that matter is the product of motive force, and that all material forms are produced by free forces, entirely independent of matter itself. Thus, according to the materialistic conception of the universe, matter or substance precedes motion, or active force. According to the spiritualistic conception of the universe, on the contrary, active force, or motion, precedes matter. Both views are dualistic, and we hold them both equally false. It is only necessary to reflect on this for a time from a strictly scientific standpoint, to find that, on a close examination, it is impossible to clearly represent the one without the other."

Prof. Huxley claims that "the properties of protoplasm result from the nature and disposition of its molecule," as the properties of water result from the nature and disposition of its component molecules; that all life is probably the result of "the molecular forces of the protoplasm which displays it;" and that thought is "the expression of molecular changes in that matter of life which is the source of our other vital phenomena." Further, he says, "any one who is acquainted with the history of science will admit that its progress in all ages meant, and now more than ever means, the extension of the province of what we call matter and causation and the concomitant gradual banishment from all regions of human thought of what we call spirit and spontaneity." This seems to be as strongly materialistic language as can be used, and the views advanced cannot be regarded from the idealistic or spiritualistic standpoint otherwise than as the distinctive teachings of materialism; yet Prof. Huxley is, according to his own declarations, not a materialist, but an idealist.

Prof. Tyndall, in his celebrated Belfast address, referred to the original matter of the world as probably containing the promise and potency of every form or quality of life; yet his statements that matter is essentially transcendental in its nature, and that there is no conceivable passage from molecular motion to consciousness, are often quoted to show that he is not a materialist, as he certainly is not, according to the current conceptions and definitions of materialism,—for instance, those of Mr. John Fiske, who says that, before one can be "correctly charged with materialism," he should hold that physical phenomena, such as love and hate, can be interpreted in terms of matter and motion, and who further defines materialism in a way which makes it reject or ignore the principle of relativity, without which certainly no philosophy can claim attention to-day among thinkers.

On the other hand, the author of "A Candid Examination of Theism," G. J. Romanes, affirms that Mr. Spencer's philosophy, which its author declares is neither materialistic nor spiritualistic, leaves "the essential feature of materialism untouched; viz, that what we know as mind is dependent (whether by way of causality or not, is immaterial) on highly complex forms of what we know as matter in association with peculiar distributions of what we know as force."

Mr. E. D. Fawcett, in a philosophical address, after remarking that idealism "by no means necessarily involves the idea of individual immortality," that many Hegelians regard individuals as merely vanishing points in the realization of Spirit.—or according to the revised doctrine of that which becomes spirit—says: "Indeed, while materialism is perfectly compatible with the conception of a future life, idealism is, as often, not. Modern Spiritualism, which in many ways recalls the double materialism of the savage, is a curious illustration of the prevalence of the former combination. Of course, the leaders of Spiritualism, such as "M. A. (Oxon)," C. C. Massey and others would stoutly refuse to identify consciousness as such with an objective organism, physical or ethereal (astral); but the common or garrulous Spiritualist thinks he has quite solved the philosophical problem when confronted with some congenial ghost. But fortunately the ghost exhibits an organism like our own, occupying space, being visible, often tangible, and hence manifesting the two fundamental attributes of matter. The problem is not even touched. Were the whole ether world unveiled, it would be merely one more plane of organism, and objective surroundings for philosophy to account for. And you may account for this new plane on materialist or idealist lines—just as you please. D'Assier, a thorough-going materialist, fully admitted the reality of this ethereal world and its inhabitants. Just because he regards matter as the sole metaphysical root of both worlds—the physical and the ethereal alike—he remains a materialist. Now, although the D'Assier class of ontological materialists is not formidable among Spiritualists, that of the psychological materialists who regard soul and the 'spiritual' (?) body as convertible terms is undoubtedly so."

These extracts and references are sufficient to indicate that even writers of acknowledged ability use the word materialism to describe different views, and that it is too uncertain in its meaning to be of value in philosophical discussion. But, worse still, the word is popularly confounded with what, by a perversion of language, is sometimes called "practical materialism."

Materialism, as a system of thought, as taught by Epikuros or by the Roman Lucretius, who, amid the confusion and turbulence of civil war, we are told, "sought some stay for his inner life, and found it in the philosophy of Epikuros,"—or as taught by modern materialists, is confined to a comparatively small proportion of the people, and is generally a subject of interest only to thoughtful and serious minds. For the worshipers of fashion, for mere pleasure-seekers, for political demagogues, for those whose energies are wholly employed in the scramble for wealth, it can have generally no attraction. Yet the views and conduct of these classes are commonly referred to by the clergy as the materialism of the times.

"Such epithets as "materialism'; and 'atheism,'" says Mr. Fiske, "being extremely unpopular, have long been made to do heavy duty in lieu of argument. In this sort of barbaric warfare, the term 'materialism' is especially convenient by reason of a treacherous ambiguity in its connotations. Certain abstract theorems of metaphysics are correctly described as constituting materialism, and the persons who assert them are correctly called materialists. On the other hand, those persons are popularly called materialists who allow their actions to be guided by the desires of the moment, without reference to any such rule of right living as is termed 'a high ideal of life.' Persons who worship nothing but worldly success, who care for nothing but wealth and fashionable display or personal celebrity or sensual gratification, are thus loosely called materialists. The term can therefore easily be made to serve as a poisoned weapon; and there are theologians who do not scruple to use it as such against the upholders of philosophic opinions which they do not like, but can not refute. A most flagrant instance was recently afforded by a lecturer on positivism, who, after insinuating that pretty much the whole body of contemporary scientific philosophers are positivists and that positivists are but little better than materialists, proceeded to inform his audience that materialists are men who lead licentious lives. It would be hard to find words strong enough to characterize the villainy of such misrepresentations as this, could we fairly suppose them to be deliberately intended. They would imply extreme moral turpitude, were it not that they are so obviously the product of extreme slovenliness of thinking joined with culpable carelessness of assertion."

Lange, the learned and impartial author of the "History of Materialism," says "that the sober earnest which marks the great materialistic systems of antiquity is perhaps more suited than an enthusiastic idealism, which only too easily results in its own bewilderment, to keep the soul clear of all that is low and vulgar, and to lend it a lasting effort after worthy objects" (p. 47), and that "in the centuries when the abominations of a Nero, a Caligula, or even of a Heliogabalus, polluted the globe, no philosophy was more neglected, none was more foreign to the spirit of the time, than that of all which demanded the coldest blood, the calmest contemplation, the most sober and purely prosaic inquiry, the philosophy of Democritus and Epicurus." "The age of Pericles was the blossoming time of the materialistic and sensational philosophy of antiquity; its fruits ripened in the time of Alexandrian learning, in the two centuries before Christ."

While I have long since ceased to believe in "philosophical materialism," I think that these are facts worthy the candid consideration of those who use the word "materialism" as a term of abuse rather than in a descriptive sense. At the same time, the wisdom of employing in philosophical discussion a word which is associated with theories and conceptions widely different, and which, therefore, lacks precise and definite meaning, may fairly be questioned. The loose way it is now used, even by some of our best writers, is certainly without excuse.

SAVED AS BY FIRE.

How we complain of labor, loss and pain;
We think at times our lives a snarl of woe,
And wonder why we have to undergo
Such sharp and trying worriment and strain?
Why not a mind-at peace with all maintain?
Why not the calm of secret wisdom show,
And where the wild weeds are let roses grow,
And so of our experience have gain?
No better hap can happen to our life,
Than this and that which come from what we are,
And courage is the gift of such fierce strife,
And patience if we hinder not or mar;
The rounding out of things is His high plan,
And what we do should make a noble man!

A Masterly Reply to Rev. Dr. Field.

A Brilliant Defense of Spiritualism, by Dr. H. V. Sweringen, of Ft. Wayne, Ind.

[So many requests having been made for copies of Dr. Sweringen's reply to the Rev. Dr. Field's pulpit attack upon Spiritualism we here reproduce it, revised and enlarged.—Editor]

To the Editor:—No society or sect can successfully claim a monopoly of truth, religious or secular. That there are two or more sides to religious as to all other questions is made evident by the number of separate and distinct denominations in Christendom to-day.

In accordance with his previous announcement that he would deliver a series of sermons on the various "isms" of the day, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Field, of the First Baptist Church of Fort Wayne, has thus far preached upon "Dowieism," "Mormonism," and "Spiritualism." How clean a sweep he proposes to make of the "isms," the writer hereof is not in a position to determine. Whether the next "ism" he will mercilessly attack will be "Calvinism," "Lutheranism," "Catholicism," or "Presbyterianism," I am unable to decide.

Spiritualism has much in common with all religious "isms," for they all embrace much that is spiritual, beautiful and true. But it also comprises not a little that is emphatically and diametrically opposed to them, and it is for this reason that the Rev. Dr. Field has felt it incumbent upon himself to attack it from his pulpit.

For example, Spiritualism teaches that, "There can be no death in any such sense as the churches have taught. Death as change of expression, as transition to a higher plane of being, as a birth into a more refined and spiritual world, undoubtedly exists. But death as a penalty for Adam's transgression, death as an end of being, death as an end of living, death as the close of man's probation, as a point which fixes man's eternal destiny, is a fossilized conception of an ignorant and barbarous past which our age must reject, as it does a thousand other absurdities believed by primeval man. "Death is not the end of life, but an event in life." The exhortation of Seneca and the exhortation of the theology of to-day, to think on the end of life, is reasonable only in the sense that the end of earthly life is the beginning of a higher and fuller and more spiritual life hereafter.

"There can be no final condition to an eternally progressive being like man. As well may we talk of the final condition of one of the great luminaries of heaven, as it speeds through illimitable space! The law of progress, which is co-extensive with the universe and co-eval with time, renders the idea of the orthodox heaven and hell impossible and absurd."

Modern Spiritualism is founded on certain present day revelations or certain phenomena. The genuineness of these phenomena the orthodox church persistently denied as long as it could do so consistently. Finally, being obliged to admit the fact that these were bona fide phenomena, it sought to dispose of them at once by attributing them to the Devil. But this disposition of them was soon discovered to be very unsatisfactory. An appeal was then made to scientists who were yet loyal, orthodox Christians, to explain the phenomena of Spiritualism upon any other hypothesis than that of the return of the spirits of the dead. Anything to down Spiritualism, the hated thing.

The result of this appeal was that there soon appeared a book entitled "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," by Prof. T. J. Hudson. That this book was written in the interest of the orthodox church seems evident to the undersigned, because so many of his orthodox friends have inquired of him whether or not he had read it.

Let me here state once for all, that I have read the book of Mr. Hudson, in which he endeavors to explain the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism by his dual theory of subjective and objective mind. But this theory does not explain my experiences, nor those of Spiritualists generally, in the phenomena of Spiritualism. While Mr. Hudson has failed among Spiritualists in establishing his explanation of their phenomena, he has succeeded admirably in aiding them to establish the fact of their occurrence, for which we are all very grateful to Mr. Hudson, and through him, to the orthodox church. Will the reader please observe what this scientific writer who was not a Spiritualist has to say on page 206 of his book, on the subject of Spiritualistic phenomena? He thus writes:

"I will not waste time, however, by attempting to prove by experiments of my own or of others, that such phenomena do occur. It is too late for that. The facts are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time. The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him. But I shall attempt to explain their origin on other grounds than the supposition that they are caused by the spirits of the dead. In other words, I admit the alleged phenomena, but deny the alleged cause."

It will thus be observed that the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, whatever may be their explanation, are established. Now, what are we going to do with them? What is their relation to, and bearing upon science and theology? Do they answer in the affirmative Job's question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" If so, then why should the orthodox church antagonize and reject them, unless it is because it is fearful that, along with, or close following such phenomenal proof of a future life, there are other truths or revelations which may seriously compromise some of its dogmas. If I may judge from the prevalence of materialism, agnosticism, infidelity, heresy, skepticism and unbelief both in the pulpit and pew of the orthodox church, it is time it was struck by some such lightning as a genuine Spiritualistic phenomenon, no matter in what part of its dogmatic anatomy it strikes. It will require some such profound shock to cause a reaction sufficient to awaken it to a realizing sense of the progress in psychic science going on all around it and, quietly, within it.

Since the fact of the prevalence of genuine Spiritualistic phenomena can no longer be denied, it is incumbent upon us to investigate its significance. What does it mean? It surely means something. If it is not investigated in the church, it is bound to be, outside of it. Indeed, it is now being investigated by all classes of people whether in the church or out of it. It is unnecessary to mention even a few of the illustrious names of those who are at present engaged in its examination. There is no name more revered in Rev. Dr. Field's church than that of its lamented, famous missionary, Adoniram Judson, whose daughter, Miss Abby, was a most pronounced Spiritualist, and the authoress of several important books on the subject of Spiritualism:—a fact not generally known among Baptists. Her brother, the Rev. Edward Judson, now occupies the chair of Homiletics in the Chicago University. Miss Judson, at the sacrifice of many old-time personal friendships, preferred to be true to her own convictions, with the despised minority, rather than to be false to them, with the popular majority.

It is remarkable what changes will take place in the thoughts and opinions of men. One of the greatest evangelists of the orthodox church a few years ago, was the Rev. B. Fay Mills. He was patted on the back by all of the churches. But they have suddenly stopped patting him, for he has cut entirely loose from all their dogmas, insisting that there is but one religion, and that this one is comprised in love to God and the practice of the Golden Rule in our dealings with our fellow men. One of his utterances in a recent meeting (for he still holds meetings), rather points toward a belief in Spiritualism. He says: "It is not inconsistent with what we know of the past, it is not inconsistent with the great revelation of God, to believe that the world of spirit is about to be more fully revealed unto men."

It was Martineau, I believe, who said: "We do not believe in immortality because we have proved it, but we forever try to prove it because we believe it." I cannot quite fully indorse this statement. We would naturally suppose that our orthodox church people believe in immortality, but they seem to make no effort to prove it. "Prove all things" except a future life, is the interpretation which the orthodox church seems to place upon Paul's injunction. The church certainly cannot prove a future existence by such scriptural quotations as:

"For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

"Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in anything that is done under the sun.

"Whatsoever that thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest.

"For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope; for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

As the cloud is consumed and van? isheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.

"He fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not. For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.

"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?

"So man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."

These and many similar passages of scripture can be cited in support of the opinion that death is not only an eternal sleep but total annihilation. No wonder that Bishop Foster of the M. E. Church, confessed that he did not know that death did not end all, or that the great majority of orthodox preachers and their parishioners are skeptical about a future life.

"Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return," is reluctantly accepted by them as the conclusion of the whole matter. The inability of the pulpit to furnish any present day evidence of a future existence has played sad havoc with the pew. The pulpit has become a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal upon the subject of a future life. Having no absolute, satisfactory present-day evidence thereof, it can impart none to the pew.

Of course, it could cite the woman of Endor incident, the materialization of Moses and Elias, the law of Moses prohibiting conversation with the dead (thus indicating the possibility of so doing), Paul's recognition of various spiritual gifts, Job's declaration that: "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God," and many other similar scriptural selections, but such citations on the part of the pulpit would never do, because they prove the truth of the hated thing Modern Spiritualism.

The religion of the orthodox church to-day seems to be a religion of faith and hope only. This fact explains the lack of interest and enthusiasm in the church of the present. On the other hand, those who are to-day attempting scientifically to prove a future life, and have proved it to their satisfaction, are those who were formerly denominated materialists, agnostics, heretics and infidels, and who engaged in the investigation of Spiritualism for the sole purpose of exposing it as a humbug, and thereby sustaining their preconceived opinions.

I am well aware that the argument of the church is: "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." But the fact is the church of the present day will not believe without seeing. "Seeing is believing." I claim this blessing, however, most emphatically, in various and numerous instances. Indeed, I look upon Paul's definition of faith as being one also of knowledge. "Faith" says Paul, "the evidence of things not seen." Now, if we acquire "knowledge" from "evidence," then I know that I have been in communication with deceased friends, although unseen, for the "evidence" of their presence as impressed upon my mind and reason through the sense of hearing alone, is simply indisputable.

This evidence" to a certain extent, is not infrequently experienced among orthodox preachers, and occasionally crops out irresistibly, in their pulpits.

The Rev. S. A. Northrup, one of Rev. Dr. Field's predecessors, affirmed that he often felt the presence of his deceased mother with him in the pulpit.

The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott affirms: "I am scarcely less certain that for some years after my mother's death I was influenced by her spiritual presence, than I am that I have of late years been influenced by persons corporeally present. But if one serenely and scornfully skeptical, asks me for a demonstration of my faith, I should only answer him that the "evidence" is my own experience, and that I neither can share it with him nor desire to do so."

The Rev. Dr. Heber Newton (Episcopalian) in a sermon on Spiritualism, spoke as follows:

"It is a fact concerning Spiritualism that through it the conviction of the life to come is taking a new hold of man's mind and heart. Myriads of men are to-day rejoicing in a firm and positive conviction of the reality of the life to come, who but for this movement would have been left in the doubt which overshadows vast masses of men to-day (and there are numbered among those masses many, many preachers, to my certain knowledge.—H. V. S.). This faith has become so vital that it renews the early Christian joy in the presence of death. Instead of impugning the sources of this renewed faith, let orthodoxy make more real to those who abide within its folds, this ancient and fundamental and vital faith of men."

The Rev. Dr. Sunderland (Presbyterian), in a sermon, spoke as follows: "I do not believe, and cannot believe, that it would be impossible for my sainted parents to send a thrill of influence to help me in the hour of distress, or in the time of sorrow. Nor do I think that a belief in their ability or disposition to do so is out of harmony with the teachings of God's word. The whole tenor of scripture goes to show that the departed spirits of the redeemed are unbound and unfettered * * * We know little of the possibilities of a spirit free from the limitations of the flesh."

The Rev. Dr. John Henry Barrows, in an address at the opening of the World's Parliament of Religions, said: "It seems to me that the spirits of just and good men hover over this assembly. I believe the spirits of Paul, of Buddha, of Socrates, of Jeremy Taylor, of John Milton, of Roger Williams and Lessing, of Tennyson, Whittier and Phillips Brooks, are here. I believe that the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, who sought for a church founded on love to God and man, is here."

The Rev. Dr. Isaac K. Funk, in his recent book, "The Widow's Mite," thus writes: "The church also must have a care. There is real danger lest in its zeal to get rid of spirit communications it gets rid of the Bible itself. If the power to communicate between this and the spirit world be a fact, the remedy is not to deny it, but to understand just what it is and what are its laws, and to bring it under control. * * Nineteen hundred years' removal from the spirit phenomena of the Bible and the men who witnessed them and vouched for their occurrence is imposing a greater and greater strain upon faith. Apply the claims of Spiritualists to the facts in the Bible hardest to believe—hardest for scientists to believe—the facts of the birth and resurrection of Jesus. If certain phenomena which I have not been able to explain by any hypothesis of fraud or coincidence, stand the fuller tests of scientic investigation, it will become scientifically easy to believe that a supreme spirit, as was Jesus, came down into the flesh, as did He, and was able to lay down His life and to take it up again."

More recently, on being interviewed regarding his atttitude toward spiritual phenomena, he said: "Twenty years ago people would have laughed at the idea of wireless telegraphy. They probably would have tried to put Marconi in a lunatic asylum for saying that he would in time be able to send wireless messages across the ocean. But now the wireless telegraphy is being used commercially on many ocean liners and coastwise vessels. Now a certain set of thinkers believe that it is possible for one person to transmit thought to another without any mechanical instruments whatever. If there is any truth in that contention it is the duty of scientists to investigate and ascertain the laws of operation so that this strange power can be fully understood and utilized. If thoughts can be transmitted from one living person to another in this world (and there seems to be pretty strong evidence that it can), why not from the spirit world back to us? That is the question. I think any person who shows possession of some of this strange power should be encouraged."

But my space is limited, and I must forbear adding any more of the many utterances from the pulpit of every denomination, which show that the "evidence" of a future life, upon which the orthodox church relies, is, essentially, Spiritualistic in character. Although not recognized, Spiritualism constitutes all the vitality there is in the church to-day; it is the warp and woof of the whole Christian fabric, however much it may be repudiated by Christendom. I do not wish to pose as a censor of the church, but it is my opinion that if it would give this "evidence" the attention its importance demands, there would be fewer materialists, agnostics, infidels and heretics within it, less selfishness in the world, and such men as Rockefeller would cease struggling to own it.

But when the church confesses, as Bishop Foster has done, that it does not know that death does not end all, it is time that it was making some effort at least, to add to its faith knowledge, no matter to how much contempt and ridicule such an effort may be subjected. If spirit manifestations of the present day are so improbable that the testimony of thousands of living witnesses, derived after the severest tests, leaves us still incredulous, how can Rev. Dr. Field be certain that the miracles of the Bible are true? How is he able to credit that first supreme and fundamental one of Christ's conception and birth through the Virgin, based as it is only upon Joseph's dream, as told by Matthew over sixty years after it happened? If, however, the modern spirit phenomena are genuine, it renders so highly probable all the alleged manifestations of antiquity that a very little evidence will satisfy us. But if no evidence will satisfy us to-day, how can we trust the slight, feeble testimonies that have come down to us from antiquity? If we are not to believe the wonders told us by our neighbors here and now, why are we to believe the greater wonders related to us by three or four witnesses elsewhere 2,000 years ago? "The thing that hath been it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done, and there is no new thing under the sun. That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." Rev. Dr. Field's incredulity in the solemn affirmations of his contemporaries places the evidence for his Christianity in the most embarrassing dilemma.

Instead of adopting Prof. T. J. Hudson's explanation of the phenomena of Spiritualism, the Rev. Dr. Field prefers to revert to and indorse the old theory of "magic" as his explanation. In the light of modern developments in psychic science, I am not a little surprised at this. It is time that ever since the three "magicians" by "astrological" assistance, visited the child Jesus, whose birth was foretold by a "dream," a "vision" and a "ghost story"; ever since the hand writing appeared on the wall at Belshazzar's feast; ever since the deceased Samuel returned and talked to Saul; ever since the deceased Elijah gave a communication in his own handwriting to King Jehoram, using a medium; ever since Moses forbade conversation with the dead and familiar spirits; ever since Moses and Elias came back from the dead on the Mount of transfiguration; ever since it was written "your sons and daughters shall prophesy" and "shall see visions" and "shall speak with new tongues"; ever since the two human spirits appeared to Abraham and Lot to announce God's displeasure with Sodom and Gomorrah; ever since the men rose from their graves and walked into the city at the crucifixion of Christ; ever since Mary saw the spirit of a young man in the sepulcher and Paul saw a vision on the road to Damascus, Spiritualism has permeated every class of people, every religion under the sun; but in this, the beginning of the twentieth century its evolution has reached a point at which its true significance is dawning. The very universality and many phases of Spiritualism, account for the endless variety of theories introduced for its explanation. But, like the primitive American Spiritualist, we are now "seeing God in the cloud and hearing him in the wind," or we see that "All are but parts of one stupendous whole, whose body nature is, and God the soul."

Rev. Dr. Field's attack upon Spiritualism is a curious medley of contradiction. He denounces it as a fraud and a delusion, and yet admits its grand central doctrine of "the existence of spirit as distinct from matter, and the possibility of communion with the world of spirits, and of the return of the departed." The latter, however, he qualifies by the statement: "But the return of the departed is always under conditions determined by the Almighty God Himself." Of course it is. All the conditions in nature are likewise determined. There is nothing supernatural about Spiritualism.

Rev. Dr. Field should have been a little more cautious in his utterances. They are not entirely consistent with each other. He says: "And down through the centuries thoughtful and scientific men having investigated the phenomena of Spiritualism have pronounced it a deception and a delusion." Is it not surprising that Rev. Dr. Field would draw on materialistic scientists in order to prove that he himself is "deceived and deluded?" And yet, this is precelsely what he does, for he emphatically declares his belief in "the existence of spirit as distinct from matter, and the possibility of communion with the spirit world, and of the return of the departed." How is Brother Field proposing to dig himself out of this very plain dilemma?

The Rev. Dr. Funk, one of the publishers of the Literary Digest, who yet poses as an investigator only, recently announced a very satisfactory test and message he received from the late Rev. H. W. Beecher. Will the Rev. Dr. Field's theory of "magic" explain it?

Through mere idle curiosity, the Chinese minister to the United States, Mr. Wu, went into a seance in Washington, D. C. The result was that he received communications both oral and written, in the Chinese language, which were amazing, mysterious, interesting and satisfactory to him, because the language, intelligence and names attached to it were absolutely unknown to all present but himself. Will the Rev. Field's theory of "magic" explain it?

About one-half of the Rev. Dr. Field's sermon was devoted to the relation of some experiences in the investigation (?) of Spiritualism, which were very humorous, and thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience present. I could relate some experiences equally funny, and some, absolutely disgusting, in my investigations of the subject, and so can many Spiritualists. But we must expect such experiences, as long as we are to obey the scriptural injunction or command to "try the spirits, whether they be of God (good and true), for many false phophets are gone out into the world. Beloved, believe not every spirit."

The trouble with Brother Field was that when he went to Buffalo last week to investigate (?) Spiritualism, he fell among these "false prophets," fakes and humbugs, and from the tenor of his description of them, I rather think it pleased him. He got what he was looking for, and he returned to Fort Wayne "loaded for bear."

I here freely admit that some of my experiences tally well with the scriptural charge of their being "abominations." But, on the other hand, many of them are in grand accord with yet other scriptural passages which are most pronounced, beautiful commendations of them. These, Brother Field did not read. His scriptural selections upon which he based his remarks, were the ones usually chosen for such attacks upon Spiritualism, and have been completely overwhelmed a thousand times by other selections from the same volume. His sermon is a very old one against Spiritualism, and has been very frequently unanswerably answered. Like as a lawyer, Rev. Dr. Field was engaged in making out his case against the defendant, Spiritualism, and he appealed to the "law and the testimony," the Bible, for his purpose, but well knowing that the defendant's counsel can appeal with equal, if not better success, to the same source, in behalf of his client. And so, it is hardly worth while for either side to appeal to the Bible. Science is rapidly settling the question for us, and in support of Spiritualism, Brother Field to the contrary notwithstanding.

Whether Jesus was a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, or the founder of any other of the sects of our day, is a question I will not attempt to answer. That He was a Spiritualist, and the greatest medium of the ages, through whose mediumship life and immortality have been brought to light, and the stone rolled away from the door of the sepulchre of thousands of human hearts who thought their dead lived not, his Biblical history has certainly established. "The works that I do, ye shall do also, and yet greater."

WHY I BECAME A SPIRITUALIST.

Convincing Proofs Given Through a Medium.

In the Autumn of the year 1854, I was a student in an educational institute, in one of the beautiful towns of the good old Green Mountain State. I was born and then lived about seventy miles distant from the institute; and, as there were then no railroad facilities in that part of the state, I received my home letters once a week.

At that time, in my home town, David McAllister was one of my warm personal friends, and he was quite sick with the white plague, at the time that I left home for the institute. Just before leaving I called upon David, and found him quite feeble, but patient. Upon leaving him I took him by the right hand and remarked to him, "Dave, when I get home from school I hope to find you well." He answered, "I hope you will!" His voice indicated that he did not think that his hope would be realized.

Well, at the term of the institute I boarded with a man whose wife and daughter were Spiritualistic mediums, and each belonged to a spiritualistic circle of the institute town. Occasionally, with other students, I visited the meetings of the circle.

I had been at school about six weeks, when I received a letter from my father at home, informing me of the death of my friend David and some of the circumstances attending his death.

About a week after this I attended a meeting of the spiritualistic circle before mentioned, and at the proper time asked a medium if the spirit of David McAllister would come and communicate with me. I had some difficulty in obtaining the interview, the medium alleging that David was so happy in his new home that he did not want to be disturbed. Finally, upon my urgent request, he came, so the medium said, and was prepared to answer any questions that I might ask. My friend David conversed through the medium with me. I asked him if he could tell the last words we ever spoke together? The medium replied, "You said to me 'When I get home from school I hope to find you well,' and I replied, 'I hope you will.' But I did not think then that I would ever get well."

I asked who preached his funeral sermon, who conducted his funeral, who were his pall bearers, and if a young lady to whom he was engaged attended the funeral, and if so, how she took his death? These were matters that I knew nothing whatever about, and to which the medium was a perfect stranger. But the medium gave, without hesitation, the name of the clergyman who preached David's funeral sermon, the name of the conductor of the funeral, and the names of the pall bearers. And he said that the young lady to whom David was engaged, acted like a fool at his funeral. I afterwards learned from my father, that the medium had given the names of the clergyman, conductor, and pall bearers correctly. And I also learned that the young lady had acted like a mad-woman when viewing the remains at the church; and that when the coffin was being removed from the church to the hearse that she ran after it crying and wringing her hands, and had to be restrained by force.

From these facts crudely stated, I was unable to reach any conclusion, other than that the spirit of my friend David had given to me correct answers to the questions which I had propounded. And it now seems to me that any other conclusion is utterly impossible. From that time I have firmly believed that the spirits of the favored ones who have passed through the portals of death can, under proper conditions, commune with those who are in the state of earthly life.

"COSMIC MULTIPLICATION."

Mass, and One Thing More.

Brother Charles Dawbarn, in No. 815 of The Progressive Thinker, points out the law that "mass" controls the manifestation of life. The facts demonstrate the law, and the law and the facts prove the truth that Brother Dawbarn is correct; and I wish to illustrate the truth, and one thing more, by a wider range of facts in human life.

One man cannot build a town, a larger mass can, it takes more to build a city, still more to form a state, or a nation. All the facts of life illustrate the truth that mass is a law of progress, but as noted the "other point," which lies back of "mass," the power behind the manifestation that directs to a purpose, as completely inherent in the latent atom or ether, and more so, than in the most perfect manifestation of self-conscious intelligence and will power.

Mr. Atomic Ether Infinite, where are you from, with all your inherent infinite potencies?

Again, the law and the facts must decide the question.

The law of intelligence and will power which controls life, must control the ether.

All life is an embodiment of intelligence and will power, and the ether must needs be the same.

The ether cannot give that which it does not possess, says the law, and all the facts of life demonstrate the law, that men do not gather figs from thistles, and the law and the facts prove this truth: That nothing can give that which it does not possess; therefore that Infinite power behind the ether must possess all that it gives.

God gives spirit out of His spirit, Life out of His Life, Intelligence and Will power out of His Intelligence and Will power, Mind out of His Mind, Wisdom and Love out of His Wisdom and Love, Personality out of His Personality; thereby, we are His children.

All the facts in the manifestation of Life prove this truth; that all life clothes itself outwardly from within, and reproduces its kind. So Does God—in the Eternities of Being.

A HEADLESS GHOST.

The Wraith of Dead Miner Scares Party of Dubuque People.

The brother of the Headless Horseman of Sleepy Hollow has turned up again near Dubuque, and the fright caused by Irving's famous hero was as nothing compared with the excitement aroused by the appearance of the local apparition.

Dubuque's ghost has been in retirement for several years, but it has lost nothing in fearlessness by its seclusion, according to the report of three local young people who were startled by his appearance last Sunday evening.

The hang-out of the ghost is the Red Bridge, near Sinsinawa. Years and years ago, when the region was dotted by lead mines, a miner named Dyer lived in the vicinity. He was one of the fortunate people who struck a rich lead. Instead of spending his money royally, as miners were apt to do in those days, he hoarded it like a miser. Unlike the others, he lived alone, did not mingle with the other miners, and never spoke of his past life. He worked and saved from year's end to year's end. It was known that he had struck it rich, and the reports were that he was immensely wealthy. One night in late November, a stranger came to his door and asked admission. It was granted, after some parleying, which was heard by two miners in the vicinity. In the morning another miner, passing the present vicinity of the Red Bridge, saw the body of Dyer prostrate on the grass. A trail of blood had flowed across the trail, and sunk into the moss, and the man had been dead several hours. His head had been severed from his trunk, and was never found.

Haunts Red Bridge.

Since that tragedy stories of his appearance have been heard from time to time in the vicinity. When the Red Bridge was built the wraith of the dead man made it his haunt, and wandered back and forth across the water. Horses, according to the stories, shiver and tremble when crossing the bridge after nightfall, and some animals refuse to be driven over, and have to be led across.

It is several years, however, since the wraith has made its appearance, and the residents in that vicinity have begun to be less fearful.

On last Sunday night a Dubuque man, driving with two young women in the vicinity of Sinsinawa had occasion to cross the bridge. It was late in the evening, and the moon was little and low. The underbrush is thick and the trees heavy about the stream, and the bridge was dark.

Ghost Was Headless.

As the horse approached the first arch it began to tremble and stopped. The driver urged it forward, but the beast refused to move. The wind moved the tree branches enough to let the moonlight through, and by the dim light the form of a man was seen standing on the bridge. He was clothed in white, and was without a head. He moved his shadowy arms toward the party, and then vanished, without a sound.

The terror-stricken horse dashed across the bridge and up the hill at the end. At a farm house near by the frightened party stopped, and told the story. Each member was sure of the genuineness of the apparition and was thoroughly scared. The farmer, who heard their description of the headless man, told the party that the same wraith had been seen by his brother two years before.

The young people returned to Dubuque by another route. And the next time they cross the Red Bridge it will be by daylight.—Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph.

SPREADING THE LIGHT.

What May Be Accomplished by a Little Earnest Work.

Through the efforts of two earnest, energetic women, Mrs. Dora Hilton and Mrs. Harris, both of Casnovia, Mich., it has been my privilege during the past season, to go several times, in company with a friend (Mrs. G. Pierson of this city) into their vicinity, where in the midst of old-time prejudice and skepticism we held Spiritualist meetings. This opportunity to stir the people's minds in the direction of spiritual thought, telling them what Spiritualism really is; that it embodies the same truth that Jesus and many other ancient teachers endeavor to establish in the world: The brotherhood of man; "Love ye one another" in such a manner that better conditions will be established in your neighborhood; the culture of spiritual powers (gifts) that we might become magnetic souls with healing for the nations, that we might be the seers, the prophets of the age—all this has changed their skepticism somewhat, and in a measure diminished their walls of prejudice.

I write this to illustrate what two women, desirous that the truth which is shining upon their pathway should shine upon their neighbors also, can accomplish, and that in a little country neighborhood.

Mrs. Hilton has also been instrumental in opening the way for me to go to Trent, Mich., another small town in their vicinity, where I held a meeting not long since, receiving an invitation to return at an early date.

What these women are doing in that locality to establish the truth of Spiritualism, is what should be done in every town in this broad land.

Tell me not, oh, ye of little faith, that Spiritualist meetings cannot be conducted in your town, because there are so few Spiritualists, or that the orthodox element is so strong! Don't keep your truth locked up in your closet till it rusts, or is covered with mildew. Take it out upon the hillock where it will be fanned by the breezes from that evergreen shore, and where its luminous beauty will light up the valleys of earth.

There is something peculiar about Truth. It never yet made a man free as long as he was afraid or ashamed to proclaim it. It is some like the miser and his money. It will not clothe him as long as he keeps it locked in the vaults. So if we would wear the beautiful robes of emancipation, we cannot be cowards, but must come forth as men and women and stand for the truth that will grow more beautiful as its banner is unfurled to the world.

The Past Continued Into the Present.

The National Congress of Old German Baptists, at a conference held in Flora, Indiana, last week, determined members using telephones should abandon their use, and have them removed from the house. The ability to talk through a wire contravenes the will of God, and it must be abandoned.

Every invention through the ages, each in turn, has been fought by the church. The art of printing was the work of the devil. Even the fanning-mill for cleaning grain, was a device to substitute artificial wind for what God had provided. Lightning rods were anathematized as an effort to divert the electric element away from a building God had purposed to destroy.

The history of using any of the forces of nature in alleviation of pain, or escape from toil was in direct antagonism to the decree of God. He who investigates in these directions will see that our civilization is what it is in spite of the church, instead of having been aided by it.

Do we claim too much? Read the records of the past before deciding. The Old German Baptists are in line with the history of all the churches before they became civilized. Copernicus, who demonstrated our present system of astronomy, withheld the information from the world until near his death, because of the popular outcry, sustained by the church. Galileo, a few years later, who adopted the Copernican theory of the solar system, was bedeviled by the church, imprisoned, and only escaped with his life by repudiating what his telescope revealed to him.

And yet, let the preachers tell the story, we owe our civilization, our greatness, our prosperity, our hopes of heaven and escape from a mythical hell, to Christianity.

COL. R. T. VAN HORN.

Col. R. T. Van Horn passed through the city last week on his way to his favorite place of resort, Lily Dale camp. Although we did not have the pleasure of meeting the venerable gentleman, when he called at the office, we are assured by those who did that his mind is still as brilliant, logical and clear as it was when he had a seat for four sessions in Congress, shaping the destiny of the nation, as a Colonel at the head of his regiment, or as editor of the Daily Journal in Kansas City, whose columns were illuminated each Sunday by one of his unique, soul-elevating and inspiring editorials that were read and re-read, and quoted far and wide, exerting a spiritualizing influence that still survives. Just so long as this octogenarian visits Lily Dale, he will be its MASCOT, and it will prosper and be happy, so we advise the fair Lady President of the camp to see to it that he is properly groomed, and taken care of with that delicacy, serenity and cheerfulness, commensurate with his present and past standing in the world.

Shamefully Vile.

"And the Lord said unto Moses: Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel."—Numbers 25:4.

Now, why was the "fierce anger" of of the Lord aroused against Israel? Because they ate and bowed down to other gods. Acting on this authority and other Bible texts, heathen had no rights Christians should respect, hence they were enslaved, tortured, burned at the stake, emboweled, skinned alive.

Who so silly as to believe the Lord said any such thing to Moses? It is a libel on the divine character. These "Thus saith the Lord" so frequent in the Bible, had their origin in the brain of a murderer, and should be treated as such.

Conjectural Revelation.

Good reader, did you ever sit and gaze on the great ethereal vault above when stratum after stratum of dense clouds, one over another, with bright rays of light between tinged their edges, and the whole was borne along by a gentle current? Did you notice how these clouds were ever shifting, ever assuming new forms? Aided by an active imagination, you have constructed every form of animated nature, and have seen these objects of fancy rapidly changing into others as variant as matter can assume. The cloud-elephant drops his trunk, its tusks disappear; then, perchance, a camel comes rushing on with wonderful pace, an ostrich, a cameleopard, each in turn, and then all are merged into a common cloud. Palaces, temples, great cathedrals, priests, angels, gods, armies advancing, combating, retreating, and all are swept away. Ships come in sight, sailing over a billowy sea, colliding with some object, possibly an informal iceberg. And thus so long as the watch continues, and the stately march goes on, with a busy imagination shifting cloud is constructed into forms of life or phantom cities. The sight is grand, sublime, inspiring, magnificent. If a historian you have seen re-enacted in the theater of the skies, great battle scenes, armies advancing for mortal combat, victors pressing onward over the fallen and prostrate; then all are overwhelmed and lost in the rolling, intermingling drapery of drifting, reconstructing cloud. If the lightning dashes from object to object in the great vault, and the thunders roll along the sky with crash on crash in deafening peals, you may feel you have not only seen but heard the clash of contending warriors in deadly strife.

In high northern latitudes a similar astonishing vision illumines imagination as it looks out on the northern lights, the aurora borealis of the books. It seems difficult at times for the young mind to conceive it possible life is not there enacting scenes which fancy weaves into advancing and retreating armies, into towers, cities in flame, streaming banners; perchance ruin, desolation and death.

The scene in cloud-land is before us as we write. There is a reindeer. Its great high antlers rise above its head; there, it is changed into a pair of horns; the head is lowered as if to defend against an advancing foe. And thus, ever changing, new, perhaps uncouth forms as dragons and monsters appear from moment to moment for hours if attention is so long continued, or the day does not wane. From whence but the clouds came the distich

"He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm"?

In the infancy of the race, while imagination had free wing, unaided by education, is it not probable this constructive castle building was carried on to an extent not thought of now? The old Babylonians surveying the heavens, arranged the stars into clusters, and gave them names which survive to our day. There are the Great Bear, the Little Bear, the Dragon, the Herdsman, the Harp, the Swan, the Serpent, the Arrow, the Flying Horse, and thus on to the number of forty-eight, embracing all the stars in our northern hemisphere.

Pondering on these subjects while gazing on the changing kaleidoscope, the thought arose: Is it not probable those who wrote our holy books, gained portions of the animals and characters they describe while looking at the moving clouds, somewhat after the manner of women in their old-time tea parties, who turned over their empty cups, gave them a few circular twists, then told what they saw in the adherent grounds of tea? She whose imagination was the most prolific was deemed the best fortune-teller. The prophets who saw great beasts with wings, and feet of iron, brass or clay, maybe with claws of eagles instead of hoofs, possibly gained their ideas from the cloud-world, immediately beneath the "firmament," above which was the throne, occupied by God, and all around it were the saints shouting glory, glory, glory!

The book of Revelation filled with imagery, better fits a description of the genii of the clouds than of real life. To those who are familiar with that compilation of ancient literature it would be but surplussage to particularize.

Dr. Adam Clarke, the eminent Methodist commentator on the Bible, in his Prefatory on the Book of Revelation, thus discourses:

"I cannot pretend to explain the book; I do not understand it; and in the things which concern so sublime and awful a subject, I dare not, as my predecessors, indulge in conjectures. I have read elaborate works on the subject, and each seemed right till another was examined. I am satisfied no certain mode of interpreting the prophecies of this book has yet been found out; and I will not add another monument to the littleness or folly of the human mind, by endeavoring to strike out a new course. I repeat: I do not understand the book; and I am satisfied not one who has written on the subject knows anything more of it than myself."

Dr. Clarke was an honest writer, who was unwilling to indulge in "conjecture," yet he waded through the book with voluminous comments on "things which must shortly come to pass * * * for the time is at hand. * * * Surely I come quickly," though more than 1800 years have come and gone, yet he comes not. John the Revelator claims he was on the sea-girt isle of Patmos when he wrote. Was he looking above at the shifting clouds when he saw great beasts with wings, having feet of iron, brass and clay, some with the claws of birds? We have the right to suspicion in that direction.

Words That Have Meaning.

C. L. Stevens, a prominent Spiritualist of Pittsburg, Pa., writes: "Your journal is a great favorite, and has a large sale in this vicinity. We know there are more sold at our church when in session than all others combined."

The new song-book, "The Golden Echoes," by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

An Object Lesson.

For Honest Spiritualists and Mediums to Carefully Consider.

An Object Lesson is always valuable. It makes a deep impression on the mind, and sets Spiritualists to thinking as never before. Legerdemain is abroad in the land with its illuminated dresses, draperief, and various kinds of toggery, to represent "Spirit Friends," accomplishing results not within the power of any honest medium. Read, think, reflect, and become wiser.

Spiritualists are gradually becoming more enlightened. The phenomena coming through different mediums are discussed freely and openly. The process of communing with spirit friends is simply a natural process, in accordance with natural laws, and is in no sense supernatural. Hence that which is transmitted through a physical medium must pass the ordeal of a scientific examination, with the same painstaking scrutiny that a scientist would examine any substance transmitted through the atmosphere from the space above it.

Opinions long ago adopted must now be modified or changed altogether. The legerdemainist is abroad aiming to imitate every phase of the spirit phenomena as far as possible, and then assuming the name of medium, going forth to coin money and deceive the public. In 1896 the following article was sent to this office by a prominent physician of Covington, Ky., and we publish it now as an object lesson to Spiritualists.

MARVELOUS MANIFESTATIONS.

Never Before Equaled in the Annals of Spiritualism—Such Was the Power of the Spirits, That Skepticism of the Most Keen-pointed Kind Did Not Prevent Them From Materializing Even a Giant Form—Forms That Were Small, at Once Assumed Exceedingly Large Proportions, Even When No Conditions Were Required, Antagonism Being No Detriment to the Dear Angels of Light and Love, in Their Efforts to Materialize.

To the Editor:—I herewith send you a report of some seances that I have attended. About the first of September last there came to Cincinnati, Ohio, a Mr. C. C. Howland and wife, he being a lecturer and she an instrument of occult phenomena produced in public by them. They were employed by the Spiritual Progressive Society, which held forth in old Odd Fellows' Temple, corner Fourth and Home streets, with a seating capacity of about 400. Ten cents admission was charged, the standing room generally being exhausted, making some $40 of an income on Sunday evenings.

Some dissatisfaction soon arose as to the division of the door receipts, for never before were the door receipts so great in the history of the society. To Mr. Howland fell the greater part.

At this juncture the society and their former local mediums, officers and members withdrew their support, disbanded and expected to see the thing go to the wall. Then Mr. Howland threw open the hall free of admission, only a collection taken, same as done in churches, merely enough to pay the rent, and sometimes Mr. Howland went down in his pocket to make up what lacked. This was the first time a hall in that city was ever thrown open free to the general public, and a great work was accomplished.

Next that none might be deprived of the phenomena, they threw open their private seances free to all, asking of those that were able to contribute a dollar apiece, and others to contribute what they were able to.

On October 25, 1896, I was at the hall, and will outline what I saw, and express no opinion. The phenomena produced was as follows:

As Mr. Howland closed a 20-minute lecture, a committee of six ladies and six gentlemen unknown to the Howlands, and not Spiritualists were selected; some had never been in seances; they came forward promiscuously from the audience. The cabinet consisted of brass rods six by six by six feet, covered with dark canton flannel mode for that purpose, slit from top to bottom in the side next to the audience.

A large armed hall chair was placed in the cabinet, and Mrs. Howland was seated therein, and with strips of dark cloth her wrists were tied to the chair arms, and her ankles to the chair legs, and the knots were sewed by a lady of the committee. The curtain was then closed, and the lights lowered some, but all could see very plainly. About five dozen flowers were thrown out of the cabinet; bells were rung; musical instruments played; a loud and sonorous voice came from a trumpet; about thirty messages were written to different people in the audience, and faces of departed ones were drawn on paper that after the seance were recognized. The pad of paper was thoroughly examined before placing in the cabinet. Handkerchiefs from the crowd were held close to the cabinet, were taken in, tied in knots and returned in an instant. A glass of water was held close to the curtain, taken inside and was returned in a second of time emptied. No trace of water could be found. The flowers were all broken off, none being cut. The curtain was thrown back and the lady was found to be just as they had placed her, tied and all knots as the committee left her. This to the new beginner was unaccountable.

The gentlemen thoroughly examined the cabinet and things thereabouts, to see that there was no white anywhere. The ladies had taken Mrs. Howland to an ante-room, disrobed her and dressed her in their own clothes, returned and placed her in the cabinet, the curtains then being closed. The whole committee of twelve declared positively that there was not a bit of white about Mrs. Howland or the cabinet. Mr. Howland was then held by the hands, the gas lowered to a dim light and a full-sized person appeared from the cabinet, dressed in white. Several of these appeared, from the size of children to a full grown person of 220 pounds weight. All of these phenomena were dressed in pure white robes, and the twelve on the committee declared there was no white to be found. I saw about the same wonderful phenomena on November 1, at the same place, with this to add: One full-grown form did not recede into the cabinet as the others did, but sank down onto the floor to a light spot and then vanished altogether from view.

On November 1896, the Howlands appeared at Odd Fellows' Hall, Covington, Ky., and with only a small audience being present, a part of the seance was the same as related above. I will now state the phenomena as it appeared on the stage, in a light that no one had to lean forward and strain their eyes to see what occurred. The same cabinet was in use, and a committee of twelve of our own people went forward, none being Spiritualists. The six ladies took Mrs. Howland to an ante-room, disrobed and clothed her in their own garments, and returned with her and placed her in the cabinet. During this time the gentlemen had examined the cabinet, and the whole twelve after giving names and addresses, said that they were willing to make oath that there was not any white whatever about the cabinet or Mrs. Howland. The lights being arranged the committee held Mr. Howland at about twelve feet distance, and in a few seconds a giantess appeared, fully six feet tall, and the size of a person weighing 300 pounds, the clothing being of pure white, low and gathered about the neck, hanging in folds almost to the floor; white slippers, and the hair long and hanging loose over the shoulders, it being of a dark coarse look. There seemed to be a lace covering over the heavy goods beneath. The lace sparkled as though it was studded with diamonds half an inch apart all over. After making a bow to each of the committees and then to the audience, the form retired within the cabinet. Other forms appeared but not quite so large, all dressed in white, and going as far as five or six feet from the cabinet. As it retired the curtain was quickly drawn aside, and no white was visible, and Mrs. Howland was sitting in her chair dressed in black as the committee had placed her.

One form appeared the size of a ten-year-old girl, and after a second it began to grow larger, and assumed the proportions of a giantess, seven and a half or eight feet tall, and wide in proportion to the height. This last is surely a great wonder; to increase in such proportions and then diminish to the size of a child in plain view of all, then return to the cabinet from which it proceeded.

Mrs. Howland is a small, delicate, dark-complexioned person, weighing I do not think over 100 pounds.

Now where did the white come from that was seen, also those giant forms. I have been many years a Spiritualist and seen an abundance of phenomena, but never anything to equal this.

If this is trickery I should be pleased to know it. If it is those from the other side of life, I think the manifestations supremely grand.

L. S., M. D.
Covington, Ky., Nov. 28 1896.

The above was simply the result of legerdemain—that and nothing else, and strictly legitimate when practiced as such and not under the head of spirit phenomena. The performance was a subtle, cruel deception from beginning to end, and not the result of mediumship as set forth in the following, written over Mr. Howland's own signature:

"WE HAVE NEVER POSED AS MEDIUMS OR SPIRITUALISTS. (GOD FORBID!)"

When the communication came to this office extolling the Howlands, we knew that all the manifestations were the result of legerdemain. Supposing we had published it. Then hundreds would have been misled. Camp-meeting officials would have tumbled over each other in their efforts to secure the service of the notorious Howlands. Their seances would have been crowded; the Spiritualist press would have sung their praise through the camp-meeting correspondents, and they would have been solicited, probably, to visit Europe. Thus it is, Spiritualists, that legerdemain keeps a few paces ahead of honest mediumship; it coins the dollars, while the host of honest mediums suffer in consequence.

Remember, please, that the above manifestations were in a packed hall—400 being present—a hilarious crowd of skeptics bent on fun—conditions utterly destructive of genuine manifestations!

Is it not about time that a flood of light was thrown upon the dark cabinet and its artificial toggery, so handled by the medium or confederate that it escapes the notice of any committee? One after another those who resort to deception are being exposed, and it may come YOUR turn next. The mills of the Gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine.

Mr. T. J. O. Volkmann.

The above named genial gentleman and earnest Spiritualist arrived in Boston from London, Eng., on Saturday last, in the White Star liner Republic. Mr. Volkmann is a native of New Zealand, hailing from Wellington, the capital of the colony. For a number of years, in fact down to his recent departure from his home on his round-the-world tour, he acted as treasurer to the Wellington Association of Spiritualists (Registered), the leading Spiritualist organization in New Zealand. We were pleased to welcome our good friend with whom we had much pleasing association when lecturing in his country and city a few years since, and also glad to extend to him such fraternal courtesies as circumstances permitted. Mr. Volkmann purposes an extended tour of the states, and we cordially commend him to all Spiritualists as a good Spiritualist and a worthy representative of our brethren down in the Southern seas.—Banner of Light.

Mr. Volkman is now in Chicago. He is an exceptionally intelligent and agreeable gentleman. Possibly he may make this country his future home.

B. B. Hill's 75th Anniversary.

It is with great pleasure we note the seventy-fifth anniversary of this old-time and ardent Spiritualist, B. B. Hill, of Philadelphia, Pa.

His life has been an active one and filled with labors of good to the world. He was the originator and is at the head of the B. B. Hill Manufacturing Co., of Philadelphia.

With all his engrossment in the business affairs of life Brother Hill has not neglected his spiritual welfare and the well-being of those in his employ who have helped him build up the immense business he has now upon his hands. He has been a liberal contributor to spiritual institutions that met with his approval and seemed to merit his co-operation.

In fact, while he is a man of business, active, thrifty and energetic, he is a business man with a soul, and is highly esteemed by his acquaintances and employes alike.

We are glad to have good men live to a ripe old age and grow old gracefully, as has our brother, B. B. Hill, and The Progressive Thinker, acknowledging the receipt of souvenir invitations, also extends a congratulatory hand, and wishes him seventy-five or a hundred more years of usefulness in the life that is eternal.

To illustrate his business proclivities and his standing in the world of invention and trade, we quote from the Commercial Stamp Trade Journal, Chicago:

"Mr. Hill has been in the stamp trade as an inventor and manufacturer for more than forty-five years, and is on this account considered the Father of the "Hand Stamp Industry."

"On the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday he was greatly honored, both by his employes and also by his family in two celebrations, one by his employes and the other by his more immediate friends and relatives. June 9, 1905, was the day, and the home of Mr. Hill, at 1243 N. 13th street, Philadelphia, was beautifully decorated in honor of the occasion. All day long at intervals letters and telegrams from prominent railroad officials and business men came in from all parts of the world, congratulating him on having arrived at the seventy-fifth year in such a favorable condition of life and health. In addition to this Mr. Hill was kept busy receiving visitors at his home, who called to pay their respects.

"The celebration began on Thursday evening, June 8, at Casino Hall, Thirteenth street and Girard avenue, where on the eve of Mr. Hill's birthday, The B. B. Hill Mfg. Co. tendered a reception to their employes in honor of the occasion, the main features of which were music, dancing and an elaborate banquet. Great was the enjoyment thereof. Mr. Hill is held in high esteem by the employes in the factory and offices and as a result of this they presented him with a very handsome leather chair, which he received with good grace and good cheer.

"On the evening of his birthday, June 9, a delightful reception was given to his family and their friends at Mr. Hill's home, 1243 N. 13th street. Here the aged inventor received numerous tokens of flowers and many useful articles as tokens of friendship and love. But there was one that pleased him more than any other: Two little child friends, Maggie and Harry Bertwhistle, aged 9 and 12 years, respectively, early in the day rang the door bell and left a large basketful of field daisies, which they had gathered themselves, and which were used as a prominent feature of the decorations of the home. At the home, Mr. Hill's daughter, Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, who is secretary and treasurer of the company, assisted in receiving the guests.

"Mr. B. B. Hill is well and favorably known by the stamp trade the world over. He has been the inventor and manufacturer of over 400 styles of hand stamps, seal and notary presses, and ticket stamps. His ticket stamp is in use the world around by nearly all the railroads and has made for him many business friends and acquaintances. The B. B. Hill Mfg Co., at Philadelphia, is one of the oldest of the kind in existence and the genius that has controlled it from the beginning is still active and alert, despite his advanced age, and it is his constant activity and fondness for work that has kept him up and rendered his life young in spirit and buoyant with hope. He started his present business in Chicopee, Mass., in 1860 and moved it to Philadelphia in 1882, where it has grown to great proportions and is still progressing with vigor and enterprise."

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

(Respectfully dedicated to B. B. Hill, of Philadelphia, Pa.)

As year follows year and white hairs appear,
And the youth gives way to old age;
As Time drifts along with his "hey-hi-ho" song,
Inspecting each record—each page,
There's none who need fear, with record kept clear
Throughout this terrestrial stage.

A good man grown old has riches that gold
Can never add to nor efface;
A man growing old in Nature's true mold,
Grows better in life's onward race;
A man with good mind, with age will grow kind:
Grow younger and richer in grace.

Oh, beautiful Life! Though measured in strife;
Though filled with the sweet and the tart,
Thou holdest each man in line with thy plan,
To perform his personal part!
Oh, beautiful soul from Life's fountain bowl,
Grown bright in Earth's busy mart!

Oh, Infinite Mind! in manhood refined
In thine own image is seen
Great marks of thy love, let down from above,
That no mortal body can screen!
True manhood's own sphere and angels are near,
E'er aglow with love-lighted mien.

No mortal is great inflated with hate;
No mortal in progress can grow,
Weighed down with a load in Life's rugged road,
Unless his great soul is aglow
With thoughts above earth; for man's greatest worth
Is in spirit, and not here below.

And here's to the man, and here's to the plan
That helps many people to thrive;
And here's to the soul that has a high goal,
Toward which to struggle and strive;
And here's to the heart still doing its part
At the age of seventy-five.

A Rank Insult to Spiritualists and Mediums.

Testing Spiritualists as a Body, and Finding the Stuff Exceedingly Shoddy.

The Light of Truth is engaged upon the only purpose spirit return has in this world's affairs. That purpose is to free the spirit man here and now and make earth a fit dwelling place for him.

In this work the Light of Truth appeals, for the present to Spiritualists, because they are supposed to be the people that know about these things.

The Light of Truth is testing the Spiritualists of North America specifically, and the Spiritualists of the world generally.

This test will go on until the fiber of the goods is thoroughly known and understood.

For the MOST PART the STUFF SO FAR TESTED IS EXCEEDINGLY SHODDY. Some of the PACKAGES TIED WITH FANCY STRING and BABY RIBBON offered for inspection WILL NOT BEAR IT AT ALL.

A FEW SMALL PACKAGES tied with the ordinary binding cord contain big values. They are the kohinoors among the diamond fields of things Spiritualistic. On them the Light of Truth depends for courage to continue the test.—Editorial in Light of Truth, by Willard J. Hull.

—:—:—:—:—:—:—

The Progressive Thinker Tests Spiritualists.

The whole world is aglow with the Beauty and Grandeur of Spirit Return!

It has liberalized the Churches!

It has sent thrills of joy unspeakable into millions of homes, proclaiming the joyful tidings that the "dead" still live—are immortal!

Spiritualists as a class are THE BEST PEOPLE on earth to-day.

This fact has been fully established by the employment of Clipping Bureaus in Chicago and the East. The clippings sent in established irrefutably the fact that Spiritualists as a class (and that, of course, includes all mediums) are the MOST MORAL and law-abiding of any of the religious creeds in the World to-day.

To insinuate that the great mass of Spiritualists are Shoddy, is an insult to the intelligence of the great mass of thinking minds now lending dignity to our Cause. Instead of "a few small packages" containing big values, there are thousands of them, perhaps millions, among Spiritualists. To estimate otherwise should stamp a person as an imbecile, unworthy of recognition as a leader in our ranks.

He Is Simply Ignorant.

"The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic, he is simply ignorant; and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him."—T. J. Hudson, "Law of Psychic Phenomena," p. 206.

An Incomplete Book.

It is not to be expected that a "higher critic," even of the most advanced type, who is yet addicted to bibliolatry, or worship of the bible, will admit the correctness of the views of those who do not hold that book in sacred reverence. Nor will such critic admit that the conclusions such persons draw from his positive statements concerning the bible are correct.

Most unbiased minds would say that a book which is "the most inartistic, disproportionate and incomplete book possible," could not be the production of an all-wise Being—as is claimed for the bible.

But let us hear what a learned critic—Prof. Herbert L. Willet of the divinity faculty of the University of Chicago—has to say:

"The bible will not suffer from criticism, but from the neglect of it," Prof. Willett declared. "The bible is a fragmentary work. It is disproportionate in its discussion of great events. For instance, in the book of Daniel twenty years of important political history is passed over with but two paragraphs of expostulation. But the bible is not concerned with political history and from the standpoint of the writer is the most inartistic book possible. This is true of the new testament as well as of the old.

"Who believes that there is a complete history of the life of Christ in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John? The same is true of the life of Solomon. The testaments were not intended as political histories and so why supply this history from other sources and make the bible a complete history of its time? What harm can come of it?

"Why cannot this history be made complete and certain of understanding from other sources just as we would authenticate other history? The great political events were passed over in order to show the development of the characters with which the books dealt specially.

"The archaeologist and the interpreters of the bible, by the use of the contemporaneous, are doing most toward giving us a complete and correct understanding of these holy writings. And this entirely othodox.

"The panic among religious teachers and thinkers brought on by the first statements from these higher critics is over. Most advanced thinkers now accept as helpful the work of these critics."

JOINED IN WEDLOCK.

Rev. Charles W. Stewart and Rev. Josie K. Folsom, Spiritualists, formerly president and treasurer, respectively, of the State Spiritualisis' Association, were married by Rev. Dr. J. W. Cunningham at 6 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, in accordance with the Methodist marriage ritual. The wedding was a quiet one and the only guests present were Miss Phoebe Wolfe, Mrs. Folsom's confidante, and her stepson, Charles L. Folsom.

Mrs. Folsom was a widow, and is the daughter of G. G. Hendrick, a prominent attorney of Louisville. Mr. Stewart has been an active worker in the cause of Spiritualism for the past thirty-five years, and a business partner of his bride's former husband. Mrs. Folsom has espoused the cause of Spiritualism for twelve years or more.

Mr. Stewart and Mrs. Folsom were deposed by the State Association of Spiritualists, as stated in the newspapers recently. The matter is now in the hands of the National Association, Washington, D. C., and a committee will meet here September 1 to make a thorough investigation of the whole matter.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are engaged upon a plan to build a Spiritualist temple in St. Louis.—Globe-Democrat, St. Louis, Mo.

A Potent Remedy For the Evil.

A Lecture on The Progressive Thinker Rostrum, to Its Many Thousands of Readers, by Nora Batchelor.

There is no reason why any child should suffer with cold and hunger. why it should grow up in poverty and ignorance, and squalor and wretchedness, why it should wear its life away in factory or mine or sweatshop, or end its days in the brothel or the penitentiary. Some day we will have the wisdom, the decency and the humanity to end these conditions, and to insure to every little human blossom the environment necessary to unfold the possibilities of its higher nature in all their beauty and power. When that day comes, fewer graduates from the prison and the gallows will go to swell the ranks of obsessing demons on the other side of life.

Much has been written of late on the subject of demoniacal influences, but little thus far has been offered in the way of a remedy for this evil.

The old proverb that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure applies especially well in this case. Those who have read Dr. Peebles' work on Obsession, without prejudice or preconceived opinions, together with the many articles in the Open Court, are in little danger of becoming victims to the wiles of the unseen foe. They possess the knowledge which will successfully ward off all attacks of these "powers of darkness." They have learned better than to resign themselves unreservedly to the control of an unknown power, in the fallacious belief that "like attracts like," and "only the good can come."

But there are those who, through ignorance, have already fallen into the trap, and are struggling with the desperation of despair to extricate themselves from the demon-like grip of a power they never knew existed until they found themselves fast in its clutches. What shall we say to these?

But right here, before attempting to answer this question, I want to say that in my opinion it is a great mistake to urge sensitives to "sit for development," either in circles or alone, without at the same time informing them thoroughly of the danger of evil influences, and how to detect and repel them. It is not enough to say, "You are in no danger if your motives are high and your character pure. Evil beings cannot approach you nor do you harm." This teaching is a stupendous error, and has been the cause of much suffering to innocent persons. Conscious of the uprightness of their own character and the purity of their motives, they have walked blindfolded into the trap. This doctrine is mischievous and pernicious in the extreme, and should be exploded once for all.

Now, what is the truth in regard to the power of demoniacal influences over the minds and acts of men? Just this: Spirit control is a hypnotic control. The methods employed are akin to those of hypnotism. Here is the spirit hypnotist, and here the mortal sensitive. The one has the power of giving suggestions, that is, of projecting his thoughts into the sensitive mind of the subject. The other has the power of receiving those thoughts or suggestions. THIS POWER TO GIVE OR RECEIVE SUGGESTIONS IS PURELY A MENTAL POWER. MORAL CHARACTER HAS NOTHING WHATEVER TO DO WITH IT.

The hypnotist may be an angel or a fiend; the sensitive may be a saint or a moral pervert; but whatever the one or whatever the other, the power of the one to give suggestions, and of the other to receive them, is in no wise abrogated because of a difference in moral unfoldment. That an evil spirit hypnotist cannot approach a pure-minded sensitive and cast his suggestions into the mind of the latter is an egregious error.

This he may do. But here his power ends. He may give his suggestions, but no power in this world nor any other can compel the sensitive to comply with them. Thus far and no farther! Now the question of moral character becomes of the utmost importance. Whether the sensitive accepts and complies with these evil suggestions or not, depends upon his own moral unfoldment, and upon nothing else. He may receive the suggestions, even against his will, but he is under no compulsion to act them out, unless he so desires.

It is not true that an evil influence cannot approach or hypnotize a pure-minded sensitive. It is true that he cannot compel that sensitive to perform an immoral act. I hope this point is clear, for it has been the cause of much misunderstanding and error. The sensitive does not attract evil influences because of evil in his own mind and character. HE ATTRACTS THEM BECAUSE HE IS A SENSITIVE. He is not responsible for their coming. He is responsible if he allows them to remain and control him, after he has learned their true character.

Now, what can be done for the unsuspecting, inexperienced sensitive who has fallen a prey to vicious spirit influences, who has "sat for development" week after week, giving himself into the control of unknown powers, doing their bidding in little things that had no moral significance, and thereby all unwittingly drawing tighter and tighter about him the hypnotic bonds that now require all his strength of body, mind and soul to break? What can he do to free himself from the unseen power, now that he knows that its designs are evil?

Resist to the last extremity. Refuse to do its bidding. Pit his strength against its strength in a life and death struggle for the control of his own organism. Yes; to be sure, that is what every right-minded sensitive must and will do. But it will not save him from the torment and persecution which follow. The very fact that he does resist calls down upon his devoted head the savage fury of demons foiled of their prey. It is not enough to say to these powers of darkness, "Be off! I will have no more to do with you." That does not end the matter by any means. They have gained a tremendous advantage, a terrible power, and they do not hesitate to use it. They will fight like the fiends they are to maintain their position, and force him to do their bidding. They say to him, "Yield, or we will torment you to the verge of human endurance. We will fill your days with misery, and your nights with horror." And they have the power to carry out that threat, as many a medium who has passed through this experience can testify.

Perhaps a few practical hints, from one who has fought this battle and won, may be of value. Letters come to me from north, east and south, asking, "What shall I do to free myself from this awful power?" It is impossible to answer all of these in detail, but I will try to give a few suggestions, in the plainest of plain language, that everyone can understand.

In the first place, make up your mind that you will never yield, no matter how great the suffering you are called upon to endure, no matter if you are driven to the verge of insanity or of suicide. Maintain your ground, and be assured that in due time this persecution will cease. For when it is found that your will is indomitable, your character incorruptible, your tormentors will leave you, after exhausting the vials of their wrath, in search of a more willing subject. You are under no compulsion to bow to the will of an unseen power, even if it has gained a certain degree of hypnotic control over your mind. There is a remedy for this evil, and that remedy lies in your own hands. It lies in the power of auto-suggestion. It was through suggestion, unconsciously received and acted upon, that you fell into the pit. It is through the contrary auto-suggestion that you must climb out again.

THE PRACTICAL APPLICATION.

Now for the practical application. These evil beings will doubtless seek to break down your physical health, to thus undermine your will power, and conquer you in this way. They will cling to you vampire-like, sapping your strength and vitality, until you find yourself on the verge of nervous prostration.

How is this done? Through suggestion. It is a well-known fact to-day that many physical ills can be cured by hypnotic or telepathic suggestion. If suggestion can thus build up the bodily tissues, it can also tear them down. If it can assist, it can also injure. Only within the past few years have we begun to realize the subtle power of suggestion upon the physical organism. I know from bitter experience that these wily foes in the unseen can and do break down the bodily health of their intended victims in order to still farther fasten their hold upon the weakened organism.

AUTO-SUGGESTION A REMEDY.

But there is a remedy. It is a fact in hypnotism that an auto-suggestion when vigorously given in opposition to the will of the operator, will frustrate all attempts of the latter to gain control. Now, you tormented and persecuted sensitive, get this truth firmly planted in your mind, for upon your full and complete understanding of it depends your salvation. Nature has wisely given into the hands of every man the power of supreme control over his own mind, and through this of his own body. The trouble is, there are very few of us who realize this fact. Possession of such power is of little value until we become conscious of such possession. Put your own suggestion against that of your enemy, and you will vanquish him in every encounter. If he seeks to undermine your health, meet him with the counter suggestions of health and strength. Do this repeatedly during the day, and especially when you retire at night. Study mental science and the so-called New Thought. Never mind the useless verbiage, nonsense and absurdity which you find. Dig down until you find the root. There is a great truth there which will well repay your labor. Master the principles involved in mental healing. Study hypnotism and suggestive therapeutics. These things are all akin. One truth underlies them all. The work which has done me most good along these lines of study is Olston's "Mind Power and Privilege." (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York, publishers).

MEET SUGGESTION WITH CONTRARY SUGGESTION.

Again, your tormentors will doubtless attempt to fill you with fear and worry and all manner of forebodings, to make you despondent, and miserably unhappy. Meet this attempt as you do all others with the contrary suggestions. Refuse to be unhappy. Look persistently at the bright side. Be cheerful in spite of everything. Put away all unpleasant thoughts and feelings. Fill your mind only with that which is desirable, and in this way crowd out the undesirable. Read plenty of good literature, and when you cannot read, keep your mind fixed upon things that are pure, beautiful, true and good. Think of your troubles as little as possible. Do not allow your mind to dwell upon the evil influence and its work. Ignore it as far as possible. Say nothing to it. Try not to think of it as anything human. The more you can crowd it out of your consciousness, the better it will be for you.

On this point I do not agree with those who advocate attempts at "educating" the evil power. Some of these beings may be susceptible to education, but others are not. They will simply laugh in your face and take advantage of your benevolent intentions to still farther fasten their hold upon you. No, the work of education and upliftment, if such is possible, had better be left to those who have not fallen into the clutches of these beings, and who stand in no danger of their power.

INSOMNIA AND ITS CURE.

Again, you may be troubled with insomnia, as this seems to be a favorite method of the invisibles of inflicting torture upon those who refuse to yield to their desires. Of the horror of sleepless nights, only those who have experienced them can ever know, when the brain seems on fire, and one's thoughts go careering over the universe like runaway steeds, leaping from one subject to another with a rapidity akin to madness, until the fagged brain cries in despair for one little moment of rest. But, no! if you drift for a few seconds into unconsciousness, you are suddenly jerked awake by an electric shock sent from your head through your whole organism. And then the whole experience must be gone through again. Demonism! Yes.

But there is a cure for this also. It requires persistency and determination, but in time this enemy to health and peace can be overcome. In the first place, stop worrying about your condition. Say that you do not care whether you sleep or not. The object of these attacks is torment—to worry, harass and terrorize. If you refuse to be tormented, the chief cause of attack is removed. The next think to do is to stop thinking. Control that current of thought. Refuse to let it run. Memorize some beautiful poem or bit of prose, and repeat this again and again until you go to sleep. Hold your mind down to the thoughts expressed in the poem. It is of no use to repeat the words while your thought is running elsewhere.

The waking mind must occupy itself with something, and the object in this is to keep it looking at pictures, instead of doing work of its own. It is this ceaseless working on its own account which brings fatigue to both mind and body. Select some poem that is full of pictures, like Trowbridge's "Summer," or the lines of Lowell, beginning "What is so rare as a day in June?" in "The Vision of Sir Launfal." Allow your mind to dwell upon pictures as you repeat the words. Crowd everything else out by concentrating your attention upon these. If the thought wanders bring it back. Be persistent. Don't give up. When you tire of one poem try another. The object is to check the thought current, to prevent the mind from doing original work. When you can do this you have won. You will pass into a dreamy state that is restful, and after a little more practice you will be able to command sleep when you desire it. The secret of the whole matter lies in gaining control of your thought.

And indeed the secret of this whole question of how to vanquish obsessing influences is in learning to control your own psychic activities. By yielding the control of your mental organism to outside intelligences you have put yourself in their power, and the only way to regain that control is by constant vigilance and self-assertion. Watch the movements of your tormentors and checkmate them at every turn. Meet every suggestion with a counter auto-suggestion. They will try to control your smallest acts, even to slight muscular movements, such as sighing and yawning. It was through such little things as these that they first gained control, unconsciously to yourself. When you find yourself performing some little act with no reason, stop it. The chances are you are acting in obedience to some suggestion from the unseen.

Do nothing to appease the evil powers. Resist them on every point, however small. You may find yourself stopping to glance over the usual list of horrors in the daily papers, the accidents, murders, suicides, scandals, etc., which you have hitherto scorned. Stop it. You are merely catering to the depraved appetite of the invisible beings who surround you. This is merely a hint. If you are watchful you will discover many similar tendencies. You will find yourself doing things you never did before. You will entertain thoughts and feelings you never had until now. Put them out. They are not yours, but reflections from the unseen.

ASSERT YOUR RIGHT TO FREEDOM

These depraved influences will strive to dominate your thought in all things, to make you believe that they are going to stay with you and torment you until your last breath. Do not believe it for a moment. Assert your right to freedom. Declare your independence. Never relinquish for an instant your hope of ultimate victory. Much depends upon your own attitude on this point. They will attempt to terrorize you, to fill you with horrible fear and apprehension, and a sense of your own powerlessness. Put such feeling promptly out of mind. These beings cannot really harm you, that is, permanently, if you steadily oppose them. The harmful results of such an experience are all temporary, and chiefly physical. They are terrible while they last, but they soon pass away. These vicious beings cannot touch you morally and spiritually, if you will that they shall not. You will come out of the struggle stronger in character than when you went into it. You can use this experience as a sort of spiritual gymnastic exercise, in which to strengthen your moral and spiritual fibres, so to speak. When it is over you will find that the permanent results are all good. You will possess greater knowledge and a stronger will power than you ever had before.

IF YOUR CASE IS DESPERATE.

If your case is a desperate one, and you feel that you have not the strength to cope with your enemies single-handed, write to some good healer, in whom you have faith, for assistance. Five years ago I did not know what I now know. I was fighting a battle the like of which I had never heard, and the outcome of which seemed dubious; with foes whose methods I did not understand, and whose terrible power held me in thrall. I was broken in spirit, shattered in health, and wild with fear. I wrote to C. Walter Lynn, of Oakland, Cal., for help, and it came. In the course of two or three months the worst of the experience was over. Whether the good results were due to his advice and suggestions, kindly encouragement and sympathy, to some magnetic power mysteriously transmitted, or the intervention of strong spirit controls, I do not know; but I was helped, and I heartily recommend him to anyone now suffering in a similar manner. He is a man whom it will do you good to know—a strong, calm, beautiful soul, whose influence uplifts and strengthens. His address is 784 Eighth street.

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

Turning from particular cases to a consideration of obsession in general, we find the old proverb equally applicable. Prevention is better than cure.

The general causes of obsession lie in the ignorance of mortals on the one hand and the depravity of obsessing influences on the other. If we would remedy this evil we must address ourselves to these two conditions. With the first of these the Spiritualist alone is able to cope, for he alone understands the perils of the situation. Upon him devolves the duty of enlightening ignorant humanity upon this all-important subject. He it is who must set up the guideposts and wave the danger signals along this uncertain pathway of psychic unfoldment.

For it is not alone the sensitive who is consciously developing his powers, who stands in danger, but the whole of humanity, by reason of slowly unfolding psychic powers, lies open to a greater or less extent, to the influences good and bad from the surrounding spirit spheres. And these dangers will grow greater rather than less with the coming years, unless increasing knowledge keeps pace with increasing racial psychic unfoldment.

The question of the power of unseen forces over the lives of men is not alone a question of saving here and there an individual medium from torment and persecution. It has a far deeper significance than that. Few there be who realize the tremendous power of the thought currents, daily and hourly setting in upon the mortal shore, from the great ocean of spirit life—from that surging sea of low, vile, ignorant and depraved beings who swarm in the earth's atmosphere, and mingle to no small extent in the affairs of men.

THE VICIOUS AND DEPRAVED.

There is no such barrier between the two worlds as has commonly been supposed. We have thought we were well rid of the vicious and the depraved when they have taken themselves to the other life. We have congratulated ourselves upon their departure, and have frequently assisted them over the border by means of the hangman's noose. We have thought to thus shirk our responsibilities, to outwit the natural law which binds all men together in indissoluble bonds, making the good of one the good of all, and the evil of one a source of trouble and sorrow to all the others.

It can never be done. The law of human interrelation and mutual dependence cannot be set aside. We need expect nothing but trouble and sorrow so long as we go on ignoring the fact that humanity, in this world and all others, constitutes but one brotherhood, the happiness and well being of which depends upon the happiness and well-being of every member.

We need expect nothing but meddlesome, vicious influences from the lower spheres of spirit life so long as we go on populating that world with devils from this. The hells in that life cannot be removed until the hells in this are wiped out. If we would remove that pestilential thought atmosphere which wraps the earth as with a curtain of darkness, we must first cut off the source of supply; that is, stop producing in this world and eventually sending into the next, beings whose minds are saturated with evil—with hatred, revenge and lust.

What are the causes of human depravity? What is it which holds so large a proportion of mankind to the animal plane? Why do not all men rise to the intellectual, moral and spiritual heights attained by the few?

POVERTY FRUITFUL MOTHER OF EVIL.

Without doubt, poverty is a fruitful mother of evil. Economic and industrial conditions are largely responsible for the ignorance, degradation, vice and crime in modern society. When we read such books as Riis' "How the Other Half Lives," and London's "People of the Abyss," we do not wonder that there is vice and crime in the world. When we consider the environment into which thousands of children are born every year, and the lives they are forced to live, in the slums, the sweatshops, the mining camps—forced upon the streets at a tender age, or into the factories, to add their puny strength to that of their parents in the terrible struggle for existence, with no home worthy of the name, with the mental and moral nature stunted and dwarfed through lack of proper training, with every influence in their environment for evil and none toward good,—we cease to wonder that there is ignorance and depravity among men, and only wonder that human nature under such conditions can be one-half as good as it is.

When we wish to cultivate grain or fruit or vegetables, or raise domestic animals, we provide the best possible conditions for their growth and development. But human beings are of so little consequence that we leave their development to chance or fate, or the uncertain methods of a suppositional "providence."

It is not worth our while to trouble ourselves about our human brother. He has no value in the market. He will not sell for so much hard cash. There is no money to be made by developing him up to his highest possible standard. If we can make a slave of him, and appropriate the results of his labor to our own use and benefit that is well. But if he becomes in the course of time a broken beast of burden, an ignorant, degraded wretch, a hardened criminal, hating society with the deep, undying hatred of the wronged and the oppressed, what is that to us? We will send him into the next world and so be rid of him.

But are we rid of him? Let the well-informed Spiritualist answer. Says Emerson, "You cannot do wrong without suffering wrong"; and if he had added, and the consequences of that wrong will follow you far into the future life, he would have spoken another great truth.

WICKED BY ENVIRONMENT.

Society is doing incalculable wrong and injustice to its helpless members when it compels millions of them to live their whole lifetime in poverty, ignorance and degradation. And Society is paying the penalty. You read of it every day in the murders, robberies and crimes unmentionable, set forth in the daily papers. Eighty per cent of the criminals in our penitentiaries, it is said, come from the class of the homeless. The class of the homeless! What else could we expect? The outcast, the exiled, the disinherited! The younger criminals of New York, we are told, come almost exclusively from the tenement house districts. Read the description of those districts and you will not doubt the statement. Are these young criminals wicked by nature, or have they been rendered wicked by environment? If the latter, who is responsible?

The worst of it is, these terrible conditions are all so needless. If we had but a little more wisdom, a keener conscience, a stronger sense of justice, a warmer sympathy and deeper love for suffering humanity, we would rise in our might and put an end to these horrors forever. When society takes as much interest in the development of the human child as the farmer does in his field of grain, his fruit trees, or the lambs and calves frolicking in the pasture, when wholesome environment, a decent comfortable home, ample subsistence, and the means of culture, mental, moral and spiritual, is insured to every child born into material life, then and not until then may we expect to see a noble race of men and women upon the earth.

THE GREAT STREAM OF WEALTH.

And this we can do, by simply directing the great stream of wealth which flows with daily increasing volume into the coffers of our money kings, back into the hands of the toilers who have created it, and to whom it rightfully belongs. When we are wise enough to adopt some system of industry which shall insure to every man and woman the full fruits of their labor, involuntary poverty, and all of the evils which flow from it, will cease. For it is not because of the niggardliness of nature, nor the lack of skill in production, that men suffer for the necessaries of life, but because of an unjust system which robs them of the fruits of their toil, which makes masters of the few and slaves of the many.

There is no reason why any child should suffer with cold and hunger, why it should grow up in poverty and ignorance, and squalor and wretchedness, why it should wear its life away in factory or mine or sweatshop, or end its days in the brothel or the penitentiary. Some day we will have the wisdom, the decency and the humanity to end these conditions, and insure to every little human blossom the environment necessary to unfold the possibilities of its higher nature in all their beauty and power. When that day comes, fewer graduates from the prison and the gallows will go to swell the ranks of obsessing demons on the other side of life.

But the humanitarian will not pause here in his efforts toward human betterment and race regeneration. Other evils than those which flow from involuntary poverty stare him in the face. He knows that proper environment will go far toward developing a child's best traits and building him up into the man he ought to be, but that it will not wholly eradicate the evil which was born in him, and which is the result either of heredity or of prenatal influence. Given the best of opportunities, the best mental and moral training which human skill can provide, it can never compensate for the misfortune of being badly born.

THE CHILD AND EDUCATIONAL TRAINING.

After the child arrives upon the mortal plane, we take more or less pains to provide him with educational training, with religious instruction, with professional skill in law and in medicine. These offices are not left to the ignorant and unskilled. Not at all. Body mind and soul are too precious to be tampered with save by those who have prepared themselves for their duties by a course of study and training. The teacher, the minister, the lawyer, the doctor must each furnish evidence of fitness for his work before he is allowed to teach, to prescribe medicine, to give religious instruction or even legal advice. But the parent, he who starts this spiritual being on its long career, who determines its nature, who endows it for time and eternity with all of its traits, tendencies and characteristics, and thus determines whether its life shall be a blessing or a curse to itself or others—of him we require no evidence whatsoever of fitness for the great responsibilities which he takes upon himself. No restrictions are placed upon him. He is free to curse his offspring with every physical ill and infirmity, with every loathsome disease, with every low appetite and passion, with every tendency to crime, with every hideous and hateful thing in the long catalogue of human frailties and error, and we never dream of saying to him, "Hold!" No, we seem, even in this enlightened age, to hold to some barbaric superstition that every thing which bears the human form has a "divine right" to propagate—a right which must not be infringed, no matter what the consequences to the helpless offspring or to society.

Sometime we will get this bandage off our eyes. Sometime we will see the responsibility which we now shirk, the duty which society owes to itself and to the individual. Sometimes we will become wise enough to put restrictions upon the marriage relation, to require all aspirants to the state of matrimony to furnish evidence of fitness for those high duties and responsibilities. The physically infirm, the mentally weak, the morally depraved will not be allowed to perpetuate their kind. When this time comes, fewer demons will be sent from this world to people the other.

Nor is this all. When the new industrial system has been established, and woman has become economically free, she will refuse longer to burden herself and society with children she does not want. The crime of bringing into the world unwelcome and unloved children will cease. Through all the long, dark ages of the past, the helpless, dependent condition of woman has been the means of peopling the earth with moral monsters. There has never been a slavery so abject and so degrading, so fraught with evil consequences to the race, as that endured by woman since the world began. And to-day it is not alone the woman who dwells in poverty who suffers, but the woman of wealth and fashion is a slave as well, and equally responsible with her poorer sister for cursing the earth with undesirable offspring.

THE HUMAN DEVILS.

The human devils who plot mischief in this world, and incite the weak to deeds of darkness from the other side of the grave, are not all from the homes of ignorance and poverty. There is many a blackhearted villain in broadcloth and fine linen, many a moral pervert comes from the homes of respectability, born of parents against whose life and character never a word of reproach has been uttered. Whence, then, this evil nature? Whence came the depravity of a Theodore Durant and an Adolph Weber? For every effect there is somewhere a cause, and if the prenatal history of these moral monstrosities could be written, without doubt the mystery would clear away.

The remedy lies in the absolute economic independence of woman. When woman no longer feels that she must marry in order to secure a home and the means of support, when she is no longer compelled to sell herself, body and soul, for board, clothing and shelter, this evil of enforced maternity will remedy itself. Fewer murderers will

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, thereforeit is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all affections of the eye.

Emily Kupp, 1020 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exultations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Delphos (Kans.) Camp, beginning Aug. 11, and closing on the 27th. I. N. Richardson, president; Lettie Richardson, secretary.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne of Texas, and Mrs. L. J. Jaquet and Mrs. Virginia Bryan of Chicago, are at the Winfield (Kansas) camp.

Dr. J. M. Peebles is receiving constantly calls to lecture—many of which he cannot fill. He is to be at the Chesterfield camp for one week. During September he speaks in Philadelphia, and during October in Baltimore, Md.

W. J. Colville has just given a successful course of lectures in Victoria, B. C., where the Psychic Society is holding regular meetings in K. of P. hall, Douglas street. His lectures were on various up-to-date topics and called forth many questions which the speaker handled in a manner which elicited applause.

J. A. Toren writes: "The meetings of the Society of the Psychic Forces, held at Wilcox Hall, corner of Champlain avenue and Forty-third street, will be continued without intermission during the summer. The attendance is constantly increasing notwithstanding the weather has been more or less unfavorable during the past month. Many rumors have recently been set afloat by some maliciously inclined individuals that our meetings had been discontinued and Mrs. Isa Cleveland, our medium, was ill and in a hospital. We are glad to announce that Mrs. Cleveland has never been in better health than now, and her whole attention is constantly being devoted to her mediumistic work. Dr. J. D. M. Hewitt also continues to lecture for us every Sunday evening and takes an active part in the conference meetings. The Doctor's lectures are highly entertaining and appreciated by all who hear him, and no more able and earnest worker than he appears anywhere in the advocacy of spiritual truths. We extend an earnest invitation to all to come to our meetings. Strangers and skeptics will find at our meetings what they are looking for, viz., food for thought and conviction."

By a series of incidents, which he attributed to nothing less than thought-transference, Edward Crawford, 2036 East Washington street, Indianapolis, Ind., whose bicycle was stolen some time ago, found the wheel last night at the police station and came face to face with the alleged thief at the same time. Crawford reached the station just after Oscar Paff, who had been trying to pawn the wheel for $2, had been brought in by Officers Murphy and O'Connor. The officers together with Chief of Police Kruger, questioned Paff, but he denied stealing the wheel. Just as he was making a stout denial and declaring that his record was straight, Crawford, the owner of the bicycle, walked into the chief's office. "Ah," said Crawford, "I knew it. I saw my wheel out there in the hall and here you are," pointing to Paff. "And this has all come by thought transference," explained Crawford to Chief Kruger. The chief was not up on telepathy and he had to ask Crawford what he meant. "Well," explained Crawford, "when I started home to-night I got to Alabama street and something impelled me to come down here. At the same time, or about the same time, something impelled this man to get arrested. That was thought transference. I have believed in it for years."—Star.

J. L. Foster writes from Elwood, Ind.: I must write and let you know that our beloved missionaries, Brother and Sister Sprague, visited our city last week, and spoke in the Progressive Spiritualists hall two nights, to large and enthusiastic audiences. The last night we could not seat all of them. Brother Sprague held the floor for at least an hour and a half each evening, instead of the fashionable fifteen-minute talk. He does not varnish or sugar-coat; just the plain, unadulterated gospel of truth. Oh, that all in the spiritual ranks were like him! How our hearts rejoiced! We hope for many more returns of the dear ones."

B. R. Mitzer, of Wichita, Kans., writes: "Allow me space in your valuable paper to compliment two of your best and most fearless workers, those who have the good of the cause at heart; those who fearlessly and openly oppose fraudulent phenomena that is being practiced on our people, who override the fierce waves of vile and evil tongues akin only to their authors, by their true, upright lives and teaching. Their names are Mrs. Virginia Bryan, who has been with us nine different times, and the more we see of her the more we love her; the other one is Mrs. L. J. Jaquet, fearless, brave and without an equal."

F. W. Smith, secretary, writes from Rockland, Me.: "I enclose circular of Verona camp-meeting. We have a fine hotel and good accommodations. The cottages are nearly all occupied and the prospect is very encouraging for one of the best seasons we ever had. The camp is easily accessible by water from various towns on the Penobscot river. Several steamers land every day. The location and scenery are delightful. It is a fine place for rest, recreation and good mental and spiritual food."

L. W. Forbes, of North Gage, N. J., who lectures on "The Topics of To-day and the Financial Affairs of Our Country," expects to be in Chicago, Denver and Seattle, from November 1 to 15.

Dr. P. S. George writes from Red Lodge, Mont.: "A good trumpet medium who can get talking in different languages, such as German, Italian, Finn, etc., could do a good business at Red Lodge and surrounding towns. Any such medium coming here will have my support. I will answer any inquiry. There is no finer climate in the United States during the summer season."

J. K. Dillon writes from Greenup, Ill.: "We have been blessed by a visit from Sister Schumacher of Chicago, who is an honest and true medium. She held four seances which gave excellent satisfaction, also gave an excellent lecture followed with tests which were acknowledged. We have two circles in Greenup with a membership of about thirty, which are getting along harmoniously. Some have clairvoyance and clairaudience. While here Mrs. Schumacher formed a healing circle which will meet once a week when needed, or oftener when necessary. We want to say no medium need come here who is not endorsed by the State Association. All who are true and pure, like Mrs. Schumacher, who leaves sunshine and health wherever she goes, are welcome. We need some good lecturer to come here and stay one or two months. The opportunity for good results is excellent. The harvest is ripe and waiting for the harvesters to come."

Mrs. C. Kirchner, secretary, writes: "Owing to the extreme heat on Sunday evening, July 15, the attendance was about one-half as usual at the services of the Rising Sun Mission, held at the president's home. What we lacked in numbers we made up in interest, as our speaker, Sister Price, who by the way, took the place of Sister Schumacher who was to speak, was called away from the city and could not attend. Dr. Rowell offered a grand invocation, after which Sister Price fairly reveled in the beauties of our glorious belief and opened the eyes of quite a few strangers as to the real philosophy of our beautiful religion. Sister Kirchner held the audience spellbound by her grand spirit messages, describing spirits accurately and to the satisfaction of all who received communications. Our choir rendered some fine selections which was enjoyed by all present. Our speaker for Sunday, July 29, will be Mrs. Schumacher, pastor of the Church of the Students of Nature. We cordially invite strangers and others to attend our meetings which are held every Sunday evening at President Kirchner's home, No. 22 Jackson Place, between Jackson Boul. and Van Buren street, west of Hoyne avenue. The interest taken in the Saturday night socials of the Rising Sun Mission seems unabated as was noted at the one held at President Kirchner's home, Saturday, July 14. Solos and recitations were indulged in, as well as were games. Sister Montgomery carried off a handsome prize in the bean carrying contest. Tests and short talks were given by Sister Kirchner and Brother Thompson, after which ice cream and cake were served to refresh the inner man. After a few more solos and recitations the large gathering left for their respectiv homes, each claiming to have had a very enjoyable time, which is always the case at all of the Rising Sun events.

Emanuel M. Jones writes: "The First Spiritual Union of San Jose, Cal., gave a reception to Mrs. Nettie P. Fox, Rev. and Mrs. Allen Franklin Brown, on the evening of July 13, at the home of Mrs. Cora D. Ringlep, 230 N. C street. It was a very enjoyable affair and lasted till near the midnight hour. There were upwards of fifty persons present, who came from different parts of the city to greet the hostess and her guests. The hallway, parlors and rooms were tastefully decorated with ferns and flowers, the sunflower (the Spiritualist emblem) being the prominent one. The programme was excellent. Mrs. Fox exhibited a picture of her friend taken years ago, that had a wreath of fern leaves around her head, which she said had appeared there within the last few days—simply wonderful! A piano solo by Mrs. Benjamin and a few timely remarks by Rev. Brown and Mr. Murray, closed the exercises for the evening. The entire company were treated to ice cream and cake, in which all took a decided interest. At last the time came for the hand shakes and the good-byes were said and each one went to their respective homes; but in memory's niche there will always be room for the charming hostess and her grand and noble mother, Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker."

Henry Ellis is now located at No. 3250 Wabash avenue, and with the aid of his telegraphic instrument, operated by unseen spirit forces, he will be glad to meet all those seeking light from the spirit realms. He holds circles Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday evenings.

BISHOP A. BEALS WRITES FROM SUMMERLAND, CAL.: "LET ME SAY ONE WORD IN COMMENDATION OF THE LECTURE ON 'THE PRESENT ECONOMIC CONDITIONS,' BY MRS. RICHMOND IN A LATE ISSUE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER: IT IS THE BEST THING EVER PUT IN PRINT, AND YOUR PAPER LEADS ALL THE REST."

Moses Hull writes: "Very early in the spring I received an invitation to spend some time at the Ashley Ohio camp, but at that time I thought it impossible, and so wrote them, but I have since learned that I can spend August 6 at that camp, and have decided to do so. I would like to meet as many of my old friends in that part of Ohio at that camp, as can get there at that time. From Ashley, Ohio, I go directly to the Clinton (Iowa) camp for about three days. I have Saturday and Sunday, August 12 and 13 with no appointments. I would like to put them in anywhere in Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin or Minnesota. August 16 to 28, I spend at the Wonewoc, Wis., camp. I have no definite appointments after Sept. 10. As our school can spare me better than it can spare my earnings, it is strongly urged by our executive board that I may make a trip to the Pacific coast in the later autumn months. If I do, and the right ones can be found to take our places in the school, Mrs. Hull will accompany me."

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull is at Lake Brady. She will go from there to the Clinton camp and then to Wonewoc camp.

W. Brunton writes from Boston, Mass.: "'John McCullough as Man, Actor and Spirit,' is a book I have read with considerable interest and delight. It is written by an enterprising friend, Susie C. Clark, and has received many commendations, but each one is to speak according to the impression made, and so I add my word of happy appreciation. It is a new form of biography, though Miss Lilian Whiting did a similar thing for her friend, Kate Field, and did it in the perfect charmful manner that characterizes all her work. All the same this is most excellent and the story of his after life, when the work of time was laid down, is helpful and instructive. We must always care for the good of man and that is why the world above is so near to our world and blessing it. It ought to have a wide reading by Spiritualists and by those who are in wonder what they are to do when the day's work seems ended."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The shadow social and dance to be held at Hyde Park Occult Society Hall, 319 East 55th street, has been changed to Wednesday evening, July 26, instead of Thursday. A short and interesting programme has been prepared and refreshments will be served early so as to give ample time for those who wish to dance. Come and have a good time. On July 30 the next picnic will be held at Beverly Hills, and we ask all who wish, to come and bring their lunch and enjoy an outing in the beautiful grove at the Hills. On last Sunday evening we enjoyed a rich treat by having Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams and Mrs. Lichtig present to give messages. All were recognized."

D. G. Hill writes: "The attendance at the service of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society Sunday evening, July 16, was very satisfactory and the speaker, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, delivered an impressive and instructive lecture, followed with messages by Mrs. Kittie Gifford and others, making an enjoyable meeting notwithstanding the intense warm weather. The speaker for July 30, will be the earnest and entertaining Mrs. J. L. Fravel of Austin, Ill. O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue. Open door. All welcome."

Correspondent writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "A lawn party was given last week at the residence of President C. L. Sain, 3347 Michigan avenue., for the benefit of the First Spiritual Church, now holding Sunday evening meetings at Warwick Hall, 8th and Magee streets. There was a musicale in the parlors, and tests by Mrs. Wagner of Topeka, and Mrs. Connelly, speaker at the hall. Dr. Holsclaw performed a miracle on the lawn by pulling the leg of one of the guests who was afflicted with a short limb. The Doctor proved by measurement with a string that the limb had been lengthened one inch. It was not learned after ice cream and peaches had been served whether the cooling effects caused the limb to contract or not. Mrs. Cross, trumpet medium, and Mrs. McDonald were among the medium guests. The venerable E. J. Schellhous distributed literature and talked glowingly about his forthcoming book, 'The Elements of Ethics.' On Sunday evening there was a large attendance at Warwick Hall to hear Mrs. Connelley and receive pellet tests from Mrs. Inez Wagner of Topeka, Kans. Sain started in to take subscriptions to put the society on a good financial footing for the coming year."

Secretary writes from Akron, N. Y.: "Meetings at the First Spiritual Church of Akron, N. Y., will cease during the summer months, and will be resumed again the 6th of September, to enable the pastor, Mrs. Atcheson, of Buffalo, N. Y., to enjoy a well deserved vacation. Of course we shall miss her. She has been with us nearly two years, and through her earnestness and devotion to the cause she so ably represents, she has endeared herself to each member of our society. She is honest and conscientious in her work. I wish there were more like her. Our love and best wishes go with her as she enters upon her much-needed vacation."

Rev. Alice Baker writes from Oakland, Cal.: "To my many friends I wish to say that I am physically weak yet, but very much improved, and I feel assured that by the help of the healing thoughts that are sent out to me by many and the dear arisen ones, I shall soon be quite myself again. I stop in Colorado and Kansas, getting back to Dallas, Texas in September in time for our state association there. From now on, all communications addressed to me at Dallas, Texas, General Delivery, will reach me."

C. H. Mathews writes: "On Sunday, July 9, 1905, the first Spiritualist congregation ever held in Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on Panhandle railroad, was addressed by Bro. E. W. Sprague and wife at 2 p. m. A good audience assembled. This spot is only a few miles north of where the first Christian preaching was done in this county by the Christian missionaries Heckewelder and Zeizburger, in 1782, and where the Christian military, under Col. Williamson, U. S. A., murdered 92 Indians and burned their town. It is to be hoped that further meetings will be held in this historic field, and that the great demonstrated truths in regard to a future life beyond the grave may be made familiar to all. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

THE FOLLOWING PROGRAM constitutes the summer work of Mrs. Cora V. Richmond: Leaving their home in Rogers Park, July 2, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will be at Corry, Pa., July 3 to 14; Cuba, N. Y., July 14 to 21; Lily Dale, N. Y., 21 to 28; Lake Brady, Ohio, July 30, and Mantua, Ohio, Aug. 1 to 6, inclusive; Onset, Mass., Aug. 7 to 14; Unity Camp (near Lynn, Mass.) Aug. 20 to 27; New York City and the Catskills, Sept. 1 to (about) Sept. 15. Services will commence at the Church of the Soul, in Chicago, Sunday, September 17, 1905.

HELEN STUART RICHINGS, who has been in the far Northwest for several years, is returning to the lecture platform, and desires to correspond with societies wishing the services of an inspirational lecturer, psychometrist and dramatic artist. Terms most reasonable, especially for long engagements. Address P. O. Box 115, Seattle, Wash.

A. D. Jacoby of Elkhart, Ind., writes: "Frank McKinley of Toledo, Ohio, was in our city July 19, and gave one good and appreciated seance to fifteen people who were pleased with the results, all recognizing those who came. He gave a few private sittings that were wonderful beyond description. He left here on the 20th for Cleveland, Ohio. He is an honest and sincere man in his work for the good of Spiritualism."

DOING EXCELLENT WORK.

The Lyceum at the Chesterfield Camp, Under the Efficient Management of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, Is Proving a Great Success.

To the Editor:—The lyceum at Chesterfield is a tremendous success; though less than one week old it has 42 children enrolled, besides many adults. The auditorium is filled with spectators who are much interested in the work. Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, who has entire charge of the lyceum, is original in her methods, bringing out the power of each child as an individual. Many people are bringing their children to put them under her care, who are not Spiritualists. This is a work that has been sadly neglected, and Mrs. Gillespie is one of the few who does not feel it wise to pass the little ones by in the great work. If Chesterfield camp does no more than just its lyceum work for the world, it is making a splendid record for itself in this. The whole camp, however, is in prosperous condition, and the meeting thus far has been unusually pleasant. COR.

DR. EZRA A. SMITH.

Prominent Citizen of Brandon, Vt., and Former Member of the Legislature, Dies After Long Illness.

Dr. Ezra A. Smith, a prominent citizen of Brandon, Vt., passed to spirit life July 17, at his home on Carver street, after a long illness from a complication of diseases. He was 66 years old and formerly had an extended practice. He was one of the largest property owners of this town, having 25 tenement houses and nine farms in Rutland and other counties.

He represented this place in the legislature in 1898 and 1899. He was a Knight Templar and a member of Brandon lodge of Odd Fellows.

For many years Dr. Smith was president and secretary of the Queen City Park Spiritualists Association.

A BRIGHT SPOT IN MEMORY.

A Kansas Lady's Experience at Lily Dale Camp.

I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for the past ten years, and have enjoyed reading letters from different people telling of messages and greetings from the spirit side of life, and have made up my mind to send you an account of a few days spent at Lily Dale, N. Y., which will always be a bright spot in my memory. It was sometime in the month of August (I do not remember the exact date) in 1903, that a friend invited me to go to Lily Dale with her. We were there four days, and I attended all the lectures and the grove meetings, which I enjoyed very much and got a splendid psychometric reading by Mrs. Dee of Buffalo, N. Y. I decided to go to a materializing seance given by Mrs. Effie Moss. There were 22 persons in the seance-room, but no one I had ever met before, or that knew anything about me. When ready to begin, the medium stepped to the door of the cabinet and said she could not promise anyone anything; that she had been working in this way for twenty years, but had never been able to promise anyone that they would get a message or a materialization, but that she hoped no one would go away disappointed.

I went into the cabinet, which was about the size of a room under a staircase, three by six feet; just wide enough so that when the medium sat in her chair there was not room for anyone to pass by her, and just a short space in front of her chair. There was no carpet on the floor, it was perfectly bare, the wall was covered with a black curtain which I lifted up and felt of the wall all around. There was no trap-door or wires fastened to the wall or ceiling. I went and took my seat and waited for what would come. The medium was seated in the cabinet and forms of those who had passed into the spirit world came out and talked to their loved ones. Some could only talk in whispers, while others talked in audible voices, and some only came to the door of the cabinet and walked across the room to their friends, who recognized them, and it was truly a joyful time, and as parents clasped their children in fond embrace, and children came to meet their parents who had gone before, they shed tears of joy. An old Oriental priest came and gave a fine address. He was dressed in his Oriental costume and stood by the side of the medium, whose control he was, and talked in a clear voice about the duties of this life and of the hereafter.

Lucille Weston, the great singer, came three times and talked to a few friends she had known in this life, and sang in a sweet voice.

My daughter who died when not quite three years of age, came to me and I took her in my arms and kissed her. She had been in the spirit world for about eighteen years and appeared to be about the size of a 12-year-old girl, but it was her, and she talked to me of the family at home and sent them loving messages.

One little Egyptian girl came and it was the most beautiful sight I ever beheld. She wore a crown that appeared to flash like diamonds, the lights just came and went. She walked around and sat on different persons' laps, and laughed and talked with them, and then before she went away she stepped into the middle of the floor and danced so gracefully, and just grew smaller and dimmer until she disappeared before our eyes. COMMUNION OF SAINTS.

A Spiritualistic Interpretation in a Sermon.

The Bishop of Birmingham (Dr. Gore), says the Birmingham (Eng.) Gazette and Express of the 26th ult., preached a remarkable sermon last night at St. James,' Edgbaston. The subject was "The Communion of Saints," and Dr. Gore's interpretation would probably have caused a sensation in some Protestant circles. That sense of the communion of saints, said the Bishop, had had in the past many strange explanations, and had been liable to great abuses. Against those abuses there had been re-actions, and so it came about at the time of the Reformation that men who belonged to the Reformed Church began to think too little about the communion of saints, and they had lost out of the Christian life something that was most practical.

Let them look at it in the Japanese, among whom Shintoism, in spite of the fact that people said it had vanished, had at the first shock of peril sprung into life, and caused the decline of Buddhism. Strange and crude ancestor-worship, they might say, but the manner in which the nation had been welded together was magnificent and inspiring. When they saw the splendid merging of the individual in the larger work and life of the nation, did not the Japanese put them as Christians to shame? The Japanese solidarity had come from the sense of the union beyond death. Their splendid solidarity came from the sense that the dead were not dead, but were alive and working in the lives of those still here.

Dealing with the Christian view of the future state, Dr. Gore proceeded that after death there was a time of waiting of which they knew little, but they knew that the souls of the dead were secure in the protection of God, and were assisted in being perfected, in consolation, and, perhaps, in discipline and the elements of pain it might have they knew nothing. The first Christians felt themselves entirely at liberty to pray for them, as, indeed, they could not really pray, "Thy kingdom come," without praying for the perfecting of humanity. "We must not use prayers," continued Dr. Gore, "without authority in public services, but we need not lose them out of our private prayers. Many of the best and wisest clergymen like Dr. Johnson and Lord Shaftesbury, and a great body of witnesses, have in their private prayers thought it no shame or hindrance to their praying to add in their prayers a petition for the perfecting of the souls of the dead."

"I would say only this," the preacher added, "we know little, but what we know is real. We know that there awaits us beyond death a perfect fellowship in which all that is best among humanity, all that is redeemable is to be perfected in one perfect fellowship, and it ought to mean a great deal more than it does. We ought not merely to have what we all have, the sense of fellowship with those we have loved and lost, but also a larger sense of real and personal fellowship with all the great heroes of the past, with all great men who have lived and died. We ought to remember that our lives are not isolated and cut off from them."

They were compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses who were nearer than they thought, and the sense of that fellowship with the blessed dead should make them nerve themselves to make the best of themselves, so that they might be welcomed at last into the communion of saints.

POLITICAL BUMMERS.

Political Bosses the Stumbling Block to Full Suffrage for Women.

The entire status of women has changed within the past generation. Where once they were ignorant they are now educated; they have followed their domestic work outside the home, where it has been largely taken, and have now become recognized industrial factors; once legally unable to own property they now pay annually billions of dollars in taxes; once isolated and wolly without knowledge of or interested in public affairs, they are now banded in great organizations and actively engaged in civic work. Their relation to the government has been transferred, and however potent may have been the reasons for excluding them from the voting body of a generation ago, these now are without weight and indeed without existence.

The masses of men, especially in the states west of the Mississippi River, where the foreign element does not overshadow, recognize these modern conditions and admit the justice of giving this new race of women a voice in the government. In any or all of these states a majority of the men would vote in favor of granting the franchise to women if they were free from the domination of the party leaders who "run the machine." But these controlling powers work upon the passions and fears of certain classes, making them believe that their own personal rights would be curtailed if women could vote, and so they exercise their veto power. Eliminate from any campaign for woman suffrage the political "bosses," with all that name implies, and the voters themselves could be depended upon for a favorable majority—a square deal. How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

Parkland Heights, Camp, Pa.

Fair and beautiful dawned Sunday, July 16, with its cool refreshing breeze, making an ideal day to hold grove meetings. Visitors were present from Philadelphia, Trenton, Royersford, and the surrounding country, and many were the expressions of approval and delight at the improvements recently made on the camp grounds. President Adams conducted the meetings, which were held at the auditorium.

Mrs. H. M. Shope presided at the organ, accompanied by H. M. Shope.

At 10:30 morning services opened with congregational singing followed with an original poem entitled "Affirmation," by Miss Elizabeth M. Fish. After more singing, a few telling remarks were made by Thomas M. Locke, then came a short address by Mrs. F. E. Luce, which was to the point, and very good. This was followed by a beautiful duet by Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Shope.

Mrs. Augusta Volk prefaced her readings from articles by a little heart to heart talk, beginning by saying, Parkland was to her the most beautiful place in the world, for it was here her eyes were first opened to the spiritual light.

Mrs. Mary E. Weber gave several spirit messages, which were mostly recognized.

Mrs. Luce gave psychometric readings in a very convincing manner.

Afternoon services opened at 2:30, after which President Adams announced that one-half hour would be given to a conference meeting, the subject of which would be, "Spirit Healing," giving some of his views, and inviting all who felt so inclined, to join in this interchange of views, as this special time belonged to them. Thomas M. Locke, Mrs. F. E. Luce and Mrs. Buckwalter contributed a few thoughts on the subject.

Thomas Rogers asked that some one speak on "The Morning Dawns on Humanity in the Sense of Universal and Spiritual Freedom." This was answered by the president, who said, when that glad time was fully realized, every one would be their own medium, be in direct intercourse with the spirit world, and all that implies. We must first understand our at-one-ment with the universal principle—God—then through growth—right living—win our freedom.

These conference meetings promise to be very interesting and instructive.

After singing, the regular meeting opened with an invocation by Mrs. F. E. Luce. She gave a short address, taking for her subject "Prayer," and dwelt on the value of meditation as an aid to right living, saying we should ask ourselves this question every day: "Am I living as I ought to live?"

Mrs. Augusta Volk gave a pleasing little talk, well sprinkled with choice poetic phrases, finishing the time allotted to her, with readings from sealed ballots.

Mrs. Mary E. Weber gave spirit messages; then Mrs. F. E. Luce announced that she would read the remaining ballots. This she did in a very convincing manner. William A. Grosseck answered mental questions, and with a benediction, by Mrs. Luce, the day's services closed.

Samuel Wheeler was unable to be with us as expected, but all expressed themselves well pleased with the local talent, who so freely gave of their store, without price.

The meetings were very harmonious, hence conducive to high spiritual thought, and we were delighted to have strangers tell us how they had enjoyed such a peaceful, restful day. And in the evening, as many of the members gathered in the new dining room to discuss camp affairs in general (also the remainder of the ice cream, which was fine) they gave expression to such optimistic thoughts that your scribe felt impelled to give voice to one of her compositions, "I'm An Optimist."

In the light and glory of the full moon we left the camp ground, feeling that Parkland, beautiful Parkland, has a bright and glorious future, and a holy benediction rested upon us, filling our soul with peace.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

My wife, Rebecca Moore Rutledge, passed peacefully to spirit life on the morning of June 30 last, after a long illness. She was born in Ohio, was nearly 75 years old. She was a Spiritualist for over forty yeads, and a good clairvoyant, and inspirational speaker, and has done much for the cause of Spiritualism. She has many friends and relatives in Ohio, and Indiana who may see this notice.

SAMUEL RUTLEDGE.
Union, Oregon.

Three have passed to the higher life in less than thirteen months: Brother Joe and mother, then Brother James Reedes of Columbus, Ohio, after an illness of two days, also passed away, July 2. He leaves a wife and two daughters, Mrs. Kircher of Louisville, and Mrs. McKee of Columbus; two brothers, Theodore and John of Columbus; twin sisters, Mrs. Mann and Mrs. Brown of Louisville. How sweet to know there is no death.

MRS. MARY MANN.
Louisville, Ky.

Passed to the higher spiritual life, July 9, 1905, Mrs. Lucinda Avery, from the beautiful country home of her son-in-law, Hiram Potter of Newbury, Ohio. This loved and loving mother was born in Otsego county, New York, Dec. 29, 1810. In early life she joined the Methodist church, that then being her idea of the highest moral life for her to live and rear her family, but her progressive mind was not satisfied with a religion of faith alone, and when she heard the story of the tiny raps at Hydesville she began its investigation, and soon espoused the beautiful knowledge and truths of Modern Spiritualism which gave her solace and comfort through all her earthly trials and sorrows. Mother Avery's mind was as clear and active as in youth, keeping up with the trend of modern progression and only a short time before her passing on directing her affairs. Having heard Brother I. W. Pope at the funeral of a little grandson some ten or eleven years ago, she requested that he speak at her funeral, which he did. The large attendance of friends and neighbors denoted the love and high esteem in which Mother Avery was held. The sweet music of a quartette from Burton, and the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism mingling with the perfume of the floral offerings from friends and neighbors, made the services very impressive.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 46th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 16 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 24th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Cleaves, 158 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

Important Message From the Spirit Side of Life.

Spirit Henry C. Wright, through the Mediumship of Eva A. Cassell, Gives a Comprehensive Analysis of the Evil and the Good, in an Especially Interesting and Instructive message which throws a Flood of Light on these two Antagonistic Elements. His Views on Prenatal Influences are Very Valuable.

Every disembodied spirit can trace his peculiarities back to the parents who bore him, and every mother can trace her child's mental and physical characteristics back to the process of gestation.

The drama of conception and gestation is wonderful; it means that a spark of the Infinite—an immortal spirit, has taken on matter for the purpose of beginning an earthly pilgrimage. There are thousands of mortals who are ignorant of the wonderful drama enacted on the advent of an immortal soul on earth; they are indifferent to that drama; earth's scientists scour the country for miles to discover a different kind of an insect—and learn the number of its legs and wings; earth's people zealously strive for knowledge concerning the pedigree of the beasts of burden—but of the primal state of an immortal soul and its advent on earth, they are wantonly ignorant.

The Spirit in Its Primal State.

The spirit, in its primal state before coming to earth was a part of the divine source, pure; it was the principle of good. Born into earthly conditions, evil might come later, since error and evil are mortal states. Swept through the doorway to earth through the law of conception, the spirit begins to struggle for a hold on the earthly tenement. Day by day, week by week, month by month it begins to infiltrate itself along the veins and arteries of the growing body in the endeavor to "come into its own," until at the end of two hundred and eighty days, or nine months, it has full control of its instrument, or body; then it makes its advent on earth, an embodied spirit.

The first few years of its existence is passed in perfecting its hold on the body and in gaining strength to carry it along life's pathway, but by and by it is sufficiently mature to enter on its destiny; it is then swept into the mortal avenues its prenatal causes have determined and attracted it to. If the life principle making the child, united with that of the mother, is evolved from the body of a man whose brain and nerves are exhilarated with liquor or dulled with drugs and nicotine, then the destiny of this spirit has been predetermined, and it must gravitate to the level of the sot and the drug fiend, and be accursed during its earthly pilgrimage.

Drunkards are born and not made; it would be impossible to make a drunkard of a man unless he had the vibrations of liquor organized into him; he might be placed where rivers of whisky flowed before him, yet he would not touch it.

Suggested Suicide.

If a mother bears an unwelcome child—if maternity has been thrust upon her without her desire and consent; if she broods over the matter and despondency gives voice to, "I wish I was dead—I have a mind to kill myself and get rid of this forced maternity forever"—she has suggested suicide to the growing embryo and it is born under the psychology of a suicidal mania. It is the cause of the many suicides in earth life—the mother is the obsessing spirit—not an evil spirit in the spiritual sphere.

If a prospective mother takes drugs, if she resorts to malpractice in order to kill the embryo and does not succeed—if she impresses upon it the psychology of murder, her son will be drawn into the vibration of the life-destroyer and commit murder. Or if the father is under the psychology of hatred toward his neighbor and wishes him harm; if he contributes to parenthood a fertile germ which vibrates with his vicious attributes, he is an obsessing spirit and has stamped his offspring with the venom of the life-taker.

Murderers are born, and not made, primarily, by evil spirits on the borders of earth.

Alcohol, Drugs and Nicotine.

No mother can bear a son of light, no mother can perpetuate the living God in her child, when its father bestows a heritage of alcohol, drugs and nicotine; and no offspring reeking with these vices can be a credit to the community in which he is born; children conceived in these vibrations must gravitate to the levels where they belong. Woman cannot elevate the race unaided and alone—her superhuman efforts of the past prove this; she must have the assistance which a healthy and a decent fatherhood can bestow. She must have the co-operation of a self-respecting and responsible father who will shoulder his share in framing the moral qualities to be possessed by the child; a father who will be worthy to take upon himself the sacred office of paternity.

The Effects of Unworthy Parentage.

Oh, the earth is filled with the effects of unworthy parentage; all its infamy springs from this one source—from sending into existence human beings so ill organized that they fall at the first temptation; human creatures who drag along through life a bane to themselves and to others as long as they live, and after, for the evil spirits of whom you speak and the system of obsession of which you would learn, has its source in the very thing I have stated, namely, abuse of the creative functions and ignorance of the laws of gestation; for if you father and mother "demons," you can only expect to reap retribution for your folly. No mortal who is morally and rightfully born, who is properly gestated can degenerate into a "demon or evil spirit," for he is above temptation and he might be placed in a den of thieves, drunkards and murderers, yet, true to the nobler instincts a careful parentage had bestowed, he would come out unscathed. You can not make a criminal of a man who is rightfully organized.

As I come into the mortal environment to-day and touch spheres with the minds of earth, I feel the thought of those who hunger for knowledge; their needs press heavily upon me and I am moved to point out some causes of the evils existing in the mortal. I am swept momentarily into the vibrations of those who are kin to the inebriate and who ask for succor; perhaps I may be forgiven if I diverge from the immediate subject and point out how the condition of the drunkard may be bettered. The burden of intemperance lies heavy on earth's people and they are sending forth prayers for its amelioration.

It is supreme folly in men to-day to imagine that they can fill their systems with nicotine, alcohol, and other debasing stimulants, without permeating every element in their bodies with the effluvia. The finest and most sensitive nerves of the organism are in the generative system and they are the first to succumb to the demoralizing effect of all stimulants, and posterity is the sufferer.

Not only that, such stimulants act on the brain of the embryo and render the future human being vulnerable to a mild insanity which might invite obsessed spirits; a general inflammation on the cerebrum, the organ of intelligence ensues; the will is then under the domination of the cerebellum, or lower faculties and there is disorder in the realm of reason; lunatics, semi-lunatics, and imbeciles are the result.

Obsessing a Child With Mental Gloom.

How can there be aught but "evil" spirits when a father brings to paternity the dregs of all that is lowest and vilest in human nature; how can he do aught but obsess his child with depraved instincts? How can a mother, the wife of a drinking man, or a gambler, or a horse jockey; how can such a mother, weeping in secret, suffering poignant anguish of mind during gestation—the embryo the magnet which is attracting her mental worries and which receives the indelible impress of them; how can she do aught but obsess her child with the mental gloom and despondency which makes of him a man who shuns his fellows, his mental faculties blighted, unable to rise in the world to the exalted heights of unfoldment? How can parents who commit these crimes against spirit expect aught but evil to result from their course? If they contribute to gestation the ignoble elements which beget evil, they must expect imps and not angels to be the result.

How many men and women are there who prepare for the sacred office of parenthood? Do they not, on the contrary, bring to the creative function the very worst of obsessing conditions? Do they not, on the very threshold of the creative realm, begin their system of obsession by hoping that no children will be born? * * * * * And if they do not succeed, is not the embryo obsessed with the black and infernal suggestion that he came into life against their will, unwanted? What is the result? A human being who primarily possessed the requisites which go to form a noble entity, and who might have arisen to a high mental attitude and have been a credit to his fellows, is crushed and obsessed by the black suggestion of his parents and, under this ban, he is henceforth a wanderer on earth, with no place to lay his head; he cannot stay long in one spot, he feels that nobody wants him and that he is an intruder everywhere. To such as these, good friends, belong the army of tramps who travel, desolate, from city to town, obsessed by the action of their mother's mind when in embryo. To such as these belong the boys and girls who run away from home—repudiated prenatally by their parents.

Planted the Roots of their Passions.

Where are the roots of the animal passions? In answer to those of earth who ask this question, I must say that the fathers who impress their abnormal cravings for liquor, for murder or any other depravity on offspring, have planted the roots of their passions in the spirit bodies of their children and have obsessed and driven them to the mortal hells where they must suffer an existence of misery. Every atom of the body of a man who drinks liquor, smokes tobacco inordinately, or worse, chews it, or uses drugs, has a taint of these things and the masculine ego is permeated with them; these are the animal passions which have their roots in the spirit. Their virus is bestowed by their father and the action of the spirit in embryo, contributes toward implanting the roots of the animal passions there; that is why disembodied spirits are afflicted with their earthly appetites. The more they have catered to these appetites on the mortal side, the harder it will be to rise above them on the spiritual side. If this fact and spiritual science were taught in the schools and colleges of earth, the immortal spirit would be better prepared to wend its way God-ward, upon earthly dissolution.

The Spirit Primarily Pure.

How, do you ask, do the roots of the animal appetites become embedded in a spirit which was primarily pure? Through the thought of a depraved father as projected on the mother, and through the thought of an unworthy mother being woven into the spirit and body of the babe she is gestating; for thought is soul, mind dominates spirit, and a mother who gives way to gross gratifications is planting the roots of animal appetites in the spirit body of her child. She is obsessing him with spite, malice, revenge, hatred and murder, as the case may be; as Brother Pierpont has stated, given him a heritage of deepest woe; on dissolution he will be obsessed by these ignoble qualities and unable to rise above them; in extreme cases of depravity these obsessed spirits will seek the aura of degraded mortals and endeavor to continue their lives of ignominy.

Those disembodied spirits who were the victims of earthly drugs and opiates are still obsessed with their attributes on dissolution and remain for a long time in shadow in a comatose state; there is little to be feared from them.

One great cause of the obsession of the spirit of man lies in the fact that mothers are forced into maternity without their consent and against their earnest protest. Hardly do they recover from one maternity before another is thrust upon them before their nervous system is able to properly feed another embryo; the result is, children are born with defective nervous organizations which require an artificial stimulant; they are obsessed with cravings for drugs, alcohol, etc., and become nicotine fiends and what is termed, "habitual drinkers," as well as periodical. Such mortals are not responsible—they are sick! Drunkenness is a disease, a chronic disease. The earth is habited with pitiful mothers whose lives are filled with poignant anguish over the youthful drunkard within their homes. Their prayers ascend continually to the supernal realms, and angels weep over them while drawing nearer and nearer to their succor. We are coming just as fast as we can find those adapted to the open door.
